Br. Bassett: I would say through your valuable Recorder to our worthy President (Brother Brown,) and the friends of religion that we are still living, though we are surrounded with many things to discourage us; we have held our first quarterly meeting and two protracted meetings. At our quarterly meeting the church seemed to be much revived. The second meeting was held at the Johnson appointment. There we were compelled to close on Sunday night; here there was a fair prospect but circumstances forbid continuing any longer. The third was held on Stony Creek; here we had hard fighting; the enemy took a dead set against us but we put our trust in the Lord for strength and we made some progress. The Lord powerfully blest the members of the church and two persons received the pardon of their sins. Here we received four members, two on probation, and two from the Methodist Episcopal Church On Monday just as our love-feast closed a member of the *. *. Church came, and in the spirit not of a Christian, commanded our meeting to be closed, and abused us not a little. But our brethren and sisters had just been feasting on good things from above, and they lost the spirit of resentment. We beg an interest in your prayers that we may be successful in winning souls to Christ. If Br. Brown can defer his visit to this circuit till the first of August, we will accommodate him with a camp-meeting. Please inform us through the Recorder. Yours in the bonds of a peaceful Gospel.

D. D. HUGHES.

Johnstown Station, Dec. 8, 1847.

Br. Bassett: With your permission I will report thro' the Recorder the spiritual condition of this station. I reached this place on the 6th of Sept., and was affectionately greeted by the brethren. I am pleased with my charge and am anxious to be found useful to those for whom I am called to labor. We have had our first quarterly meeting. It was a pleasant meeting to the members, but there were no conversions or accessions. Our congregations are increasing and our meetings are becoming quite interesting, especially our prayer and class meetings. We have no house of worship in this town at present, but there is money subscribed, sufficient I think to build one, and I think that before next Conference, there will be a Meth. Protestant Church completed in Johnstown. The members of our church here are very affectionate and kind, so that a preacher need not fear to come among them, for they will hold up his hands—they will render unto him his due. We are expecting a revival of religion here. We have had omens of good already. O, that we may witness more manifestly the power of God in the awakening of sinners and in the establishment of his children in the faith. Brethren, pray for us.

V. LUCAS.

OHIO DISTRICT.

Springfield Circuit Dec. 13, 1847.

Brother Bassett: I will just say in behalf of Springfield circuit, we are still living in hope.—Our first quarterly meeting was appointed at Concord meeting-house to meet the President's visit. At this meeting we were met by Brother Roan of the Maryland Conference, who labored with us until the close of the meeting. We had a refreshing time. Three united with us on probation. Brothers Young and Roan labored faithfully and efficiently. Pray for us.

Yours in hope, REUBEN ROSE.

WESTERN RECORDER.

PUTNAM, OHIO, THURSDAY, DEC. 23, 1847.

A. H. BASSETT, Editor and Proprietor.

JOHN MCD. KENDALL,—PRINTER.

☞How Many New Subscribers Will Be Furnished Us By Our Agents, To Commence With The Year 1848? ☜

Annual Register.—We still send a copy of this publication to every subscriber for the Recorder who pays $2 in advance, or within three months from the beginning of the volume.—Should any omissions occur, we shall be glad to be notified of it.

We regret that several packages ordered by brethren of the Muskingum District are not yet sent for want of opportunity. We trust they will call or send for them if possible.

Those who choose to order parcels by mail, shall receive more than the compliment of copies, to endemnify them in part for the expense of postage. The price is 50 cents per dozen; but we send 15 copies by mail for that sum; and 30 copies instead of 24 for one dollar, &c. We have still a few hundreds on hand, but it is likely they will not last long. Br. Craig of Pittsburgh has 50 copies which he will furnish to any brother who may wish them.

Weather.—For several days past the earth has been overspread with a fine covering of snow, and the opportunity for good sleighing has been well improved by those who have time to spare.

Methodist Protestant.—We do some little violence to our modesty in copying the subjoined note from our excellent church paper. Indeed it is by no means the first friendly notice we have been favored to receive from Br. Reese, its Editor:

"The Western Recorder."—We always open the pages of Br. Bassett's paper with pleasure. It is conducted in the right spirit. It ought to have a more extensive circulation in the West than it has. So aught our own sheet. Every Methodist Protestant family should take both of them. Should any of our brethren in Baltimore desire to take the paper of Brother Bassett, they can send their names to our office."

Grateful for the kind offer of our Brother to extend the circulation of our paper in Baltimore, we would state that we have been for ten or fifteen years an agent for the Methodist Protestant, and before we came to our present position we used to think we were somewhat efficient as an agent. Our opportunities are now limited as we do not travel much, during the year. But it is our pleasure to do what we can for the Methodist Protestant. We agree with our Brother, that our friends in the west should take both papers.—Those who see proper to send us their names as subscribers for the Methodist Protestant, or to send us their dues for that paper, shall have the matter promptly attended to. The Protestant is one of the best of religious family newspapers.

The M. P. for Dec. 11th, failed to reach us, though we have received that for the 18th. The publisher will oblige us by having it sent.

Inundations.—We stated last week that the Muskingum river at this point had risen to a greater height than at any period since 1832. It subsequently rose to a still greater height. Messrs. Buckingham & Sturges whose store house is situated at the water's edge, inform us that the Muskingum came within 12 inches of the highwater mark of 1832. Yet we are "high and dry,' none of our citizens that we are aware, suffering any damage by the rise. Not so in our neighboring town of Zanesville. Notwithstanding the great exertions made in strengthening the levee, the waters broke over on Thursday morning last at about two o'clock, and soon inundated the lowest portion of the town, being the north western part. Many families were displaced from their dwellings, we know not what number. Since Saturday last the waters have been rapidly subsiding. It is feared that considerable injury has been done to the Muskingum improvement which may seriously effect its navigation. But as all is rumor yet, we are not prepared to state the extent of the damage.

By our exchanges we gather that the freshet has been general throughout the great Ohio Valley. We have accounts of inundations in the Monongahela, Scioto, Hocking, Kenawha, Licking, (Ky.) & Little Miami rivers; but especially the great Ohio river itself. Our accounts from Cincinnati are afflictive indeed. We learn that the lower portion of the City is inundated, the waters having risen within a few inches of the mark of the great flood of 1832. That portion of the city being now much more densely populated than at that time, the damage must be much more extensive, and the suffering of houseless families also. It is said that five thousand families have been turned out of their houses. We find in the Presbyterian of the West an account of a public meeting in that city in behalf of the sufferers, at which the Mayor presided. A committee of Relief was appointed consisting of 26 gentlemen. The Committee were authorized to employ all the teams for removing furniture and their effects. A sub committee was appointed to buy provisions and fuel, and another to procure temporary shelter for families and their goods. The city council also took active measures for the relief of the suffering poor who were rendered houseless by the flood. A committee of gentlemen of each Ward was appointed, who were authorized to take all necessary steps to alleviate their suffering condition and to draw upon the city treasurer for the necessary sums. This is indeed praiseworthy.

We had hoped to receive more particular intelligence from the Queen City, but we regret to say, our 'Correspondence' there has forsaken us, and the "Cincinnati Commercial" which has been our main dependence for city news, has failed to reach us. We have repeatedly spoken a good word for that spirited Journal, and have appreciated its regular visits heretofore, but from some cause, it comes to us latterly, we are sure, not more than half the time, though perhaps unintentional on the part of the publisher.

Since writing the above, we have received the Watchman of the Valley, with the following additional particulars:

The present landing on Main, is between Columbia and Lower Market. The hurricane decks of the steamboats are towering above the roofs of many of the buildings. Drays are hurrying to and fro, in removing goods, furniture and families to a place of safety, beyond the reach of the aggressive element. Multitudes of families, more than we can pretend to estimate, are driven from their homes and thrown upon the charity of the public for food and shelter. The loss of property and personal suffering must be great.

Among the lesser inconveniences which the city is now suffering from this cause, is the stoppage of the customary supply of water, light, marketing, and news. The water is now shut off from the hydrants, because the engine that supplies it is overwhelmed in the rising flood.—The gas lights are extinguished from a similar cause. Three of the four great avenues to the city—through Fulton, Storrs, and Brighton—are effectually cut off, leaving only the Lebanon Pike and its branches open. Hogs, which have been coming in by scores of thousands every day, are at present entirely shut off from the city.—What the flood has not intercepted the snow has. Some, we learn, which were on their way have perished in the attempt to travel through the snow. Two or three hundred were drowned at a slaughter house on Mill Creek.

But we have reason to apprehend that the people of Cincinnati are not the severest sufferers by his flood. The extensive destruction of property elsewhere must be great. Many families on the river, in the country, will have to flee from their houses, if they are so happy as to escape at all, they know not whither. Saw mills and dwelling houses have floated by the city. Many coal boats are said to have been sunk. A steamboat passed one, drifting at the mercy of the stream, having one man on board, with his leg broke; but could afford him no assistance.

Thirtieth Congress, First Session—Both Houses convened on Monday Dec. 6th.

Senate.—The oath of office was administered to several new members. It was agreed that the daily hour of meeting be 12, M. A resolution was passed, providing that each member be supplied with newspapers during the session, not exceeding the cost of four daily papers.

The roll was called, and the members voted three several times before an election was made. Mr. R. C. Winthrop of Massachusetts was declared to be duly elected, upon the third process of voting, and on being conducted to the chair, delivered a short address, after which the oath of office was ministered to him by Mr. John Q. Adams. The oath (or affirmation) was then administered by the Speaker to all the members present.

Tuesday, Dec. 7th.—The President's Message was introduced into each House and read, whereupon, 25,000 copies were ordered by the Senate to be printed; and 15,00 copies with the accompanying documents were ordered by the House to be printed. The House agreed upon the same hour designated by the Senate for opening the daily sessions.

Ordered to be printed. Mr. Dickinson presented resolutions passed by the Legislature of New York, calling for modifications of the laws regulating the franking privilege, and the postage on letters and newspapers. The resolution of yesterday, ordering the printing of 25,000 copies of the President's Message was reconsidered, and so modified as to order the printing of ten thousand copies with the accompanying documents.

The House had the usual process of drawing for seats, and also elected its officers, as follows, Nathan Sargeant, Sargeant at Arms; Robert E. Horner, Doorkeeper; and John M. Johnson, Postmaster to the House.

Same gentleman introduced resolutions, deprecating the acquisition of any further territory to the Union, in which slavery is to be tolerated or established. Referred to Committees. A similar resolution by the legislature of Connecticut was laid before the House by the Speaker.

Sat. 11th, House.—A bill was passed to incorporate the Bellbrook and Spring Valley Turnpike Road Company.

President Judge of 11th Judicial Circuit, Levi Cox.

State Librarian, John Greiner.

New Counties again, is all the rage. We have eighty three, and the number must reach one hundred, before all are satisfied. Amongst the names of applicants are the following: Chester, Cumberland, Bennington, Walhonding, Auglaize, &c. Citizens of our neighboring village of Granger, which is upon, and severed by the line of Muskingum and Licking counties, have petitioned to be attached entire to the one or the other.

Ohio Cultivator.—We direct attention to the prospectus of this work for 1848. It is a very neat and valuable publication of the kind, and as it is furnished at a low price, it should certainly receive an extensive patronage from the farmers of Ohio. It will not be amiss to state here that Mr. Bateham, the Editor, has recently taken to wife an able coadjutor, who is to superintend a Ladies' Department, which will doubtless add to the interest & value of the Cultivator.

"Historical Reminiscences."—Our readers will be gratified that our old friend Major Nye has resumed his pen to furnish us a series of numbers of historical sketches, embracing facts which took place within his own observation.—They will be found interesting. We send a copy to the Cincinnati Historical Society, and also to Mr. Howe.

Independance of Liberia.—With the consent and advice of its patron, the American Colonization Society, the Colony of Liberia, West Africa, has declared its independence. A Republican form of government has been adopted, and a Constitution, after the model of that of the United States. The last number of the New Y. Sun, has interesting and full accounts from West African papers of the celebration of Independance, organization of the new government, &c. The Sun states that the birth of the young Republic was celebrated throughout the various settlements on the 24th of August. A President, Vice President, Senators and Representatives were to be elected the first Tuesday in October. All hold their offices for two years, except Senators who serve four. Every thing connected with the organization of the new government seems to have been conducted with admirable order. The 24th of August opened with the thundering of canon, and the day was occupied with processions and public exercises conducted in the most rational and orderly manner, and with the most enthusiastic demonstrations of joy. A public supper closed the scene, at which toasts were drunk in the purest cold water. The following additional testimony given in the Sun from Africa's Luminary, is interesting.

"In concluding, we feel bold to assert that nothing could exceed the good order, decorum and regularity of the proceedings of the day. Every thing was conducted in most admirable order. It was a day which will be long remembered. During the ceremony of presenting the flag, many eyes were suffused with tears. And indeed who that remembered the past could forbear to weep? Who that looked back to America and remembered what he saw and felt there could be otherwise than agitated? It is indeed a great undertaking; but that Almighty Being who hath conducted us thus far, can and will conduct us to the goal at which we aim."

General Taylor.—The triumphal entry of a victorious Roman General into Rome, would little more than excel the pomp & enthusiasm of the reception of General Taylor at the city of New Orleans on the 3d. inst. His arrival was greeted by the shouts of many assembled thousands. A complimentary address, welcoming the General as the guest of the city, was delivered by the Mayor, to which the General made a short reply. A procession lined with dense crowds of spectators, conducted him to the Cathedral, where he received a complimentary address from Bishop Blanc. A public dinner was had, at which the General was toasted, we should judge, to his heart's content. At night was a grand illumination, and display of fire works, during which the General visited the three theatres where he was enthusiastically received. A splendid sword voted to him by the Legislature of Louisiana, was presented to the General during the day by the Governor, with a lengthy address, to which he briefly replied. General Taylor left New Orleans on Saturday morning, on board the Steamer Missouri, and as she passed up the river during the day, the General was greeted with shouts and loud hurras, and the firing of cannon along the shore. At 4 o'clock the Missouri arrived at Donaldsville, amidst the thundering din of the Artillery of that place! The General was addressed by the Mayor, on his arrival, A great procession and parade followed; the distinguished guest received the salutation of friends, and the kisses of say about a thousand 'lovely Creoles,' and was then escorted by the military to the ball room, where a splendid feast was in readiness. After much hilarity and many toasts, the procession re-formed, and conducted the General back to the boat. The Missouri resumed her upward course, amid the loud hurras of the assemblage. In the evening Donaldsville was brilliantly illuminated. All this upon the Lord's Day. Wonder if there were not a few hearts of those who feared God, that felt sad to witness this desecration.

Oberlin Evangelist.—Professor Cowles has relinquished the editorship of this publication, and it is hereafter to be conducted by President Mahan. The Evangelist is an excellent religious paper.

LOUISA GIFFIN,

Departed this life in the triumph of faith on the 21st day of September 1847. The subject of this brief memoir was born in Harrison County, Virginia, November 1st 1818, and emigrated to this county, (Marion) Ohio, with her parents. In the nineteenth year of her age, she embraced the Religion of our Lord Jesus Christ, and gave her name to the Methodist Protestant Church, in which she continued till death removed her to the church triumphant in heaven.

The disease which terminated her earthly existence was of a protracted character; for eight long weeks did she suffer, and a large part of that time most severely; all of which did she bear with christian patience, and resignation to the Divine will: not a murmer escaped her. And—in the afternoon of the day before her departure, finding her end approaching she had the family called to her bed-side, she bade them an affectionate adieu, telling them her Jesus was there, and her desire was to go and be with him, and then after summoning the neighbors, and bidding them farewell, she fell asleep in Jesus. In consequence of sickness in the family and neighborhood at the time of her death, her funeral obsequies were deferred until yesterday, December 5th, at which time her funeral was preached by the writer of these lines, from Prov. 14th chapter, 32 verse.

Truly the desire of the past in the following lines was granted in her case.

"As our steps are drawing nearer
To the place we call our home,
May our view of heaven grow clearer,
Hope more bright of days to come,
And when dying
May thy presence cheer the gloom."

MRS. ELIZABETH ANN BROOKE,

Relict of the late Dr. Wm. L. Brooke, died, November 25th at Frazeysburgh, Muskingum County, Ohio, aged fifty one years. Sister B. was born at Philadelphia, Pa., and removed in early life to Zanesville, Ohio. At the age of eleven she embraced religion and joined the "Methodists" as they were then called, so, she lived forty years in communion with and died a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. She was emphatically a spiritually minded woman, and although she had much (especially since the death of her husband) of trial and care to call off her mind from her high calling's glorious hope, yet she was enabled to steadfastly hold on the good old way she had learned to travel when a child rejoicing in the God and rock of her salvation. My acquaintance with her was made some five years since. It was a religious acquaintance, we met weekly in the class room to cultivate it, and we frequently felt that God specially owned and blest our meetings, she professed (and we all believed she possessed) the great blessing of perfect love, and here perhaps is laid bare the secret to her enjoyment of the power and fulness of divine grace, so she died with "glory! glory!! glory!!!" on her lips. Death was not to her the king of terrors, but the messenger of the Prince of Peace calling her home. "Let me die the death of the righteous and let my last end be like hers."—and in order to this an early and constant attention to the duties & pursuits of religion are particularly commended to our attention. Conference Collections.

NO. IV.

Mr. Editor; Dear Sir: Owing to personal and family afflictions I was not permitted to read your number of 9th instant, until the 16th. This will account for my not attending to the respectful notices taken of me, in that paper, in relation to this subject, sooner.

The first thing we shall attend to is the remarks of our esteemed and venerable brother Rev. E. S. Hoagland, whose great age and experience entitle his opinions to much weight, especially from such a novice as ourself.—He charges us with misrepresenting the "true position" of Secretary Burns, in relation to Conference Collections—with "avoidable" ignorance on the subject—with 'hasty & severe remarks'"—with "acrimonious personalities," &c,

Now, Mr. Editor, there is no "severity" or "acrimony," in all this, when it is considered that it came from a venerable patriarch, who has rendered long and tried services to the church, to a youth of such inexperience & unquestionable integrity as your humble servant. Oh! no. In view of these facts it is altogether in accordance with the meekness of the gospel, and in the true spirit of Chesterfieldian gentility. But, if our worthy father, in the gospel, had only pointed out wherein we were "severe," or "acrimonious" &c., we might have confessed our sin and reformed; but, by condemning us, without specification, in this whole sale way, he has left us no place for either defence or repentance.

But, to be serious in this grave matter; whether we understand the "true position of the secretary," or not, the article before us makes us understand the "true position" of our brother Hoagland. It fairly identifies him with those who have been using their influence for the last two or three years to break down every effort that has been made to improve the financial system of the Conference, with a view of relieving the necessities of those preachers who travel in the poorer fields of labor. By this uncalled for, officious act, in interfering to shield from public responsibility those who were delinquent in the premises, he fairly endorses their movements. And he will understand his own "position," probably, when we intimate to him, that, this little service of his, may, perhaps, at some future day, lay men, in certain quarters, under obligations to crowd off a more meretorious brother to make way for himself.

Our worthy pastor has insinuated, some three or four times, that we were ignorant of the fact that the secretary had made collections in his circuit and taken up to conference. And this assumption of our ignorance is made the ground of most he has to say in his article. Now, we are happy to inform him that he is laboring under a very great mistake as it respects this matter. We were well aware of the Secretary's "true position" in reference to this subject. These collections of his were trumpeted rather too loud not to be heard and remembered. Therefore, when he makes this the ground of difficulty between the Secretary and myself, he is, like tray in the fable, barking at his own echo. We challenge him to produce a single sentence wherein we have charged Br. B. with a want of attention to his personal duty in the matter of Conference Collections. On this subject we knew but little (save what the Secretary says himself,) and have said nothing. But what we have charged him with, was, uniting with others to prevent the adoption of an efficient system of Conference Collections for the benefit of the needy preachers. And, that he is guilty of this charge, may be fairly inferred, by one who understands the subject, from his own admissions. So, it seems, our respected brother has done, like most men do, who write or speak without thinking, entirely missed the mark.

As it respects our "severity" &c. we have often had similar charges from men who would reprove us with invidious insults. It was a crime for us to be "severe," but not so for them. Poor human nature always hates treachery unless it has a hand in it itself—then it is all right. But, I think it will be found, on examination, that our greatest "severity" consists in our facts. Joking on facts is the "soverest" kind of joking.

Since writing the above our eye has fallen upon the Sec's No. 2. As we do not wish to burden the Editor with too much at once, we shall omit saying any thing more until the next paper; then, if health permit, we will endeavor to bring our worthy friend out of the fog he has raised, and in which he has attempted to conceal himself. Yours, &c.,

C. SPRINGER.

Sketches by Rev. A. McGuire.

NO. XVII.

At the Conference held in Zanesville, 1831, a second petition for a minister was received from a class organised about two years previous, by Br. James Montgomery, between Tiffin and Lower Sandusky. This beloved Brother was taken from them soon after their organization, by death.—They still clung together, hoping and praying to God for a pastor, refusing to go back to the Methodist Episcopal Church, though often invited.—When the question was put—Who will go? the missionary fire kindled high in my breast, but having given so much of my time already, that I was somewhat involved, I hesitated, and had my doubts whether it was my duty to sacrifice the comforts of my family and still increase my debts. I was finally prevailed on to take a missionary appointment for the year, and visit them some time during the year. After assisting Br. Sanford three months on Xenia circuit, and laboring where I thought I was most wanted, without compensation, until the 9th of May, 1832. I made arrangements and bid farewell to my family, and set out for Lower Sandusky, near two hundred miles, my children gazing after me as far as they could see me. Well, we must forego all this for Christ's sake and the Gospel.

I reached Springfield the next day, preached for them at night. Sunday, 18th, reached Columbus: called on, and was cheerfully received, by Brother N. McClean and lady. He had charge of a class in the Methodist Episcopal Church, and informed me that they were very stiff there, and thought I could not get their church to preach in. But he would try to get the Episcopalian Church, but could not find the right person. So I failed of having the honor of preaching there—Went to hear the stationed preacher, R. Spencer, at 4 o'clock; he having been acquainted with me when he was a boy, invited me to close after he was done, which was the first mark of friendship I had met with from any of the Methodist Episcopal brotherhood since I seceded.

Tuesday, 15th, left Columbus, rode 18 miles to Doctor Stephens'; next day to Hartford. The people got up an appointment for me at night. I preached with liberty to a serious, attentive congregation, mostly Presbyterians. I was kindly entertained by a New Light family.

Thursday, the 17th, rode eighteen miles to Mt. Vernon, and put up with Brother Banning, an old minister who had left the Methodist E. Church about seven years previous, on account of its Government. Had joined the Wesleyan Methodists, and was a representative of that branch to a convention held in New York, 1826, composed of six different branches, there represented, who had broken off at different times for the same reason. This convention formed a Constitution and Discipline on republican principles, uniting all those branches together, under the name of the Methodist Societies, but they did not prosper as they ought to have done: and now the old Br. is waiting for a church to be organised here by the Protestant Methodists, which will soon take place. I preached twice for them, and gave a lecture on Church Government. Our preachers have regular appointments here.

By request I visited a class of twenty-eight members in Frederic, a little town seven miles from Mt. Vernon, and preached twice for them. They were organised a short time before by Br. W. B. Evans. Took my leave on the 21st, rode eighteen miles to Mansfield, stopped at a tavern, refreshed myself and horse. Then rode 15 miles on a very swampy road to Leesville. By direction, called at Mr. Lee's, a Presbyterian minister, but he was gone to the General Assembly in Philadelphia. I told the lady who I was,—what I was,—and that I had tried to get there in time enough to have meeting, but the bad roads had hindered me. "O, sir, if you are not too weary we can give notice to the villagers; please to light and the boys will take care of your horse. Notice was given and we had a precious season in waiting on the Lord. Next morning when I offered to pay for my entertainment, she said—"No sir, we are certainly in debt to you for the blessed word of life which you gave us last night. So I took my leave with her blessing, and rode ten miles to Bucyrus, called on the proprietor of the town, Mr. Norten, for directions on the best and nearest way to Lower Sandusky. He asked me if I was not a preacher. I told him I was. Well, said he, dinner is just ready, light and rest awhile and have your horse fed. I thanked him, and got down, and was treated like a Brother. He is a Baptist, and when I told him I was a Protestant Methodist, he would not hear to my going farther that day. He went and gave notice at three schools that a strange Methodist minister would preach that night in the Methodist Episcopal Ch. I had a large audience, and preached with Liberty. He bought a Discipline.

I set off next morning a quarter before eight, and on a fine road; reached Sandusky before sunset, fifty miles. Put up with my old friend and Brother, John Bell, who had been looking for me some time, for I had written that I was coming.

Estimated receipts for next year, $4,099,206, including $258,009 for steamers. The Postmaster General glories much over the success of the reform of the law of 1845, to which he was personally opposed, and which he did all in his power to defeat. In reference to all this, however, he is very shy, but tells the world that the friends of the cheap postage system have had their expectations more than realized. One of the ideas drawn out of the Postmaster General's Report, and originating, no doubt, with him, as no one else could have invented such an absurdity, proposes to tax newspapers according to weight.—N. Y. Sun.

Terrible Explosion.—The Wheeling Times of the 11th says:—Yesterday, at about 3 o'clock, A. M, as the ferry-men returned from breakfast to the steam ferry-boat, "Ireland Packet,' several persons had gathered on the boat to cross, and with the first turn of the wheel, the boiler exploded, and two persons, one a fine boy, a son of Mr. Hugh Clark, residing on the Island, and the other a traveller, were blown some distance into the water, and drowned. Another son of Mr. Clarke was severely scalded, as was also another traveller. Mr. Walker Hunter was severely bruised. One horse was killed and the upper works of the boat were left a complete wreck.

The accident originated in the fact that the boat had been left until the water in the boilers was exhausted and one was red hot.

The proprietors of the ferry have engaged the steam tow boat "Minor," and will continue the ferry as usual.

Rules to be observed by those who write for the Press.

1. Set your letters up; do not lay them down in a running manner. This makes the reading difficult.

2. Always leave a margin of about an inch on the left of the page. Don't be stingy of paper in these times of plenty. This rule should be observed in writing sermons, letters. &c.

3. When you commence a new paragraph, write the first word at least one fourth of the width of your paper from the left.

4. Write a large round hand. It becomes the ladies only to write a small hand, who wish to make you believe they have very small mouths and very delicate fingers.

5. Make yourself acquainted with the art of punctuation; and habituate yourself to punctuate as you write. Remember that every distinct member of the sentence should be separated by a comma at least.

If you observe carefully these rules, your article may be put into the printers hand, without subjecting the editor to the labor of copying it.

Death from the Bite of a Rattlesnake.—A remarkable and much lamented death took place in New York on Friday night. Dr. Arnold F. Wainwright, one of our most respected physicians, died about midnight, from the effects of a bite on one of his fingers, received from a rattlesnake in the early part of the day.

The reptile had on the same morning been received by the Doctor in a box from a country friend; he let it out upon the floor, and in attempting to return it to the box, received the bite—the blood spirted from the wound several feet. Cauterism was immediately resorted to, but in vain. The deadly venom of the serpent ran through his system with unallayable virulence, and death ensued, in spite of the best services of his best professional brethren. The melancholy event has produced an intense sensation.

St. Michæl's Church Case.—The jury, in the Court of Nisi Prius, on Friday, in the case of the Trustees of St. Michæl's Church v. the County of Philadelphia, for damages sustained by the destruction of said church by the mob in May 1844, rendered a verdict for the plaintiffs of $27,690 02. The amount of claim, without interest, was $29,631 07.

Railroad Accident.—Two Persons Killed.—The descending freight train on the Reading Railroad broke down on Friday, near Pottstown, and by the accident two men were killed—Henry Gallagher, a pedlar, and Owen M. Evans, formerly a conductor on the railroad. The conductor was also considerably injured, and several cars were broken.

Fatal Railroad Accidents.—Capt. Levi Davis, of Hooksett, was killed upon the Concord Railroad on Thursday forenoon. He was walking upon the track. The Harlem train coming to New York on Monday evening, ran over a woman nearly cutting her in two.

Rouge-Catching by Telegraph.—One Philip Crane alias Deloney, last week stole a trunk and contents, together with about $60 in gold, in Portland, Me. It being suspected that he would proceed to Boston a telegraphic despatch was forwarded to that city, giving the necessary information for his arrest. He was accordingly apprehended, which fact was sent back to Portland, but no satisfactory answer being returned, he was released; the recovered goods, however was retained. Next day Crane returned and demanded the goods, but an officer from Portland having in the meantime arrived and being then present, recognized him and took him into custody.

The corps of Engineers who have been engaged in the survey of the Dayton and Western Railroad, have run three lines, one through Lewisburg and New Paris to Richmond, distance a little more than 40 miles. a straight line a little more than 38 miles, and one through Eaton, which is a few hundred feet short of 40 miles.—All of the lines are practicable, but it is uncertain upon which the road will be located.

Stage Accident.—On Monday night last, about 11 o'clock, one of the stages from Brownsville to Cumberland, when within a mile and a half of Frostburg, upset with seven passengers. By this accident, Mrs. Boyland, of North Carolinia, had her right collar bone broken; Miss Rosley Barnes, of Mount Washington, Ky., was wounded on the head, slightly; Mr. Thomas Briggs, of Clark county Va., on the head and arm, slighly; and the others some small injury. The road at the time was covered with ice and snow.

Fatal Accident.—The Cumberland Civilian states that a few days since a man named Shoemaker, employed in hauling lumber from the sawmills of H. T. Weld, Esq., by the Somerset Turnpike to Cumberland, met with an accident which proved fatal in a few minutes. He was endeavoring to fix the brake of his wagon while descending a hill, and slipped under the wheel, which passed over his body with a weight of four tons, crushing him to death.

Shocking Accident.—On Monday afternoon, Mr. Bela Rose, employed in a woolen factory at Waterburg, (Conn.) while engaged about the picker, had both hands drawn into the machinery and instantly torn from the wrist. Astounded and writhing with pain, the unfortunate man made for the door to obtain assistance, but alas he had no hands to open it, and was compelled to kick, out one of the pannels before he could make his misfortune known. It was found necessary to amputate both arms above the wrist. His recovery is deemed by his medical advisers quite problematical.

Sometime since, W. M. Baker of Charleston, Ia., sent us the pay for his paper, and ordered it discontinued. We credited him to No. 19 of the present volume, at which time we should have discontinued as requested. Supposing that we were neglecting our business, and that we were imposing our paper upon him in view of making him pay for it, he has written us a severe lecture, in which he abuses us a little without cause, and leaves us to pay postage upon it. Had he waited a few weeks, his paper would have been stopped with the expiration of his time, and we would then have reckoned him a gentleman. After the present number, we shall not trouble him with any further numbers of the Recorder.

All right again.—We published last week a correction of our error in the case of Brother Vandevert. Our brother, the agent who chiefly felt himself aggrieved in the case, has already signified to us that he is satisfied.—We have the pleasure therefore to number him still with the friends of our paper. We have not yet had time to hear from our other friend, but we feel assured that all will be right.

The Law of Newspapers.

1. Subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, are considered wishing to continue their subscriptions.

2. If the subscribers order the discontinuance of their papers, the publishers may continue to send them till all cash charges are paid.

3. If subscribers neglect or refuse to take their papers from the offices to which they are directed, they are held responsible until they have settled their bill, and order their paper discontinued.

4. If subscribers remove to other places without informing the publishers, and the paper is sent to the former direction, they are held responsible.

5. The Courts have decided that refusing to take a paper or periodical from the office, or removing and leaving it uncalled for, is "prima facie" evidence of intentional fraud.

Liabilities of those who take Periodicals.

This law declare that any person, to whom a periodical is sent, is responsible for payment, if he receives the paper, or makes use of it, even if he has never subscribed for it, or has ordered it to be stopped. His duty in such a case is not to take the paper from the office or persons with whom the paper is left, but to notify the publisher that he does not wish for it.

If papers are sent to a Post Office, Store, or any other place of deposite,, and are not taken by the person to whom they are sent, the Postmaster, Storekeeper, &c., are responsible for the payment, until he returns the paper, or informs the publisher that they are lying dead in the office.

THE OHIO CULTIVATOR FOR 1848.

Published at Columbus, Ohio, on the 1st and 15th of each month, M. B. Batcham, Editor and Proprietor. Terms, $1 per year—four copies for $3—payment invariably in advance.

THE fourth volume of the Ohio Cultivator will commence Jan. 1st, 1848. This paper has now become so well known that it is scarcely necessary to speak of its character, or to allude to the commendations it has received from the Public Press and other sources. The editor is determined to spare no pains on his part to sustain the reputation of the work, and make each succeeding volume more useful than the preceding one. Our motto is "upward and onward;" and the object of the "Cultivator" is not only to collect and disseminate valuable facts and information relating to practical agriculture, but to inspire 'Farmers' with more just conceptions of the dignity of their profession; to induce them to cultivate the 'Mind' as well as the 'soil,' and thus elevate themselves to that position which it is their duty and privilege to occupy as 'American Agriculturists,'' in this age of Progress and Improvement.

With its very large list of contributors, numbering over "two hundred," most of them practical farmers in the West, the pages of the "Cultivator" will contain the results of "Experience," as well as the teachings of "Science;" and being written or selected with special reference to the climate, productions and farming of Ohio, this paper will be found more valuable than any other for the farmers of this and the adjoining States. It will contain the latest intelligence of the "Markets" of this country and England; notices of the weather and the crops; descriptions (with engravings,) of improved implements, machines; &c.; instructions in gardening and fruit culture; rearing and management of domestic animals; construction of farm buildings, fences, &c.; and a "Ladies' Department" devoted to household affairs, useful receipts, &c.

The friends of Improvement in Ohio and adjoining States are requested to obtain and forward subscribers for the Ohio Cultivator. Remember that the price is only "seventy-five cents" each, when four or more names are sent by one person. All subscriptions must commence with the first number of the volume; a complete index is furnished at the end of the year. Specimen numbers and a prospectus will be forwarded to all who desire them.

☞ "Now is the time to subscribe!" Letters with remittances may be sent by mail at the risk and expense of the publisher. Address,

M. B. BATEHAM.

A NEW AND IMPROVED VOLUME FOR 1848!

SEARS' PICTORIAL FAMILY MAGAZINE.

Established for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge:

A Monthly Miscellany of moral and instructive information, embellished with numerous ENGRAVINGS of the various subjects treated of in the course of the year. Published monthly, in parts of 48 large octavo pages each.

PROSPECTUS FOR THE FIFTH VOLUME.

For four years the Pictorial Family Magazine has been before the American public, and it is peculiarly gratifying to the Publisher to know, that his efforts to do good through its medium, have met with the universal approbation of the public & the public prints, wherever it has found its way. It is now too firmly established upon the broad foundation of public confidence, to require a great flourish of trumpets to proclaim its continued existence, or the tricks of 'puffery' to allure the people to its support.

To those who are acquainted with the Magazine, it is unnecessary to speak of its design & merits; to those who are not, we will make a brief statement of both. The original design of this work was a noble one, and worthy of all praise. It was intended as a vehicle for conveying solid information to that class of citizens whose circumstances denied them the privilege of drinking abundantly at the fountain of useful knowledghe; & it has been the constant aim of the present publisher to carry out fully the above laudable designs. Its price, compared to the amount of its reading matter, and the number and quality of its Engravings, is exceedingly low; and we think we hazard nothing in saying, that it is by far the cheapest periodical published in America.

Natural History, Biography, Travels, History, Science, Useful Arts, Fine Arts, Agriculture and Rural Economy, Sketches of American Scenery, Political Economy, Essays, & Miscellaneous Reading, all receive a due share of attention, and all bear, as far as practicable, a decidedly American character. We aim, also, to preserve a high tone of morals, in the conduct of the Magazine, and to blend useful information with correct moral instruction, in order that it may, in every respect, be a useful and agreeable teacher in the domestic circle.

☞ Price two dollars per annum—three copies for five dollars, or ten copies for fifteen dollars—invariably in advance, as no Numbers are sent out until the subscription is paid.

☞ Thus far we have gone on steadily advancing in public favor, the sure indication of which has been a healthy increase in our subscription list. That we shall double our present number of subscribers in 1848, we have little doubt, for we intend doubling our efforts and increasing very greatly the value of the Magazine. We shall engage the very best engravers to be found. We have now some plates, illustrating a great variety of subjects, in progress for our new volume, that will be equal to anything that has appeared in the country.

☞ EVERY MAN HIS OWN AGENT.—All remittances of money for this Magazine must be sent to us free of postage. Those wishing to take our Magazine, will please write direct to us, enclosing a year's subscription ($2,) or the price of a club (ten copies for $15,) in funds current in the State where they reside. This simplifies the whole matter of subscription, perfectly, and makes the communication, between publisher and subscribers, as it should be, direct.

Agents Wanted in every town and county throughout the Union, to sell SEARS' NEW AND POPULAR PICTORIAL WORKS, universally acknowledged to be the best and cheapest ever published, as they certainly are the most saleable. Any active Agent may clear FIVE HUNDRED or a THOUSAND DOLLARS a year. A cash capital of at least $25 or $30 will be necessary. Full particulars of the principles and profits of the Agency will be given on application, either personally or by letter. The postage must in all cases be paid.

Please address, ROBERT SEASS, Publisher.

128 Nassau Street, New York.

☞ Newspapers copying the above (including this notice,) and giving it two or three insertions, shall receive a copy of the Magazine for one year. Send only one copy of each paper, marked.

THE AMERICAN PULPIT,

PUBLISHED MONTHLY AT WORCESTER, MASS.,

BY SAMUEL CHISM.

This publication is sent forth, with the specific object of disseminating evangelical truth. Its design is eminently 'practical,' not speculative. It will present those vital truths of christianity which are calculated to stimulate the church to her appropriate work in the evangelization of the world; and will urge the unconverted to an immediate surrender of their hearts to God, and the entire consecration of themselves to his service. It is not devoted to the interests of any particular denomination, but aims at the present and eternal happiness of the whole human family.

Each monthly issue will contain 32 pages of matter, octavo, in new, bold, and clear type, cast expressly for this use. Two sermons will appear in each number; and the remaining pages will be filled with Skeletons of Sermons, Ministerial and Religious Miscellany, Criticisms, Biographical Sketches, etc.

The list of Contributors to the American Pulpit will embrace several of the ablest clergymen of the evangelical denominations in the United States.

TERMS.

1. $1 per annum, in advance. If not paid till after three months from the time of subscribing, $1,50 at which time all subscriptions will be considered due, and bills sent accordingly.

2. Any person obtaining three subscribers, with pay in advance, shall receive a fourth copy gratis.

3. No subscriptions received for a less term than one year. It is desirable that all subscriptions should commence with the first number of the volume.

4. Will not the friends of this work use their influence in extending its circulation? Certainly, by so doing, they will advance the interests of Christ's cause. A little exertion on the part of each individual will do much to make it one of the most extensively circulated periodicals in the United States.

5. Several special agents are wanted to procure subscribers in different parts of the United States. Superannuated clergymen will receive good encouragement on personal or written application.

6. Ministers of the gospel, of every denomination, and other responsible individuals, are authorised, and cordially invited to act as agents.

7. All communications connected with the editorial department should be addressed to Rev. J. D. Bridge, Worcester, Massachusetts. All communications on business should be directed, 'post paid,' to Samuel Chism, Worcester, Massachusetts.

☞ If the sick wish a diseased stomach restored and impure blood cleansed without endangering the constitution, go to J. Deen, Grocer and Shoemaker, Putnam, and obtain a box of Dr. Le Roy's Sarsaparilla and Wild Cherry Pills which is the best family medicine now in use. So says Mr. O'Neil the Agent.

DR. LE ROY'S

Wild Cherry, and Sarsaparilla PILLS.

DR. LE ROY has most happily succeeded in combining Wild Cherry and Sarsaparilla with other vegetable ingredients, so as to produce a medicine at once tonic, and purgative, the only perfect discovery of the kind ever made. Their great peculiar excellence, and that which distinguishes them from all other purnatives is, that their operation is followed by no re-action. Their unrivalled purifying and purgative properties, for which they are indebted to the essence of Sarsaparilla, and other ingredients, being controlled by their highly tonic virtues, derived from the extract of Wild Cherry, they do not strain the digestive organs into action, as is the mode of operation with other cathartics, but on the contrary strengthen them into action. Thus all other purgative medicines produce more or less subsequent costiveness, and sluggishness of the gastric juice, while Dr. Le Roy's Pills leave all the machinery of the system full of life and activity, and the bowels open and natural. "Hence," writes Dr. Cheeseman, "they are the only active purgative which I can recommend with confidence, and without alarm; for they remove nothing but what ought to be removed—neither rack, nor strain—occasion no apathy or debilitation—and leave the bowels free, open, and vigorous." But the great virtue of Dr. Le Roy's Pills—the virtue which has spread their fame over the two hemispheres with a rapidity almost miraculous—lies in their purification of the blood. Here they not only stand altogether unrivalled, but fill up the measure of desire. They at once arrest the formation of bad blood, by removing all impurities from the chyle, of which the blood is formed; and moreover keep it clean, by toning and strengthing the digestive organs, so as to be able to exclude from it all matter of an innutricious nature; and then they purify the blood already in circulation; and never cease operation until it is entirely free from every noxious particle, & full of health, life, and vigor. For sale at J. Deen's.

LINES

Addressed to Zion's Watchmen.

BY J. B. P.

Brethren united in the common cause
Of mutual rights, equality and laws;
For which our fathers were severely tried,
And in its firm defence have nobly died:
A cause beyond our sanguine hopes most blest,
On which the smiles of heaven divinely rest.
But twenty years have fled since first unfurled
Our glorious banner to a ruined world,
When gathered round, in true and bold array,
Freed from the shackles of despotic sway,
A band of freemen, bat'ling for the right,
Against unjust and usurpative might,
Though faint the splendor of our opening day,
And through dark gloom shone freedom's lovely ray,
Though a proud host opposed our onward tread,
And hurled their thunder forth to crush our head,—
Though friends deserted in that trying hour,
Yielding their fealty to wealth and power;
Yet have we triumphed in the cause of right,
And thousands hail fair freedom's glorious light,
Throng now her courts, and sacred altars crowd,
Where swells the voice in anthems sweet and loud.
Bale persecution hides its hideous form,
And hushed the thunder of the angry storm;
Or changed the mode of its unrighteous war,
To dim the light of reformation's star,
The truths for which the veterans nobly fought,
By thousands now admired are wisely sought:
Lo! what a vista spreads before our view,
For men of Christian nerve and courage true,—
The fields are white, their treasures press the soil,
And golden sheaves await the reaper's toil!
Ye men of God! put in your sickles keen,
In the world's harvest richest honors glean!
Hence! all contention, lethargy, and strife—
'Tis yours to preach the glorious Word of Life!
He whom to such vile things as these resorts,
Sows ruin wide, and scatters Zion's hosts.
Alas! how many who in Zion teach,
Make use of venom'd and embittered speech,
And hurl their thunder with unsparing hand,
On Christians who in opposition stand.
'Tis not for you, who boast of freedom's light,
To use such means in your most holy fight;
But high your banner raise, and let it stream,
And from each fold let love and friendship gleam;
Show the proportions of our fav'rite cause,
Of mutual rights, equality, and laws;
Proclaim the sacred truths of righteousness,
Dwell oft on faith and constant holiness;
Extol the beauty of fair wisdom's ways,
And heavenly light shall in our churches blaze.
Then, brethren, of a patriotic band!
Unite your hands and firm to freedom stand;
Maintain the truth, your principles defend,
And God our borders will in peace extend. AMEN!

Tobacco---Essay seven.

BY REV. R. MORRIS.

Argument 8th—'It is good as a medicine.'—This is the last of the array of excuses that bind men together in the bonds of a fearful habit. Because Tobacco is good as a medicine, men who are in health, stout, able-bodied and hearty, use it day and night. For what? To get well? They are well already. To keep well? Medicine is not given to sustain health, but to cure sickness. To cure sickness? They have no sickness, unless Tobacco, by weakening and prostrating their nervous system, has made them unhealthy. But people do not take tobacco when they are really sick. On the contrary, they are obliged to quit its use as soon as they become seriously ill, as every tobacco-chewer who has suffered from sickness knows. What shall we conclude then? That the use of tobacco upon this plea is a specious delusion designed to shield the real motives from the user. I have seen a healthy young man commence using tobacco because he had the singular propensity called dirt-eating. Now a few doses of Salt and Magnesia would have cured this in a week, without any evil consequence.—Tobacco cured it something as the tooth-ache may be cured, by a fit of the gout, for the young man, instead of eating dirt, eats tobacco at the rate of a pound a week. Such cases might be multiplied without any other advantage than to show us how dangerous it is for ignorance to tamper with the laws of physical organization. Tobacco is a good medicine, says the man whose yellow face is an index pointing to the dyspepsia beneath. Tobacco is a powerful narcotic, says each medical writer, requiring great skill in its use. Here is a conflict of opinion, which should at least warn us to be slow in deciding.

But the tobacco user employs his medicine every hour of every day of his life, while the wise andd prudent physician, with a thousand patients a year, may never use it in a single instance.—Indeed, there are many who never have employed it in all their patience.

Thus have I completed the sketch which I proposed to myself at the commencement of this Series. A few general remarks will conclude,—Those who have become habituated to the use of tobacco would do well to confess the honest truth, that they see the evils of the practice, but connot consent to undergo the pain of throwing it off.—Those who feel called upon by a sense of a duty to oppose this practice may feel encouraged to persevere by the many instances of Reformation which are recorded. The writer after a patient course of mild, persuasive Lectures to his pupils, has always been permitted to see cheering results.—Sometimes one, sometimes two, in one instance twelve young men abandoned the practice at a time, and in a large majority of cases they did not relapse. But the greatest encouragement of all is that we can prevent our youth from commencing the practice. After all, this is the most practicable measure in every popular reform, to prevent, and this is not difficult with the young. Only show them plainly its few pleasures, its many pains, its great inconveniences, its fearful expense of time, its extravagance of money, and the penalty which all must pay in the body who violate the laws of health: do this in a spirit of mildness and prayer, and your reward is certain. If every parent, every preacher and every teacher would pursue this method, the next generation would have no other use for tobacco than they have for Henbane—to employ it as a medicine in a last resort.

And now, to those readers who have patiently followed me through these seven articles, I will add a parting remark. I am not anxious to write upon unpopular subjects, nor do I ever desire to touch the feelings of my friends. Yet I cannot be pursuaded that it is wrong to oppose an evil because the evil is such a popular one. If Noah had thought so, we had not now been in existence for the Ark would not have been built.

That the use of tobacco in its customary method is an evil, I honestly believe—that it is a great evil, and the greater because so common, I also am assured. Believing this, I write. But I earnestly deprecate any harshness of judgment, and if any expression has escaped me in course of these articles which has seemed too severe, let the Reader scratch it out, as I myself would have done if I had noticed it, and judge me by what is left.

Narrative.

A Fatal Delay.

About the year 1821–2 a revival of religion was enjoyed at the ——— Institution, in which I was at that time engaged as a teacher. Many of the students were hopeful subjects of this revival, and several others had their attention called up, without any permanent results. Among this latter class was a young man of about 16 or 18 years of age, connected with the junior English department. He was a native of the same town with myself, and I had always known him from his earliest infancy. He was a young man of common abilities and of steady, regular habits. While the revival was progressing, he called upon me one day, stating that his mind had been for several days a good deal interested on religious subjects, and seeking counsel and advice. I enquired into his feelings and exercises, gave him such instruction as I though he needed, urged him to an immediate submission to God, and, at his request, engaged in prayer on his behalf, in which he also joined with apparent fervor and earnestness. Several days, perhaps a week or two elapsed, before I had any other conversation with him. A few Sabbaths afterwards, after the congregation had been witnessing the solemn and impressive ordinance of baptism, administered to several willing and joyous converts, I embraced the opportunity of once more talking with him upon the subject of his own personal salvation. He confessed to me—what I had already too much reason to fear, that his interest in the subject had very much abated, and he had resolved to postpone farther attention to it, until he should return to his friends, and enjoy the leisure which the vacation would afford.

Finding myself unable to dissuade him from his resolution, I closed the conversation with him, with the truthful, though common proverb: "Delays are dangerous."

During the following week, I saw him only as a student. The next Sabbath, which was a very hot day in mid-summer, he attended church as usual. The discourses of the preacher were such as we often hear from faithful country pastors—simple pathetic appeals. At the usual hour in the afternoon, the members of the congregation dispersed to their several homes. The heat of a burning sun had increased during the day, until it had become almost intolerable, and that peculiar stillness in nature was apparent which is said to precede earthquakes and tornadoos, in the torrid zone. At length a small dark cloud appeared in the West, rapidly increasing and frequently changing in appearance. The mist gathered upon the distant mountain tops; the lightning leaped from peak to peak, and from crag to crag; a low hollow rumbling was heard in the distance, and nature seemed preparing herself for some mighty convulsion. Meantime the heavens gathered blackness; the bright glow of the son was obscured, the clouds assumed fantastic shapes, and darted across the heavens, from place to place, and from side to side, like armed hosts gathering and forming for moral combat. Then there was a sound of a rushing mighty wind, sweeping down the mountain's sides and along the broken plains; bending giant trees to the earth, prostrating fences, and shattering buildings, and scattering the fragments of "riot and ruin" all around. The heavens became still blacker; hugh masses of tangible darkness rolled along the sky: night seemed hovering over the world. Then the windows of heaven were opened," and the rolling massess above poured down their liquid contents on the earth. Then there was a sudden gleam of livid light, too dreadfully bright for moral vision, followed almost instantaneously by a deafening burst as if nature's magazine had exploded.

A moment of awful suspense ensued; every heart ceased beating; every eye was instictively closed. Then came another sheet of liquid light and another peal of deafening thunder. Every one started up in alarm; every face was pallid with fear, lest the trembling dwellings should crush the wretched inmates beneath their falling ruins. But all were yet safe, amid the fearful strife of natures's elements. But it was only for a moment. The heavens again became one broad sheet of flame, and a huge ball of fire fell from the overhanging clouds, and burst with an explosion as if the last trump had sounded, and nature was dissolving. I sprang involuntarily, to my feet. Consciousness was for a moment suspended. As soon as it was restored I rushed to the door, feeling assured that some dreadful deed of death had been done not far distant.

The clouds were still dark and heavy, and the rain descended in torrents. The ground was flooded with water, and a thick white foam covered its face. The spray and vapor were rising as at the foot of some mighty waterfall. I looked out through the misty atmosphere, & saw one of the students coming towards the place where I stood. He was without coat or hat; his eyes staring from their sockets, and his countenance pale as marble; not a trace of color to be seen even in his lips. I spoke to him, but he answered me only by a vacant stare. I seized him and shaking him vehemently, asked him what was the matter. He fixed his eyes, upon me with a long, earnest gaze; then looking back in the direction he had come, shuddered convulsively, and covering his face with his hands burst into tears. Leaving him in the care of others, I ran to the house whence he came. Others nearer had preceded me, and the first act of humanity had been done. A horrid spectacle met my eyes Four blackened human bodies lay extended upon the grass, in front of the house!

The last electric charge had struck a tall poplar tree in the front yard, from which it was attracted by a stove pipe in the garret of the house.—From the garret the fluid passed in two directions. In its westerly course it killed the lady of the house, who stood on the threshold of the chamber door, and passing along the floor it prostrated and stunned her son, with whom she was conversing. In its easterly course it prostrated three young men in the easterly chamber, and passing down by the wall of the house, killed the father of the family, who was holding a babe in his arms, which fell upon the floor, unharmed except by the fall. Of the six that were prostrated, who were slightly stunned, one was resuscitated, after much effort, and the remaining three were killed. These last were the master and mistress of the house, and the student of whom I spoke at first, who boarded with them.

The manner in which they were severally occupied, is worthy of a passing remark. The man was a professed Universalist, and held in his hand the Universalist Magazine, which he had just been reading, The woman was a member of a Free-will Baptist Church; a consistent Christian, I believe and was at that time admonishing her son for manifesting too much levity at such a fearful moment. The history of the young man who was killed, has already been partially told. The sequel is as follows:

He and two of his companions, follow boarders, were endeavoring to beguile the time, which probably hung heavily upon their hands after church by reading a novel! This they had perused, comparatively regardless of the fearful commotion of the elements without. The book from which they were reading is entitled "Bandit's Bride." At the awful moment when death approached on lightning wings, this same young man was reading aloud to his companions. The last passage which he uttered, and which still sounds upon the ears of his two surviving companions, was this: "The judgments of heaven would be denounced against me; my fate is fixed! At the utterance of these fatally significant words, the book dropped from his hands; his head fell back upon his chair, his eyes closed in death; and his soul was hurried to the presence of his God! When I saw him extended upon the grass plot, motionless in death, the cold perspiration started upon my forehead, a faintness came over my spirit, and I would have turned away. But it might not be so. I had performed my duty to the living without success, it is true; but I still owed a duty to the dead, and I assisted in the last mournful rites. My own last words to him, "Delays are dangerous," seemed inscribed on his coffin, and engraved on his tombstone, as a warning to all that knew his history, or shall learn his fate.—N. Y. Recorder.

Memory of a drowning man.

"Some years since, A. held a bond of B. for several hundred dollars, having some time to run. At its maturity he had put it away so carefully he was unable to find it. Every search was fruitless. He only knew that it had not been paid, or traded away. In this dilemma he called on B., related the circumstance of its disappearance, and proposed giving him a receipt as an offset to the bond or an indemnifying bond against its collection, if ever found. To his great surprise, B. not only refused to accept the terms of meeting the difficulty, but positively denied owing him anything, and strongly intimated the presence of a fradulent design on the part of A.—Without legal proof, and, therefore, without redress, he had to endure both the loss of his money, and the suspicion of a dishonorable intention to urging the claim.–Several years passed away without any change in the nature of the case, or its facts as above given, when one afternoon while bathing in James River, A., either from irability to swim, or cramp, or some other cause, was discovered to be drowning. He had sunk and risen several times, and was floating away under the water, when he was seized and drawn to the shore. The usual remedies were applied to resuscitate him, and though there were signs of life, there was no appearance of consciousness. He was taken home in a state of complete exhaustion and remained so for some days. On the first return of strength to walk, he left his bed, went to his book case, took a book, opened it and handed his long lost bond to a friend who was present. He then informed him that when drowning and sinking as he supposed, to rise no more, in a moment there stood out distinctly before his mind as a picture, every act of his life, from early childhood to the hour of sinking beneath the water, and among them the circumstance of his putting the bond in a book, the book itself, and the place in which he had put it in the book case. It is needless to say he recovered his own with usury."

A HOTTENTOT BOY.—A poor black boy, the property of a slaveholder in Africa, having heard of the preaching of the missionaries, felt a strong desire to go and hear about Jesus Christ. For this purpose he crept secretly away one evening, but being obliged to pass under the window of the house, his master observed him, and called out, "Where are going?" The poor fellow came back trembling, and said, "Me go to hear the missionaries, massa." "To hear the missionaries, indeed; if you ever go there, you shall have nine and thirty lashes, and be put in irons."—With a disconsolate look, the poor boy replied, "Me tell Massa, me tell the Great Massa." "Tell the Great Massa," replied the master; "what do you mean?" "Me tell the Great Massa, the Lord in heaven, that my massa was angry with me, because I wanted to go and hear his word." The master was struck with astonishment, his color changed and unable to conceal his feelings, hastily turned away, saying: "Go along and hear the missionaries." Being thus permitted, the poor boy gladly went. In the mean time, the mind of the master became restless and uneasy. He had not been accustomed to think that he had a Master in heaven, who knew and observed all his actions; and he at length determined to follow his slave, and see if there could be any peace obtained for his troubled spirit. Creeping unobserved into a secret corner, he eagerly listened to the words of the missionary, who that day addressed the natives from St. John, xxi. 15. "Lovest thou me?" "Is there no poor sinner," said the misionary, "who can answer this question? not one poor slave, who loves Jesus Christ? no one, who dares to confess Him?" Here the poor slave boy unable to forbear any longer, sprang forward, and holding up both his hands, while the tears streaming down his cheeks, cried out with eagerness, "Yes, massa, me love the Lord Jesus Christ! me do love Him, me love Him, me love Him with all my heart." The master was still more astonished, and he went home convinced of the blessings which the gospel brings, and became a decided Christian.

Materials for Thought.

A Mite for the Poor.

Think of the wretched room,
Of the embers burning low—
Think of the scanty garb,
Of the child of want and wo:
Ye, whose bright cup of life
With wealth is running o'er,
Think of your brother man—
Relieve him from your store.

If the widow's humble mite
Received the Saviour's praise,
Shall not your gifts be blest
In these our later days?
Aye! every deed of love
Is a bright and sparkling gem,
To be wreathed by angel hands
In our heavenly diadem.

Origin of Negro Slavery.

Mr. Bancroft, in the first volume of his history of the United States, gives an account of the early traffic of the Europeans in slaves. In the middle ages the Venetians purchased white men and Christians, and others, and sold them to the Saracens in Sicily and Spain. In England, the Anglo-Saxon nobility sold their servants as slaves to foreigners. The Portuguese first imported negro slaves from Western Africa into Europe in 1442. Spain soon engaged in the traffic, and negro slaves abounded in some places of that kingdom. After America was discoved, the Indians of Hispaniola were imported into Spain and made slaves. The Spaniards visited the coast of North America, and kidnapped thousands of the Indians, whom they transported into slavery in Europe and the West Indies.

Columbus himself enslaved 500 native Americans, and sent them into Spain, that they might be publicly sold at Seville. The practice of selling North American Indians into foreign bondage continued for nearly two centuries. Negro slavery was first introduced into America by Spanish slaveholders, who emigrated with their negroes. A royal edict of Spain authorized negro slavery in America in 1503. King Ferdinand himself sent from Seville 50 slaves to labor in the mines. In 1511, the direct traffic in slaves between Africa and Hispaniola was enjoined by a royal ordinance. Las Cassas, who had seen the Indians vanish away like dew before the cruelties of the Spaniards, suggested the expedient that the negroes, who alone could endure severe toils, might be still further employed. This was in 1516. The mistaken benevolence of Las Cassus extended the slave trade which had been previously established.

Sir John Hawkins was the first Englishman that engaged in the slave trade. In 1652 he transported a large cargo of Africans to Hispaniola. In 1567 another expedition was prepared, and Queen Elizabeth protected and shared in the traffic. Hawkins, in one of his expeditions, set fire to an African city, and out of 8000 inhabitans succeeded in seizing 260. James Smith, of Boston, and Thos. Keyser, first brought upon the colonies the guilt of participating in the African slave trade. In 1645 they imported a cargo of negroes from Africa.

Throughout Massachusetts the cry of justice was raised against them as malefactors and murderers; the guilty men were committed for the offence, and the representatives of the people ordered the negroes to be restored to their native country at the public charge. At the latter period there were both Indian and negro slaves in Massachusetts. In 1620 a Dutch ship entered James River, and landed 20 negroes for sale. This is the introduction of negro slavery in Virginia. For many years the Dutch were principally concerned in the slave trade in the market of Virginia.

In Mexico, the prevailing feeling is, that the infant, when baptized, cannot die too soon. The death of young children is celebrated as an occasion of joyfulness, because the souls of the deceased innocents are supposed to be transported at once to heaven, without passing through purgatory.

Mir Hussain, the Enigmatist, was a man of superlative talents. His conundrums and riddles were beyond all competition. His whole time was spent in devising them. He was a humble, unpretending man! How usefully employed!

A CHILD'S EVENING THOUGHTS.

Now I lay me down to sleep,
Have I tried through all the day
Free from sin my thoughts to keep,
And my steps in Wisdom's way?
No! my sinful feet have trod
Far from holiness and God—
How then can I lay my head
Peacefully upon my bed?

I give my soul to Christ to keep—
With his wondrous love and grace
He can lead his erring sheep
Back into the fold of peace;
Vile and wretched though I am
I may ask through his dear name,
Pardon for each wrong and sin,
And lie down with conscience clean.

If I should die before I wake—
O solemn thought! I must lie down
Forever in the burning lake
Or wear an Angel's glorious crown!
If that tremendous hourie near
How shall I in His sight appear,
Before whom not the Heavens are clean,
With all my dreadful load of sin?

I pray the Lord my soul to take;
Though poor and worthless in His eye,
Still for my blest Redeemer's sake
He will accept the sacrifice.
O Jesus! since the way to God
Is open'd by Thy precious blood,
Living or dying, let me be
Thine own through all eternity.

October 31, 1847. ANNA.

The Rail-road is Gambling.

We have just been reading a story which illustrates the perfect infatuation of the confirmed gambler more clearly than any other facts we are acquainted with. A Mr. Potter, according to this account, was the owner of one of the best estates in the county of Northumberland, in England, and in less than twelve months he lost the whole of it at the gaming table. But this was not all.

The last night of his career, when he had just perfected the wicked work, and was just stepping down stairs to throw himself into his carriage, which waited at the door of a well-known house, he suddenly went back into the room where his friends were assembled, and insisted that the person he had been playing with should give him one chance of recovery, or fight with him. His rational proposition was this: that his carriage the trinkets and loose money in his pocket, his town-house, plate and furniture, should be valued in a lump, at a certain sum, and be thrown for at a single cast. No persuasion could prevail on him to depart from his purpose: he threw and lost. He conducted the winner to the door, told his coachman that was his master, and heroically marched forth, without house, home or any creditable source of support.

He retired to an obscure lodging in a cheap part of the town subsisting partially on charity, sometimes acting as the substitute of a marker at a billiard-table. In this miserable condition, with nakedness and famine staring him in the face, exposed to the taunts and insults of those whom he had once supported, he was recognized by an old friend, who gave him ten guineas to purchase necesaries.

He expended five, in procuring decent apparel; with the remaining five, repaired to a common gaming-house, and increased them to fifty; he then joined his former associates, and won twenty thousand pounds. Returning next night, he lost it all and, after existing many years in abject and sordid penury, died a ragged beggar, at a penny lodging house.

"Well, you will never catch me making such a fool of myself," says one of our young friends. We sincerely hope we never shall, sir. But this matter of gambling is very bewitching. After a person has formed a taste for gambling, he is little better than a crazy man, Gambling is almost insanity; and when a man is under its influence, his judgement has very little control over his actions. He will risk everything on the throw of the dice. "I know that, but I have never formed such a taste." Not exactly; still you were seen betting the other day, and some time ago you played a game or two for some pennies, did you not?

Besides, you love to to look on and see other people play for money, and you take some little interest in horse-racing. You had better keep a sharp look out. You are pretty near the railroad to gambling, and if you once get into one of the cars, there is no knowing where you will stop. Take care in season. It will not do much good to warn you after you get on board. So we do it now. There is nothing like taking time by the forelock, as the old saw has it.—Youth's Cabinet.

Accidents.

Elijah S. Coburn, of Dubuque, Iowa, for some time a printer in the Advertiser office at Rock Island, met with a tragical end on the 23d ultimo. In attempting to excavate some mineral lying beneath some overhanging rocks, they were started from their foundation and fell in upon him crushing him instantly to death.

The Prairie Fire.—The St. Louis Republican, speaking of the desolating fires in Washington County, Iowa, says some of the best and wealthiest farmers have had their fences, houses, barns, stacks of grain, and every thing belonging to them destroyed by the raging fires of the prairies, which, sweeping over the long and dry grass, carried every thing before them. The usual precautions against such a calamity were neglected, and hence the loss of property is estimated at $60,000.

Dreadful Accident—Two Lives Lost.–A dreadful accident occurred yesterday, at Walker's Brewery, on Sycamore near Abigail street, Cincinnati. Five workmen were engaged in removing the frame work from beneath a newly constructed arch, and as they were removing the last of the timbers the arch gave way, crushing them to death!—the other two barely escaping with their lives.

The names of the unfortunate victims, were John Alves, and John Bradberry, Carpenters; and John Patterson, brick-mason.—Chronicle.

ANNIVERSARY OF THE POLISH REVOLUTION.—The Polish exiles in New York city, on Monday, joined in religious services in St. Andrews' church, in commemoration of the events of the Polish revolution in 1830, of which that day was the seventeenth anniversary.

A HUMAN CURIOSITY.—Mr. Chase, the United States Consul at the Cape of Good Hope, has lately returned to Boston, and has brought with him a specimen of the tribe, or, as some people would call it, species, of Bosjesman or Bushman. The people of this name are said to be an intervening link between the human and the animal, and are always dwarfs, exhibiting more of the man than any other species, and yet something more of the monkey or ape than of the man. It is a boy about 12 years old.

SHOCKING MURDER.—We give below, from the Maysville Eagle, of Thursday last, the particulars of a horrid affair which took place at Sharpsburg, Bath, county, Ky., a few days ago:

"On Monday last, Mr. J. C. Robinson, principal Teacher of the Academy at that place, felt compelled—in consequence of a rebellious disregard of the laws of his school, coupled with insulting language when reproved for it—to expell from the school a son of Dr. M. G. Ashby, 16 or 17 years old. Young Ashby vowed revenge, and calling on one of his comrades, a young man named Crouch, to aid him, procured a long-bladed knife for the occasion. On Tuesday afternoon, while Robinson was locking his school-room door, he was set upon by Ashby and Crouch and defended himself as well as he could with an umbrella, until he saw his opportunity and seizing a stone, with which he felled Crouch.—Crouch, however, regained his feet, and jointly with Ashby closed on Robinson, when the latter received a horrible gash with the knife in the right part of the stomach, and staggered. A man named Christian heard of the difficulty, and ran up just in time to catch Robinson in his arms, who exclaimed, 'I am a dead man,' and instantly expired.

"The guilty young men immediately made their escape, and when our informant left on Wednesday afternoon, he had heard of no efforts being made to arrest them. Mr. R. married in this city some 18 months ago, while a resident of Gallipolis, Ohio, whence he removed last May to Sharpsburg."

DAMAGE AT HARPER'S FERRY.—During the late flood in the Potomac and Shenandoah rivers, at Harper's Ferry, most of the houses on Shenandoah street were inundated, and their occupants put to the inconvenience of removing from the lower to the upper stories. The Spirit of Jefferson says:

The loss to the government by the overflow of most of the shops in the low grounds at Harper's Ferry is somewhat considerable, and many of the workmen have been seriously interrupted in consequence. We have learned but few facts in connection with the flood in our own region, but it is the general impression that along both the Potomac and Shenandoah a heavy loss has been experienced. We regret to learn that the fine wooden factory of Jobe & Co., in this county, suffered considerable damages by the flood.

QUEER CHICKENS.—Much curiosity was excited in the Lower Market yesterday, by a cage of Polish chickens, which were sold at one dollar per pair. They were larger than the common fowl, black and white, and all marked by a large top-knot of spreading black and white feathers.—This climate is favorable to their propagation and it will not be long before they will become abundant.—Cin. Com.

HURT.—Mr. A. Aston, of Zanesville, in this State, was badly hurt, in New street, last evening, by a brick which fell from a chimney, striking him on the head. The flesh was cloven to the skull, and his nose, just below the eyes, severed. He is now under medical care.—Cin. Com.

THE PRESS IN ROME.—The Washington Union has been refreshed with the sight of a paper from Rome—the Roman Advertiser of Oct. 16. It is printed in English every Saturday evening, with its motto from Byron:

"The fount at which the panting mind assuages
Her thirst of knowledge, quaffing there her fill,
Flows from the eternal source of Rome's imperial hill."

The press thrives under the auspices of Pope Pius, IX, with every liberal institution, and it turns naturally to him to lay its best offerings at his feet. Its columns are filled with the beneficent acts which he is performing.

SLAVE CASE—Driskill vs Parish.—In this action which has been for sometimes pending in the U. S. circuit Court, a verdict in favor of the plaintiff was rendered on the 23d inst. It is an action brought by the plaintiff, a citizen of Kentucky, against the defendant, a citizen of Ohio, to recover of the penalty of $500 for harboring and concealing two fugitive slaves. The verdict rendered for the full penalty. The gentleman from whom we derive our information states that the proof in the case on the part of the plaintiff was not very clear—that the judge charged that in such a case the claimant must be held to strict proof—and that the verdict of the jury in view of these facts, excited considerable surprise.—Cin. Chron.

GERMAN CATHOLIC SECEDERS.—The Newark N. J. Advertiser, gives an interesting account of the Secession of a German Society at that place, on the 22d inst.

The venerable Dr. Milledoler and Rev'd Professor Tappan, of New York, were present as a delegation from the American Protestant Society. The Seceders with their families and friends in attendance, were about 200 in number. After an earnest address from Mr. Glustinian, in English and another from a recently converted Roman priest, the Seceders stood up and gave their audible assent, to a formal renunciation of the Church of Rome, and expressed their adoption of the leading doctrines of the Protestant faith.

One of the fifty-eight seceders, in the name of the rest, presented a German Bible to their pastor, and receive from him a pledge, that he would preach nothing but the truth as therein contained.

The services which were protracted and impressive, were closed by an address from Milledoler, and the Apostolic benediction in German by him.

THE PAY OF THE FIRST CONGRESS.—The Continental Congress met on the 10th of May, 1775; the number of members was 64. At this session, a member appeared from St. John's parish, Ga., and afterwards the Colony of Georgia sent an entire delegation. Each colony paid its own delegation. New Hampshire allowed to each all expenses. a servant, two horses, and a guinea a day; Massachusetts, expenses and three dollars a day; Rode Island and Maryland, forty shillings a day; with nothing for expenses; Pennsylvania, twenty shillings a day and expenses; Virginia, a half Johannes per day; North Carolina £500 per annum; South Carolina £300 per annum; Georgia, £100 per month while in session.

We have found the Reason why our Western subscribers pay so promptly for their papers. The Rochester American explains it thus:

"It is a part and parcel of the "common law" of Illinois and Wisconsin, that the farmers should pay for their papers out of the first load of wheat they bring to market after harvest.

CURIOUS FACTS.

The Maiden, an instrument by which criminals are beheaded in Scotland, was introduced into that country by Earl Morton, and he was the first person who suffered by it; M. Guillotine, a French surgeon, who gave his name to an improvement of the Maiden, died also by his own invention; and Deacon Brodie, who was executed about thirty years age for robbing the Excise-office in edinburgh, and who really was a man of very genteel birth, and in his manners more of the Macbeth than any body that appeared for the last fifiy years—this gay deacon of the carpenter of Edinburgh, invented the drop by which all criminals now suffer in Britian; and strange to say, he was the first man who was hanged on his own commodious gallows.

PROSPECTUS

For the Congressional Globe and Appendix

WE issue this Prospectus to apprise the public of renewed preparations on our part to publish the CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE and APPENDIX for the approaching session, and to invite subscriptions. The two Houses having contracted with us for the work, on such terms as enable us now to make complete reports, to multiply and issue the numbers in quicker succession than heretofore, and without increasing the price to subscribers, we hope to make a good return for the liberality and high official sanction thus bestowed on the publication. We shall increase the volume at least one-third beyond the ordinary bulk, and endeavor to add to its usefulness by extending still further its large circulation.

This last is not the least important point in the view of Congress. Faithful and durable reports of the debates of the body are of value in proportion to the extent of their circulation among the people. It is in this way that Congress is brought into the presence of its remote constituents—that it obtains easy access and holds communication with them from day to day, and renders the government really representative.

Having received from all parties in Congress the strongest marks of approbation and confidence, in the liberal means and permanent contract voted to continue the work, we shall not be found wanting in the impartiality and industry necessary to the due fulfilment of the engagement on our part. The next session will task to the utmost the best efforts of those connected with the undertaking. It will be distinguished by discussions of extraordinary interest and results of abiding concern. The war, its origin and conduct by officers in the cabinet and in the field, will furnish subjects of profound inquiry and consideration. The terms of peace, the disposition to be made of conquests, the consequences to be drawn from all that has been done, as affecting parties in this country, and especially as bearing on the approaching presidential election, will open up novel and powerfully operating discussions, rendering the councils at Washington during the next year as pregnant of good or evil to this continent as those of Rome were to the Old World in the days of her early energy. Such a field for deliberation and action was never presented to any previous Congress. All that has transpired, or may hereafter transpire before the close of the approaching session of Congress, in New Mexico, California, in the capital of Mexico, and the provinces still dependant on it, will come under the consideration of the next Congress. Its debates will contain the history of the war, and its action determine its results, whether they be decided by arms or diplomacy. And whatever is developed concerning this vast and interesting matter on the floor of Congress or in the Executive messages, will be found recorded in the CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE & APPENDIX.

The Congressional Globe is made up of the daily proceedings of the two Houses of Congress, and printed on superfine double royal paper, with small type, (brevier and nonpareil,) in quarto form, each number nontaining sixteen royal quarto pages. The speeches of the members, in this first form, are condensed—the full report of the prepared speeches being reserved for the APPENDIX. All resolutions, motions, and other proceedings, are given in the form of the Journals, with the yeas and nays on every important question.

Every member will have an opportunity to read his remarks before they are put to press, and alter our report if he shall think it incorrect.

The APPENDIX is made up of the President's annual message, the reports of the principal officers of the government that accompany it, & all speeches of members of Congress, written out or revised by themselves. It is printed in the same form as the Congressional Globe, and usually makes about the same No. of pages during the session.

During the first month or six weeks of a session, there is rarely more business done than will make two numbers a week—one of the Congressional Globe and one of the Appendix; but during the remainder of a session, there is usually sufficient matter for two or three Nos. of each every week. The next session will be unusually interesting; therefore, we calculate that the Congressional Globe and Appendix together will make near 3,000 large quarto pages, printed in small type—brevier and nonpareil. We furnish complete indexes to both at the end of a session.

We will endeavor to print a sufficient number of surplus copies to supply all that may be miscarried, or lost in the mails; but subscribers should be very particular to file their papers carefully, for fear that we should not be able to supply all the lost numbers.

We have a few surplus copies of the Congressional Globe for the last session of Congress, which we will sell for the original supscription price—$1 a copy. We have no surplus copies of the Appendix for that session.

TERMS.

For one copy of the Congression Globe, - - $2 00
For one copy of the Appendix - - - - 2 00
For six copies of either, or part of both - - 10 00

Proprietors of newspapers who copy this prospectus before the first day of December, and send us one copy of their paper containing it, marked around with a pen to direct our attention to it, shall have their names entered on our books for one copy of the Congressional Globe and Appendix during the session.

Our prices for these papers are so low that we cannot afford to credit them out. Therefore, no person need consume time in writing for them, unless the money accompanies the order.

Subscriptions should be here by the 13th December, at farthest, to ensure all the numbers.

SERMON,

PREACHED AT ELDERSVILLE, PENNSYLVANIA;

BY REV. WM. REEVES.

[Published by request of a public meeting.]

Philipians iv: 3. And I intreat thee also, true yokefellow, help those women which laboured with me in the gospel.

(Concluded.)

(2.) The next passage in support of the position before us, is, 1 Tim. v: 9, 10. 'Let not a widow be taken into the number under threescore years old, having been the wife of one man, well reputed of for good works; if she have brought up children, if she have lodged strangers, if she have washed the saints' feet, if she have relieved the afflicted, if she have diligently followed every good work.' Here, again, we choose rather to let learned men comment, whose authority may have weight with the reader, than to offer remarks of our own. Once more then, let us hear what Dr. Clarke says. Upon the passage just cited, we quote him but in part. On verse 9, he remarks: 'Let her not be taken into the list of those for which the church must provide. But some think that the apostle means the list of those who were deaconesses in the church; and that no widow was to be admitted into that rank who did not answer to the following character.' And on verse 10, the Doctor discourses thus: 'The widow indeed, may mean a person who was to be employed in some office in the church; and Timothy is enjoined not to take any into that office, unless she had been before remarkable for piety and humanity. Some think that the widows of whom the apostle speaks, had been deaconesses, and wished now to be taken on what might be termed the superannuated list:—and the apostle lays down rules for the admission of such: The sum of which is, Let none come on this superannuated list, unless she be at least sixty years of age, and can bring proof of her having conscientiously discharged the office and duty of a deaconess.' Omitting the remarks of Doctor Macknight upon this passage, we will transcribe part of what he says upon Titus ii: 3: 'The aged women likewise, that they be in behavior as becometh holiness, not false accusers, not given to much wine, teachers of good things.' Now, here the Doctor translates. 'That aged women, in like manner, BE in deportment as becometh sacred persons.'.....and 'good teachers.' And he says, 'These characters, especially the last mentioned, did not belong to aged women in general, but only to such of them as were employed in teaching.' Finally, here, the Doctor considers that 1 Timothy, v: 12, 'Having damnation, because they have cast off their first faith,' refers to their 'plighting their faith at taking the (ministerial) office'!

To our own mind, the scope, and design of the apostle in these passages, sufficiently evidence the fact, that female ministers were meant, and not the wives of 'deacons' or 'elders.' For, 'without controversy,' it was a sen'r. apostolic minister, writing to jun'r. ministers, respecting the office, qualifications, deportment, and support, of ministers!! The whole is ministerial, and refers to ministers; and lay-women are no more included or intended, than lay-men. But, for the benefit of the reader, it is well to sustain what may be regarded as singular sentiments, by learned and accredited authority. And this, it is believed, is sufficiently done.

And now what more shall we say? For the time would fail us to speak of the many living witnesses to the truth, that in these latter days, the Lord has poured out his spirit upon the churches, and not a few of the daughters of spiritual Israel have been constrained to 'prophesy;' and many of the 'handmaidens' of the Lord, in different places, have been led by the spirit to 'speak good of his name.'—Had not the matter multiplied on our hands, far beyond expectation, we might have gone into the enumeration of the many hundreds of female preachers belonging to nearly a dozen different denominations, in Europe and America. It is said by an author in England, who had had great opportunity of knowing, that, 'There cannot be less than two thousand female preachers in the land.' And if there are so many there, is it not probable that there are some hundreds in America? Many of these are among—not only the brightest lights of the age, in point of pulpit talents, and persuasive oratory; but also among the most successful agents, in bringing souls to Christ. And the 'Wise man' testifies that 'He that winneth souls is wise.' Farther—some of the most useful male ministers, in different churches, not excepting the English Hierarchy, gladly own that they are among the fruits of evangelical female preaching. And, doubtless, millions of immortal spirits will have cause to bless God to all eternity, that he ever gave the spirit of prophesy to women!! And will all this weigh nothing on the minds of our opponents? If they will not be persuaded, one thing is certain, viz: that their unbelief cannot make the truth of God of none effect.

PROP. X. We propose to answer some of the most prominent and important objections, which have been urged against the doctrine sustained in this sermon.

Objections are frequently urged against a doctrine, from the convenience of that mode of opposition. For it is often far easier to raise an objection to a proposition, than to answer the arguments, or disprove the facts, adduced in its support. And when a doctrine has been demonstrated to be true, no objection can be valid; for this simple and sufficient reason, that truth is universally and invariably consistent with itself. But objections to propositions which have been amply sustained, may have great apparent weight, and unless they are answered, may prevent the mind of those who urge them, from receiving conviction from the evidence adduced during the discussion of the subject in dispute. So that objections which are evidently offered from sincerity of intention and belief, should be fairly met and fully answered. Sometimes, however, objections may be too trifling in themselves, to merit a formal and serious reply. Or it may be apparent that they issue from a prejudice and obstinacy which preclude the hope of conviction, let their fallacy be ever so clearly exposed. And in such cases, the candid reader will not impeach the motive of the writer, if he passes them by in their deserved silence. And on few subjects are objections of this class more common, than the one before us. We have heard some alleged, which would degrade the subject to notice them. Query: When an opponent stops to argue low and indecent objections to a doctrine, or proposition strongly fortified with facts and arguments, is not his own incapacity to reply, evident even to himself? And our own ears have heard remarks of that character, fall from lips which professionally were accustomed to higher and holier expressions: and this, it appeared, rather than acknowledge they had been in error. When argument has failed, degenerate wit has been used as a dernier resort, and in a style too, at times, bordering hard on obscenity, like a neutralizing acid, to destroy the force of evidence, and raise a laugh against the reason they could not answer. Of such wit, and of a similar use of it, Dr. Young speaks, in his admirable work, called "The Centaur not Fabulous." We will borrow a few of his pertinent remarks upon the subject. He says: 'What may silence wisdom, will but provoke wit, whose ambition it is to say most where least is to be said. You may as well attempt to silence an echo by strength of voice, as a wit by the force of reason. They both are but the louder for it: they both will have the last word.'———But there are some objections with seeming feasibility, based upon passages of Scripture, and urged against the doctrine avowed in this discourse, with evident sincerity of mind, and scrupulosity of conscience. These we take pleasure in noticing; and we hope with equal honesty of purpose and integrity of heart, though with different views.

1. Objection. Founded upon 1 Cor., xiv: 34, 35: 'Let your women keep silence in the churches: for it is not permitted unto them to speak; but they are commanded to be under obedience, as also saith the law. And if they will learn any thing, let them ask their husbands at home: for it is a shame for women to speak in the church.' From this passage it has been objected (1.) That there is a constitutional difference recognized between man and woman, and that according to the law of God. Answer [1.] Originally there was a 'constitutional difference' of physical refinement, and that in her favor. Still she was to be neither a monarch nor a slave. It is said in Gen. ii: 21, 22: 'And the Lord God caused a deep sleep to fall upon Adam, and he slept: and he took one of his ribs, and closed up the flesh instead thereof. And the rib which the Lord God had taken from man, made he a women, and brought her unto the man.' Upon this text the justly admired Matthew Henry, remarks: 'Yet man being made last of the creatures, as the best and most excellent of all, Eve's being made after Adam, and out of him, puts an honor upon that sex, as the glory of the man, 1 Cor., xi: 7. If man is the head, she is the crown; a crown to her husband, the crown of the visible creation. The man was dust refined, but the woman was dust double refined, one remove farther from the earth.' Again Mr. H. remarks, 'That the woman was made of a rib out of the side of Adam; not made out of his head to top him, nor out of his feet to be trampled upon by him, but out of his side to be equal with him, under his arm to be protected, and near his heart to be beloved.' [2.] But the passage in the apostle, refers to 'the law' of God, consequent upon the apostacy of the first pair. Gen. iii: 16. 'Unto the woman he said, I will greatly multiply thy sorrow, and thy conception: in sorrow thou shalt bring forth children; and thy desire shall be to thy husband, and he shall rule over thee.' The marginal note clearly explains the import of this sentence, which is—'thy desire shall be subject to thy husband.' 'She is here put into a state of subjection; the whole sex, which by creation, was equal with man, is, for sin, made inferior, and forbidden to usurp authority. 1 Tim., ii: 11, 12.' M. Henry. And most unquestionably this is the very state the apostle Paul is so careful to mark in his epistles. We have already had this subject before us, in the eleventh chapter of this epistle, where the direction is given to the man, to have his 'head uncoverd' when he prophesieth: and to the woman, to have her 'head covered,' when she prophesieth. The badges of dominion and subjection of the respective sexes, especially in the public assembly, must not through any freak of fancy, or to imitate the heathen priests and priestesses, be laid aside. But let both sexes observe due decorum in their social exercises, that the cause of Christ be not liable to just reproach. On this phrase in the passage, 'But to be under obedience, as also saith the law,' says Dr. Clarke, 'This is a reference to Gen. iii: 16. Thy desire shall be to thy husband, and he shall rule over thee. From this, it is evident, that it was the disorderly and disobedient that the apostle had in view; and not any of those on whom God had poured out his Spirit.

(2.) The chief objection to female preaching is generally based upon the injunction of silence in the churches here imposed upon the women. "Let your women keep silence in the churches: for it is not permitted unto them to speak." Do they not violate this rule of Scripture when they preach? For how can they preach and not "speak?" This objection is specious, but not sound. And as it is one of the strongest objections urged against the doctrine we advocate, let us answer it at some length. And [1.] Did all the passages we have adduced in proof of the Bible authority for female preaching, amount to no more than probable testimony, ought not the passage introduced to destroy the force of them, be clear and certain? For is it reasonable that one passage alleged to contain probable evidence against a proposition, should have power to invalidate a multitude of passages, containing at least as strong probable testimony in favor of it? For the sake of argument then, for a moment, grant that all the texts which have been brought forward, to prove female preaching to be in accordance with the Scriptures, contain nothing more than probable evidence in its behalf; and grant also, for the same object, on the other hand, that this specious passage does contain probable testimony against our doctrine;—even in that case, we ask, ought not the many to govern the few? Or shall one probable passage, govern the many probable ones?—[2.] But we by no means admit that this text contains par-excellent probability against us. And for this sufficient reason, that there is not one word forbidding the Christian women in the Corinthian Church, from praying or propesying! Mark that! And if not one text of Scripture can be adduced, which expressly prohibits women engaging in the exercises of praying and prophesying, is it reasonable we should give up all those which expressly admit of it? Nay more. For we have seen from prophecy, that in the days of the Messiah, they "shall prophecy." And that this gift of the Spirit shall continue thro' the Christian dispensation. That they did so prophesy for centuries, and received the sanction of the Christian Church, in so doing. And now we are required, it seems, to give up all this certainly, for an uncertainty! Nay, verily, this demand is too great.—[3.] And if this notable passage, so commonly cited as proof against female preaching, while it does not expressly prohibit women prophesying, if it be construed to mean that, (&if not, why use it to oppose us?) then we make the apostle Paul flatly contradict himself! For we have before seen that St. Paul, in chap. xi: 5. &c.,—not only recognizes their authority to prophesy, but actually gives them directions how they shall appear in public, when they thus officiate! So that the interpretation which construes this passage to signify a prohibition of women to prophesy, must be erroneous. For the sacred writer in both places wrote as he was "moved by the Holy Spirit," and the spirit of God must always be consistent: therefore the apostle cannot forbid women to prophesy in one place, and sanction it in another! The conclusion, then, appears inevitable, that the objection to female preaching, based upon this passage, cannot stand.—[4.] But what then, is the obvious signification of the passage under consideration, "Let your women keep silence in the churches: for it is not permitted unto them to speak?" Answer (1.) Either in the ecclesiastical government of the "Churches." There—in the legislative, judicial and executive departments, let the "women keep silence." Or, (2.) As some others explain, that, while women were allowed to "prophesy"—or to speak to the "edification" of their own sex, especially as the customs of the Greeks and Asiatics precluded the presence of the male ministers from female society; they were, nevertheless, "not permitted" to officiate publicly, before the whole "church," which often, of course, was composed of both sexes. This appears to be the opinion of many learned Divines and Commentators, of different denominations.—(3.) Wesley, (and some others have followed him in this,) interprets this text to mean, that, in general women were "not permitted" to speak in public. But owns that God may make exceptions to this general rule, and occasionally call a woman into the work of the ministry. And actually places women in the ministry of the word, upon the same footing with lay-preachers, and Methodism! See his epistle in reply to Miss Bosanquet on the subject. Miss Bosanquet closed her letter to Mr. Wesley with the following: "6th Objection. But all these were extraordinary calls; sure you will not say, yours is an extraordinary call? Answer. If I did not believe so, I would not act in an extraordinary manner. I praise God—I feel him near—and I prove his faithfulness every day.

I am, &c., M. B."

The following is the answer of Mr. Wesley.

Londonderry, June 13th, 1771.

"My Dear Sister,—I think the strength of the cause rests here, in your having an extraordinary call; so I am persuaded has every one of our Lay-preachers; otherwise I could not countenance his preaching at all. It is plain to me, that the work of God, termed Methodism, is an extraordinary dispensation of HIS providence. Therefore I do not wonder, if several things occur therein, which do not fall under the ordinary rules of discipline. St Paul's ordinary rule was, 'I permit not a woman to speak in the congregation,' yet in extraordinary cases, he made a few exceptions; at Corrinth in particular.

I am, my dear Sister,

Your affectionate Brother,

J. WESLEY."

Upon the above, a certain writer makes the following remarks:—"Sixteen years after the receipt of this letter, he, at the head of the Manchester Conference, ordained (so to speak) Miss Mallett as a preacher in the connexion, which will convince the most sceptical that he had nothing like a scruple on his mind in regard of its being scriptural."——And to this we append the following remark, namely, that, if "the strength of the cause rests here," that a woman must receive an "extraordinary" call to preach the Gospel, equally so with 'Lay-preachers," and as 'providential' as 'Methodism;' then, as long as 'Lay-preachers,' and 'Methodism' continue, so long may women have a call sufficiently 'strong' and 'extraordinary,' to authorize them to preach the Gospel. Beloved Sisters in the vineyard of the Lord, then, all hail! And, as messengers of mercy, to our lost and ruined race, we may say to you, in your labors of love, Go on! Go on! and may the Most High crown your efforts with abundant success. (4.) Once more on this point,—and which we believe is the correct exposition of the passage: St. Paul here refers to a custom among the Jews, of admitting debates, challenging the public speaker 'asking questions,' &c., in the synagogue. This liberty was granted unto the men, but it was not permitted unto the women' thus 'to speak in the churches!' It was thought indecorous for women to be engaged in public altercation with speakers of the other sex. So that in regard to any question under discussion, it was not considered disorderly for a man to stop the speaker, by 'asking questions,' or disputing the point with him instanter, in the synagogue; but St. Paul, it seems, as well as the Jews, (and doubtless he has the spirit of God,) deemed such a course in women, to be indecorous: and directed that, 'if they would learn any thing' [more] upon such questions, 'let them ask their husbands at home: for it is a shame' [and would be so considered now by us] 'for women to speak' [in such a way] 'in the churches,' in our day.—[5] And the entire internal evidence, both of the text and context, proves that the apostle had this in view, viz: The correction of disorder in the church, and not the positive and universal prohibition of female exercise in prophesying. This we have before shewn, at length; and need now only refer to a few verses of the connexion, with the passage itself, for proof of what we say. The internal evidence of the text itself is a sufficient refutation of the objection, and a strong confirmation of the exposition we have given of it. Let us see. 'And if they learn any thing, let them ask their husbands at home.' Now observe it does not say, and if they will teach or prophesy, let them do it 'at home.' But if they will 'learn' any thing! Candidly and honestly, how can that apply to teaching? Is it not the hearer which 'learns,' and not the teacher? Again: 'let them ask their husbands:' does not this obviously refer to questioning, and not to 'prophesying? And let them ask their 'husbands,' & not stop the public speaker! And ask them 'at home,' and not 'in the church!' Is it not plainly written in the very face of their chief-text itself, as with a sunbeam, that our opponents are wrong in their construction of the passage, and we are right? So much for the internal evidence of the text. Next the context. Let any person attentively read verses 23, 26, in proof that disorder existed in the Corinthian church. Next, verses 27—30, for the correction of the disorder. Then, verses 31—33, for the reasons or grounds of the correction. And then surely, he will see with us, the obvious import of the apostle in the passage, and conclude with St. Paul, ver. 40, "Let all things be done decently and in order."

Finally, upon this objection, and this passage of scripture, it affords us no small pleasure to be fortified in the above exegetical view of the subject, by so great and good a man as Dr. A. Clarke. We have made a liberal use of his learned labors during this discussion; and once more let us hear him comment upon this question. Upon ver. 34: 'Let your women keep silence in churches,' the Dr. thus discourses: 'This was a Jewish ordinance: women were not permitted to teach in the assemblies, or even to ask questions. The rabbins taught, that 'a woman should know nothing but the use of her distaff.' And the saying of Rabbi Eliezer, as delivered, Bammidbar Rabba, sect. 9. fol. 204, are both worthy of remark and execration; they are these, ... yesrepha dibrey Lorah veal yemsaru lenashin—'Let the words of the Law be burned, rather than that they should be delivered to women.' [Is there not a kindred spirit breathing in some of our christian rabbins? And wherever found, does it not deserve our 'execration,' rather than our sympathy? But the Dr. proceeds:—]

'This was their condition till the time of the Gospel, when, according to the prediction of Joel, the Spirit of God was to be poured on the women as well as the men, that they might prophesy, i. e. teach. And that they did prophesy or teach is evident from what the apostle says, chap. xi: 5. where he lays down rules to regulate this part of their conduct, while ministering in the church.

But does not what the apostle says here contradict that statement; and shew that the words in chap. xi: should be understood in another sense? For, here it is expressly said, that they should keep silence in the church: for it was not permitted to a woman to speak? Both places seem perfectly consistent. It is evident, from the context, that the apostle refers here to asking questions, and what we call dictating, in the assemblies. It was permitted to any man to ask questions, to object, altercate, attempt to refute, &c., in the synagogue; but this liberty was not allowed to any woman: St. Paul confirms this, in reference also to the Christian Church; he orders them to keep silence: and if they wished to learn any thing, let them enquire of their husbands at home; because it was perfectly indecorous for women to be contending with men in public assemblies, on points of doctrine, cases of conscience, &c. But this by no means intimated that, when a woman received any particular influence from God, to enable her to teach, that she was not to obey that influence: on the contrary, she was to obey it, and the apostle lays down directions in chap. xi: for regulating her personal appearance when thus employed. All that the apostle opposes here, is their questioning, finding fault, &c., in the Christian Church as the Jewish men were permitted to do in their synagogues; together with the attempt to usurp any authority over the man, by setting up their judgment in opposition to them: for the apostle had in view, especially, acts of disobedience, arrogance, &c., of which no woman would be guilty who was under the influence of the Spirit of God.'

(3.) There has been one more objection based upon this passage; but which is so obviously futile, that a brief reply will be quite sufficient. Indeed, the previous ones, in our judgment, deserved not the amount of attention paid to them; but as they constitute the bulwarks of the opposition, to dispose of them in a summary and sententious way, probably would appear to be disrespectful. And as prejudice moves slowly from the mind, we are aware, to tarry some time on the argumentative way, perhaps, may be more successful. But on this one, it is presumed to be unnecessary. The objection referred to, is raised on the concluding phrase of this text; 'for it is a shame for women to speak in the church.' The objection founded here is this: 'It is a shame for a woman to speak in public, because it is a man's place to preach the Gospel. Answer. [1.] The objection is illogical; as it draws a negative from a positive. [2.] It is a pitiful begging of the question. That is, if it is meant, that it is 'man's place' alone to 'preach the Gospel.' And if that is not the meaning, then it is utterly devoid of force. So that in either view, it is a nullity.

Upon the whole, then, what is the real ground of difficulty in this so-thought proof-passage against the ministrations of women? Simply this: the admonition and correction of a few 'ignorant, and disorderly married women' in the church at Corinth! And this has been magnified into a believed-to-be immovable and impassable mountain against female preaching generally, and in a regular and orderly manner!! So that the correction of the abuse, has passed into the universal prohibition of the use of the gift of prophesy! at least, so far as one half of the church is concerned! Would our opponents be willing to apply the same rule to the other half? If it were so applied, would there be any longer a church on earth? What justice and equality for saints! and what logic for learned Divines! All the positive testimony, and of which there is an abundance, is set aside by one or two negative voices. What profound jurisprudence! All the clear and unambiguous passages of Scripture, containing direct declarations of propesy and of fulfilment, must give place to a text or two, neither of which is expressive of the sentiment at issue. What wise theology and correct Biblical exegesis! So far, therefore, from 1 Cor. xiv: 34, 35, forbidding women to prophesy or preach, as before proved, it is, in fact, one of the strongest, proof-passages we could desire, in favor of it. With this text of scripture alone, no friend of female preaching, need fear an opponent. And for this sufficient reason,—that the correction of the abuse of any gift of God, affords the strongest evidence imaginable for the authority of its proper use! And the internal, external, and collateral, evidences of the subject before us, demonstrate the fact, that St. Paul in this passage had the correction of certain disorderly women in the Corinthian Church in view, (and those, as Dr. Clarke observed,) who were not under the 'influence of the Spirit of God;' and not the orderly exercise of the prophetic gift, by those women upon whom the Lord had poured his Spirit: Therefore this passage so far from containing a prohibition of the ministrations of women, affords irrefragable confirmation of their authority to exercise those gifts, in an orderly and proper manner.

2. Objection, grounded upon 1 Tim. ii: 12. "But I suffer not a woman to teach, nor to usurp authority over the man, but to be in silence.' 'But to preach is to 'teach;' for how can a person preach without it? Is not teaching one of the chief parts of preaching? Therefore their text forbids a woman to preach.' Answer. (1.) This passage is manifestly parallel with 1 Cor. xiv: 34, 35, which has been examined above at length, and which see. —(2.) But should any person insist that the word 'teach' is to prophesy or preach, we remark [1.] That if such was the meaning of the apostle, then he undeniably gives positive direction for some women, at any rate, to prophesy or preach. For in his Epistle to Titus, ii: 3, he says, 'The aged women likewise, that they be in behavior as becometh holiness, not false accusers, not given to much wine, teachers of good things.' What! does the apostle Paul here say that 'aged women' should be preachers?! Is not that the very thing which we have before proved, that these 'aged women,' and 'sacred persons,' as Dr. Macknight calls them in his translation of the passage, were the ordained Deaconesses of the church? Well, then, our opponents are at length, granting us the ground for which we have been contending all through this discourse. Such opposition is surely grateful. [2.] But this interpretation would throw another difficulty in the way of the opposition: for, if the word 'teach,' in the text in Timothy, is tantamount to the word prophesy or preach, then is St. Paul himself involved in a palpable incongruity. For, according to that exposition, the inspired apostle, in his Epistle to Timothy, forbids a woman to preach. And in his Epistle to Titus, he expressly allows it! 'But,' say our objector, the apostle in Titus restricts the license to 'aged' women, and to 'good things.' Well; touching the first we have already shewn that deaconesses were referred to, and they were required to be of a certain age. Besides, that would be to yield the grand point of dispute, that women have authority to preach; and shift the question to the mere circumstance of the age proper for them. Secondly, and with regard to the other restriction confining them to preach 'good things,' we ask, when did we plead for the right of men or women, old or young, to preach evil things? Nay, is it not for the very best of all 'good things?' Is not the Gospel emphatically designated, 'Good news,' and 'Glad tidings?' And what better things could men or angels preach? (3.) The only consistent plan of interpretation then, appears to be, to refer this prohibitory passage to the disorderly kind of 'teaching,' or attempting to 'teach' or 'refute' the public speaker, by altercation and discussion 'in the church;' as we have noticed in the parallel in 1 Cor. xiv: 34, 35; and thereby stepping out of her proper place of subjection, and presuming 'to usurp authority over the man,' which is highly improper and forbidden.

3. It has been objected that, 'The apostles were men, and not women: therefore men and not women, ought to preach the Gospel now.' To which we reply, (1.) According to some learned men, all the apostles were not 'men.' For Matthew Henry says, on John xx: 17, of Mary, 'by whom' the message of the risen Savior was sent to the disciples, whom our Lord calls his 'brethren,' that 'she became an APOSTLE to the APOSTLES!!" And in Rom. xvi: 7, St. Paul salutes 'Andronicus and Junia,' who he says, were 'of note among the apostles.' And according to some of the best* Greek scholars, 'Junia' was a 'woman!' And the text, they say, should have been translated 'relatives' or 'kinsfolks.' Upon this passage Doctor Clarke remarks, 'Whether this intimates that they were noted apostles, or only highly reputed by the apostles, is not absolutely clear: but the latter appears to me the most probable.' So then it is not 'absolutely clear' but there may have been another 'female apostle,' and that a 'noted' one! But (2.) Admitting the truth of the objection, that the 'apostles were men,' &c., what then? For, strictly speaking, there are no 'apostles' now; for none have 'seen the Lord.' For, to have 'seen the Lord,' with the bodily eyes, after his resurrection, appears to have been regarded as an essential prerequisite to the apostolical office. See Acts, xxii: 14, 15.—xxvi: 16.—1 Cor. ix: 1. Hence in the case of St. Paul, a miraculous manifestation of the ascended Savior, was essential to qualify him for the apostolical office: and which led him to view himself, on that account, 'as one born out of due time!' Admitting the truth of the premise in this objection, the conclusion, is therefore, manifestly erroneous. Or do any of our clerical opponents claim to have thus 'seen the Lord?' And do they possess, the miracle-working power of the apostleship too? If they do, let them shew some of the 'signs' of their apostleship. But if not, why object to women preachers, because they are in the same predicament?—(3.) Answer, once more, that the 'apostles' were only one class of Gospel ministers.—1 Cor. xii: 28. 'And God hath set some in the church, first, apostles, secondarily, prophets, thirdly, teachers, after that miracles, then gifts of healings, helps, governments, diversities of tongues.' And because women preachers are not 'apostles,' therefore, our objectors would conclude that they are to fill no place in the ministry! Such is the reason, and such, it should seem, the revelation of those who thus object to female preaching.—Two points assumed in the above objection, and both notoriously untrue, to wit: the perpetuity of the office and powers of the apostolate; and the unity of class in the Gospel ministry. No sober-minded man believes the former, and the Pope of Rome, himself would disavow the latter. The assumption is double-limbed, and arrantly erroneous. We conclude with the apostle, in verse 29, 30. 'Are all apostles? are all prophets? are all teachers? are all workers of miracles? Have all the gifts of healing? Do all speak with tongues? do all interpret?' And will any of our opponents, rather than renounce their cherished prejudices against female preaching, face the apostle Paul, and reply in the affirmative? We will leave them to answer to God?

4. Another objection is based upon 1 Tim. ii: 11, 12, to wit: 'That ruling and preaching go together; but women have no right to either.' Answer. Having said so much upon this passage before, and its parallel, in 1 Cor. xiv: 34, 35, we need now only remark, (1.) That the first member of the objection takes it for granted, that all 'ministers,' necessarily are 'rulers;' and that, on the other hand, all church 'rulers' are ministers. Neither of which is in accordance with the real state of things. For proof of this statement, we refer first again, to 1 Cor. xii: 28, 29, which see at length. And we may ask, have all preachers the reigns of ecclesiastical 'government,' in their hands? And all bishops? Secondly to the polity of the very church, from one of whose ministers this objection issued. For there we find 'Ruling Elders' among the laity!!—(2.) And the second member of the objection, unfortunately for our objectors, is equally irrelevant to the point in dispute. For it assumes that the friends of female preaching, plead the rights of women to rule, which is not the fact, at least, with us. We wish all to know assuredly, that we do not advocate either political or ecclesiastical *gynecocracy. While we believe it to be a fact, as Dr. Dwight says, 'Women on thrones have generally excelled men in that station.' And if they can govern kingdoms and empires, surely they have capacity to preside in a society of Christians: yet it is not for this we plead. Nay, we consider 'government' as properly belonging to the other sex. And should it be assumed by any ministering women, we will join the opposition in condemning it, as subjecting those who do it, to the censure of the apostle, for 'usurping authority over the man.' But at present, seeing we actually are opposed to gynecocratical institutions, both in Church and State, the objection before us must fall to the ground. For it has no applicability either to us, or the cause we advocate. And as for the other feature in the face of the objection, that 'women have no right to preach,' (for it says, to 'either'—'ruling' or 'preaching,') we might be justified in meeting it with a converse statement, that women have a right to preach. But we add to that, that this objection is one of the weakest forms of begging the entire question in dispute: and we ask the author sincerely, to give the arguments in these pages a candid perusal, and we opine he will urge this objection no more.

5. One more objection we will briefly notice, 'The man is the woman's representative.' And, of course, the conclusion is, that she, therefore, should not appear in public, in propria persona. Answer, (1.) In the sense of our objectors, we unhesitatingly say, not so. But the 'man' is the 'representative' of 'God,' and the 'woman' is the 'representative' of 'man!' This we have seen before, during the discussion of another proposition, and need only cite 1 Cor. xi: 7, and let the reader judge for himself, whether the objector or we, are right. The apostle says, in the passage referred to, 'For a man indeed ought not to cover his head, forasmuch as he is the image & glory [or representative] of God: but the woman is the glory [or representative] of the man!!' Is it not strange that literary men and ministers of the Gospel, should offer such unsound or futile objections. And that they should present them to the public, without first carefully searching the Scriptures, to ascertain whether they are tenable or not. (2.) We remark, that in a legislative sense, there is truth in the objection; but then, in that sense, it lacks relevance: For we again aver our utter disavowal of the doctrine of gynecocracy, both in civil and religious society. Therefore this objection to the ministrations of women cannot stand.

Having thus noticed and answered the leading and strongest objections we have met with, against the doctrine of this discourse, minor ones, we pass by, as unworthy of attention.

And seeing that we are drawing the subject to a close, let us recapitulate, at least the substance of the propositions sustained in this discourse. We have shewn that there were prophetesses under the Old Testament dispensation. And that, in the Scriptures, the ministry of women is made the subject of prophesy and of fulfilment. Clear proof, we think, has been adduced that, under the influence of the Holy Spirit, many women did preach the Gospel after the day of Pentecost. Under this head, as the word 'prophesy' is used to express the idea of ministerial exercises, the word has been examined at length; and, it is hoped, and confidently believed, proved to mean preaching the Gospel,—by a host of various authors, of the most exalted reputation for learning and orthodox belief. That this point is settled beyond the reach of successful contradiction. Next we proceeded to exhibit the fact, that women continued to preach in the Christian church, long after the wonder-working power of miracles had ceased; and evidently intended by the Great Head of the church, to continue through the Christian dispensation.—Then endeavored to sustain the proposition, that women in our day, are held accountable to God for the improvement of their talents: and that many of them have talents for preaching the Gospel. Would it not seem that these points well established, would be sufficient to convince any candid mind, that women have authority to preach the Gospel. And that further labor would be useless. But we proceeded onward with the discussion; and, it is hoped, satisfactorily proved, that female preachers are as manifestly called of God to the work of the ministry, as male preachers. This to many is of vast importance. And of kindred consequence, at least in the estimation of the same people generally, is, to prove that they are regularly ordained. Even in this matter of prime importance, we have labored to meet the demand in full account of proof. So that our opponents shall have no real ground to adhere to their disbelief.—Furthermore, in addition to the collateral evidence it affords, in support of our main point, as many people appear to cherish a fondness for, and respect to, official titles, to designate the elevated standing of favored individuals, in community; that state of mind is met in the proposition, that female ministers are honored in the Scriptures with the same distinctive appellations, as the male ministers, and are saluted as such.—Then confirmed the whole, by showing that female preachers were not only noticed by the apostle Paul, but were also admitted and instructed by him as such. This fact also affords circumstancial evidence to confirm all direct and positive testimony adduced, during the discussion, in proof of the point, that the Scriptures do sanction the ministrations of women. And finally, the principal and most important objections, were taken up, fairly met; and we trust, in truth we may say, fully answered. Is it too much to say, then, after all the manifold and diversified proofs presented to the mind, in this discourse, that if the reader will not yet believe, argument on this subject, is powerless with him! At any rate, the writer may despair of convincing him. For he has long observed the truth of the maxim, 'Convince a man against his will; and he's of the same opinion still.' Yes, it is far easier to prove a proposition, than to persuade some people to believe it. Yet the writer hopes to convince some. And who ever convinced all? The Savior himself, not unfrequently, met with repulsive unbelief, and that among the Jews. And shall we expect success among all our own people? Is the servant above his Master? Neither do we denounce those who differ from us in regard to the doctrinal point in this discourse, as being insincere, or unworthy of Christian confidence. Far from it; for

* Chrysostom, Theophilact, &c.

* Petticoat government, female power.—WEBSTER.

we heartily believe that many great and good men, and ministers may, and do, understand the Scriptures differently. But we do think that, too often may be noticed an apparent unwillingness to yield to the force of evidence, when she directs a different course from that 'our fathers trod.' We do not censure the individual who holds a new theorem in doubt, till he has carefully examined the ground of its claim to his credence. But it is our decided conviction, that the person is reprehensible who refuses to investigate the merits of an important question, when it is timely mooted: or is uncandid in his decision, when he gives the subject a hearing. We believe that we all ought to be in a constant search of truth; and to cordially embrace it when found.

"Seize upon truth wherever found,
"On Christian or on Heathen ground;
"Among your friends, among your foes,
"The plant's divine where'er it grows."

Is the poet heretical? Shew it. If not, practice the precept. And do not the church and community, in our day, need the influence and help of female talents? Is not the present apathy in many churches, attributable, at least in part, to the fact, that the talents of one half of the members are buried or hid in their respective napkins? In this sentiment the writer has the concurrence of one of our oldest and most experienced ministers in the West. And that sentiment voluntarily presented as the result of his own extensive opportunity for observation! If this is the case, must there not be dread responsibility resting somewhere? Yes, according to this, it is to be feared that many precious and indestructible spirits, will be forever lost, in consequence of the talents of the sisters in the church, being permitted to remain unoccupied! If souls are saved through their faithful and pious exercise, is not the fear too well founded, that through their non-exercise, souls are lost? And are we still unconcerned respecting such momentous matters? If we are, does not that fact itself teach us that we are in a wrong state of mind? And are there any professors among us, so far lost to all correct feeling for sinners, that they would rather these souls perish forever, than be saved through the agency of women!!! And who, in full view of the vast and awful responsibility which rests upon professed Christians, will still dare to use their influence to hinder pious and gifted women from snatching sinners as brands from the everlasting burning! O that we may all, both male and female, and of every denomination, 'help those women' who have the talents to do good, in the name of the Lord! Our cry to one—to all is, Men and women of God's Israel, help!! And for Christ's sake do not hinder them, "lest haply ye be found even to fight against God."

Finally, ought not our objectors themselves to be consistent, and to be consistent with themselves, as well as in the plan of interpreting the sacred Scriptures? But, passing by the scenes and spectacles often exhibited in the theatre, that 'Slaughter-house of morals,' as an eminent Divine calls it, where women expose their own persons, and so with their daughters, for hire!! How frequently among others, who strenuously oppose the exercise of women in the ministration of the word of life, are to be found lady writers, and lady editors, of public periodicals. And some of them, without any apparent sense of 'shame,' can enter the list with political newspaper antagonists, and engage in 'wordy warfare' with male opponents, in the discussion of questions of very doubtful propriety, and count it all modesty, and perfectly within the sphere of woman's rights!' But let a female who feels the 'love of Christ constraining' her; and a deep solicitude for the salvation of souls, for whom the Son of God shed his precious blood, open her lips in the sanctuary of the Most High, to proclaim the heavenly message, of pardon for the guilty, and salvation for the lost, and lo! the same women are horror struck!! and exclaim, 'What a shame for women to speak in the church!' How forcibly they remind us of the saying of the Savior. 'They strain out a gnat, and swallow a camel!' Now in all candor and reason, for a woman to enter the arena of political 'strife and debate,' and discuss questions of a civil and municipal character, in a style and manner as magisterial as the chivalrous Southerner of the opposite sex,—is not that more likely to subject her to the apostolic censure, of 'usurping authority over the man,' than it is for her to offer solemn and fervent prayer to God for the prosperity of Zion, or affectionately, to warn sinners to flee the wrath to come? But the former it seems, may be done, and objectors to female preaching think it no harm; but should the latter occur, O! what immodesty and crime, and the Divine displeasure also must be incurred. Alas! what is man!—How appropriate the prayer prepared already to hand. 'We have left undone those things which we ought to have done; and we have done those things which we ought not to have done; and there is no health in us. But thou, O, Lord, have mercy upon us, miserable offenders.' For the very conduct condemned by the apostle—that they do, and feel no compunction for doing it: while that which he allows, and God has promised his Spirit to help them to perform, they cannot in conscience do! But it may be, their course is as correct and consistent as their creed. Others also are 'permitted' to sing their prayers and praises too 'in the church,' and that too, often in connexion with impenitent and ungodly sinners. and have no misgivings for so doing; but should a pious women 'speak in prayer,' socially or publicly, lo! what a transgressor. She must be in obedience, as also saith the law.' Others again, are 'permitted' to attend 'church meetings,' and take part in the deliberations, and vote; and, it may be, occasionally, to vote down those who are by far their superiors in judgment and moral worth, of the other sex; and all is thought right! Is not that to 'usurp authority over the man,' with a witness? But let one of those devoted women, moved by the Spirit of God, speak a word in 'exhortation,' to the 'edification and comfort' of the church, what an anthusiast would she be.—Does it not really appear that, according to some of our objectors, a woman may do almost any thing else under the heavens, but convert sinners, and save souls from an endless death? And above all, O ye Methodists, whose very founder was a friend to female preaching, and whose ministers have ever urged the 'Sisters' to 'speak,' in your various social meetings 'in the church,' for you to oppose a woman endeavoring to point sinners to the 'Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world,' from that passage in St. Paul, what a palpable incongruity! Do not all our Societies prosper in porportion as the sisterhood are fervently engaged in these exercises, which are almost peculiar to us as a people? In these sentiments many of the ablest Divines, and most successful ministers of the Methodist Churches, on both sides of the sea, have always concurred. And can any of you, dear brethren, upon reflection, oppose these female exercises, which have always been so signally blessed, in the awakening and conversion of sinners? Let us all, rather 'help' them. and may the Lord revive us afresh, and we shall feel again the spirit of primitive Methodism—of 'Christianity in earnest,' and then shall we succeed and prosper,—souls shall be saved, and to God be all the glory, both now and for ever, AMEN.

PITTSBURGH DISTRICT.

Fairmont, Va., Dec, 8, 1847.

BR. BASSETT: After writing a few lines in reference to the business department of your paper, I would say a few words in relation to our Christian prosperity on this, Fairmont Circuit. We have suffered a very great spiritual drought—and a host of spiritual insects, (the love of gain, the love of fashion, and another under the imposing title of a social party,) have been let loose among us which have made dreadful havoc in the garden of grace, & destroyed much of the precious fruits of the spirit. Over this state of things we have mourned, and wept, and prayed. The Lord has been pleased latterly to dispel to some extent the gloomy cloud, and give us some rays of prosperity. Our first quarterly meeting was at Mount Pleasant meeting house near old Salem. Here the Church was much revived, and refreshed. Several professeed to receive pardoning grace. Six united with the church, one a local preacher from the M. E. Church. Our next effort was in Shinnston: this was a precious season to the membership; one converted, three united with the church. May God bless them abundantly. Our next meeting was held at Hopewell; here the Lord was with us to revive the church, to convict the sinner, and comfort the mourner. Five were converted, and five gave us their names as probationers. From this place we went to Fairmont; here our meeting lasted several days; no special excitement. The church to some extent was revived and two gave us their names as probationers. Upon the whole this was a good meeting. Brother Simpson, the assistant preacher on this circuit was with me at all the above meetings, and labored faithfully and zealously in the cause of our heavenly Master. He is a faithful and a very agreeable colleague, and an acceptable preacher. May God bless our united labors and crown them with success. Brethren, pray for us.

Yours in Christ,
D. R. HELMICK.

Mt. Blanchard Circuit, Dec. 13, 1847.

BR. BASSETT: The church in this section, though in general low in religion, is in peace, and seems to stand firm. There are some prospects of better times. The young men sent this year to travel these two circuits, are well received, so far as I can learn, and I expect them both to preach at my house in turn.

Yours in hope,
JAMES SWANEY.

Cincinnati Ct., Dec. 25, 1847.

MR. EDITOR: We enjoy peace in our churches on this circuit, but no great manifestation of the divine power. We are comfortably situated and provided for in our field of labor this year. My worthy predecessor has merited a good name, (the prince of beggars in the Ohio Conference,) for his indefatigable labors in securing a comfortable parsonage house, which I have the pleasure first to occupy.

Yours in love,

Logansport Circuit Dec. 9, 1847.

BR. BASSETT: Having to write to you on business, I would inform the friends of our Zion that Logansport Circuit, after a hard struggle with the powers of darkness for more than two years, is now beginning to be revived in some places. It having pleased the great head of the Church in the order of his providence, to give me my appointment again on this Circuit, I resumed my labors with renewed zeal, (having been abundantly blessed at our annual conference, under the preaching of Bro. Hundley on the subject of an over ruling Providence. My confidence in God is still increaseing) and the members of the church are much encouraged; on my second round I received several members into the church and we had precious meetings. Our first quarterly conference was held on the 4th and 5th of December, our congregations were good from the start. We had the ministerial aid of our worthy President, Bro. J. Shipp, G. Williams, Bro. Falkenburg, and a good local aid. Different denominations united with us in lovefeast on sabbath morning, and we had a gracious time, the brethren in the ministry labored faithfully and affectionately, but the best of the wine was at the last of the feast, on Monday morning sinners were deeply affected, cold professors were revived, and the lovers of Christ rejoiced aloud in a Savior's love, while all came forward, and by giving us their hand expressed a determination to live more devoted to God. May the great Head of the church still continue his blessing with us, and to God be all the glory. Brethren pray for us.

Yours in gospel bonds,

Lafayette, Ill., Dec. 8, 1847.

BR. BASSETT: I have just returned from Br. S. Dilley's first quarterly meeting on Canton Ct.—One professed religion, and the meeting was to be protracted. Matters begin to look up on that circuit. Some other points from which I have heard since Conference have been visited with the out-pouring of the Holy Spirit. We hope for a year of general prosperity. Openings and prospects have never been fairer for the extension of the M. P. Church in Northern Illinois, than at the present time. MOSES JARED.

The Dead Sea.

An expedition has been fitted out by the Government, and is expected to sail from New York before long, for the purpose of making an exploration of the Dead Sea. The expedition is composed of a party of naval officers, under the command of Lieut. Lynch—Lieut. Dale being more specially charged with the scientific explorations and surveys.

It is a little singular that it has been left to a government of the great Western continent, to endeavor to unravel one of the greatest mysteries that lie in the bosom of the old Eastern world. The Dead Sea has been an object of wonder and speculation for centuries; and yet no European government has thought the subject of sufficient importance to warrant a small outlay to endeavor to make the mystery plain. Individuals have attempted it, but their accounts are imperfect and contradictory. One unfortunate traveller was swallowed up in its waters; as if the dark and gloomy waves beneath him, fearful of having the secret of ages wrested from them, had opened of their own accord for his destruction. And there that black asphaltic sea still lies, as it has lain for four thousand years—without a living thing within its waters, or scarcely upon its shores, except that Dead Sea fruit, so famous in poetry—with rivers pouring their eternal floods into its bosom, but with no visibe outlet; with its lofty walls, almost perpendicular, of black, menacing rocks, rising fifteen hundred feet upon one side, and two thousand upon the other—there it lies, as it has lain for ages, resting like a black funeral pall upon the corpse-like ruins of the cities of the plain.

Is this so? Can the ruins of those cities still be seen through the dark but singularly clear waters above them? Great question of questions! which answered in the affirmative by veracious witnesses, would startle the unbelief of a world. It is singular that this question which so naturally arises in the minds of many when perusing the Scriptural Record, has never been satisfactorily answered, either in the affirmative or negative. The waters of the Dead Sea are said to possess great petrifactive qualities—what a thrill would run through the heart of Christendom if that sea, constrained by the science and persevering art of the nineteenth century, should be forced at this late day to give up the stony bodies of its dead!

The present expedition is provided with every thing necessary for a full and accurate exploration—and the well known energy and fearlessness of our naval officers, leaves no room to doubt but they will push their investigations to the furthest limits. They will take with them metal boats of light construction, and all the means and appliances for surveying and sounding. If they determine nothing else, they will confirm or refute the singular statement that the level of the Dead Sea is more than 1,300 feet below the level of the Mediteranean, though only forty miles distant.

In conclusion, we may be allowed to express our pleasure, that our government has found time, amid the weightier matters of the present juncture, to attend to the claims of science, and to aid the progress of discovery.—S. E. Post.

☞How Many New Subscribers Will Be Furnished Us By Our Agents, To Commence With The Year 1848?☜

CORRESPONDENTS will please exercise patience. As the sermon of Brother Reeves is now concluded, (in which many take a great interest) and as the Messages of the President and Governor are also disposed of, we shall have room to attend to their articles in turn. But give us time. We have very many communications on hand. We must also give attention to our usual variety, and the general news.

AN ESCAPE.—Several weeks ago we transmitted by St. Louis, a package of about 500 pamphlets with a lot of books also for brethren in Illinois and Iowa. The package was long on the way, but we have just received a letter from Br. John Clarke, Rushville, Illinois, informing us that the package had just reached there in safety and in good order, "by miraculous escape, it having been on board the ill fated Steamer (the Talisman) which was sunk below St. Louis." We are very thankful for this information, whilst we deem it most remarkable that in that dreadful hour of gloom and despair, when all energies were directed to the saving of human life, that our package without a friend to look after its safety, should be found so precious as to be preserved from the billows of the deep, and escape in safety! Brs. Johnson of Knoxville, Illinois; Miller of Worcester, Iowa, are informed that their packages are in the care of Wilson & Co. Rushville, Illinois.

TELEGRAPH WEST.—The Pittsburgh Commercial Journal claims to have received the first telegraphic despatch from St. Louis, embracing a considerable important intelligence from the far west! It was received on the 22d instant. What next?

U. S. Congress.

Dec. 13, Senate.—The Resolution of the House to elect two chaplains of different denominations, was concurred in, and the Senate proceeded to the election of a chaplain for the session. Rev. Henry Slicer was elected.

Dec. 14, House.—After three ballotings for chaplain, Rev R. R. Gurley, (Presbyterian) was declared to be duly elected.

Dec. 15, Senate.—Mr. Calhoun introduced resolutions against the conquering of Mexico, in view of holding it either as a province, or incorporating it into the Union. Ordered to be printed.

House.—The President's veto of the River and Harbor bill was laid before the House and read.

Ohio Legislature.

Friday, Dec. 17, 1847—House.—The Senate resolution in favor of Henry Johnson, was unanimously adopted. A resolution was also adopted instructing the Judiciary Committee to enquire into the expediency of passing an act, declaring helpless insanity, to be good cause for divorce.—A bill was introduced, to erect the new county of National.

Saturday 18, Senate.—A preamble and resolutions offered by Mr. Ewing, in reference to the unprecedented flood in the Ohio, and the distress occasioned to many, calling on the Committee on Finance, to enquire into the expediency of reporting a bill, making an immediate appropriation for the relief of such citizens of the State as are rendered indigent by the flood, were unanimously adopted.

Wednesday, 22, Senate.—A joint resolution, submitted by committee on Finance, was adopted, providing that the Treasurer of Hamilton county, shall not be required to collect on the duplicate taxes for 1847, from any person in said county, injured by the recent great flood, any penalty incurred by reason of not paying taxes at the time required by law; but such persons shall be permitted to pay their taxes, without such penalty, at any time before the Treasurer is required to settle said duplicate with the County Auditor.

Thursday 23, Senate.—A bill was introduced by Mr. Judy, to establish a free Turnpike Road from Marysville to Kenton.

House.—Committee on new counties, reported against the new county of Centre, and also against the new county of Chester, but introduced a bill (by majority) for the erection of the new county of Gilead. A bill was reported from Judiciary Committee, giving the courts power to grant divorces, in case of hopeless insanity.

THE RECENT FLOOD.—The great topic still, is the flood in the western waters, and the damage and suffering it has produced. From particulars given in numerous exchanges, we make up the following additional statement. The water reached its greatest height at Cincinnati on Friday morning, 17th inst. and was then 6 inches short of its height in 1832. So says Cist's Advertiser. A vast amount of damage was of course done to goods and to houses, and very many families were seriously incommoded by being forced to leave their habitations. But the accounts have of course been exaggerated. Mr. Cist says, "The tenants of fifteen hundred dwellings and business places have been driven out.—Not less than Three Thousand individuals of all ages were obliged to take refuge in the upper regions of Cincinnati."

The entire population of Cincinnati were sufferers by the inundation, though it seems that not one-tenth part were forced to remove. This suffering was caused, first, by the stopping of the water works, so that the hydrants yielded no supply: 2d by the gas works being submerged, so that the supply of light was cut off, which required the suspension of all public assemblages after night, and also the business of many houses. Third, the back water extending a great distance up the creeks and valleys within and above and below the city, cut off perhaps seven-eights of the usual intercourse with the country. This of course prevented the bringing in of marketing, milk and firewood, whilst the stone coal on hand was mostly under water.—The entire flat, (lower part of the city) was inundated.

It is a singular circumstance that this flood was accompanied with a remarkable fall of snow, it is said to the depth of a foot and a half at Cincinnati. This must have added greatly to the inconvenience of those who were forced to remove. It was immedialely succeeded too, by a spell of severe, freezing weather, which must be still more trying, in view of the great scarcity of fuel in the city.

A great number of villages, large and small, along both sides of the Ohio river, and on several of its tributaries, have been submerged, entirely or in part. This has been the case at Sistersville, Point Pleasant and Guyandotte, in Virginia, Maysville, Newport, Covington, and Louisville, Ky. Marietta, Bellville, Pomeroy, Portsmouth, Moscow, New Richmond, Columbia, and Fulton, Ohio; and Lawrenceburg, Bethlehem, and many other places in Indiana.

The White Water Canal at Cincinnati and below, was swallowed up, and it is feared, to some extent destroyed. The back waters extending up the Little Miami, prevented the rail road cars from coming within ten miles of the city, during the height of the flood.

We have seen statements that several lives were lost at Lawrenceburg and Bethlehem, Indiana. Several persons also perished near Galipolis, by the sinking of a coal boat from Pittsburg. And in Jackson county, Mr. James M'Alroy of Penn township, Morgan county, was drowned.

But the most serious disaster in this catalogue, we take from the Ohio State Journal, being a telegraphic despatch, stating that the house recently occupied by the Fourierites, on the Ohio river, near New Richmond, fell down, crushing seventeen persons to death, including Moses J. Cornell, wife and four children, late of Cincinnati.—A dreadful calamity.

FROM MEXICO.—The Baltimore Sun has intelligence that General Anaya has been elected and inaugurated President of Mexico. It is said that his entire administration is in favor of peace. One of his first acts was to appoint a commission to treat with Mr. Trist. The powers of that functionary, however, had been withdrawn, and of course there will be delay of negociation. Santa Anna has assumed the command of an army at Oajuca, and declares his determination to oppose any negociation for peace, with the American army occupying any portion of the Mexican territory. It is thought that the Mexican commissioners will come to Washington.

LADIES' NATIONAL MAGAZINE.—We have received the January number of this beautiful work. It contains two charming mezzotint engravings, The Rescue, and The Lassie Herding Sheep.—Also the Fashion Plate, which embraces a portrait of Jenny Lind. The "National" has commenced its new volume, (XIII.) with beautiful new type, and other improvements. Mrs. Ann S. Stephens is editor of the Magazine, and also a principal contributor, for its pages, with numerous other ladies and gentlemen. C. J. Peterson, publisher, Philadelphia. $2 a year in advance. Three copies for $5.

MR. SMITH.—The Columbian Fountain says that Mr. Smith, the "Razor Strop Man" was in Washington City lately, and commenced selling his strops, but was fined for doing so without legal authority. The Fountain thinks it would be well if a little of the rigor manifested towards Brother Smith were dealt out to those who disregard the law, in keeping open their doggeries on the Sabbath day.

GIRARD COLLEGE.—We learn by the Saturday Gleaner, that preparations are nearly completed for the opening of this institution for the reception of 'poor, white, male orphans.' The buildings are five in number, each built of beautiful marble. The period of fifteen years has been spent in erecting them, and the sum of $1,779,273 was expended upon the work, to January 1st 1847, and a further sum of $1,900,000 is required to complete it. On the 1st of January, 1848, the College is to be opened with 100 students, between the ages of six and ten years. More will be added from time to time.

The clergy, we suppose, can see the edifices from the street, but must keep their distance. For the will of Mr. Girard enjoins and requires that "No ecclesiastic, missionary or minister of any sect whatsoever, shall ever hold or exercise any station or duty whatever in the said College: nor shall any such person ever be admitted for any purpose, or as a visiter, within the premises."

METHODISM—UNION—PITTSBURGH CHR. ADVOCATE—LIBERAL SENTIMENTS.—Several lengthy articles have recently appeared in the Pittsburgh Christian Advocate, by the editor of that paper, on "The Unity of Methodism." The editor of the Meth. Protestant having given some friendly attention to the matter, the editor of the Advocate does up an article in response thereto, which does honor to the head and heart of that excellent brother. It does us good to witness his highly liberal course towards his cotemporaries of other divisions of the Methodist family, for two or more years past. His friendly bearing towards the Methodist Protestants, we desire not only to appreciate but to reciprocate. And we cannot here do our readers a more acceptable service, than by inserting a considerable portion of the article of Br. Hunter in the Advocate, of the 8th inst.

One of our most cherished hopes is that the day will come when Episcopal and Protestant Methodists, forgetting their former differences & hard feelings, will give each other the right hand of fellowship, and recognize each other as one in Christ and one in Methodism. To do this, it is not, in our estimation, necessary to consolidate or amalgamate the two bodies. Each one may preserve its distinctness and independence; only let amity and mutual public recognition take place. Perhaps all that we could favor as a first step would be an enterchange of epistolary salutations, and delegates attending each other's General Conferences. Out of this would probably grow a closer and more intimate approximation. Some regulations might be agreed upon, tending to lessen and prevent collisions between particular societies, and to facilitate their Methodistic fellowship and communion with each other.

There is not, to our knowledge, a single 'principle' that stands in the way, or ought to stand in the way, of the fraternal relations of the two bodies—one excepted. Their doctrines are the same—their moral discipline is substantially the same; and as to the diversity of Church government, that, properly undestood, need form no barrier, for Methodism admits of diversity in church government. This, therefore, can be no bar to fraternity. The only thing of the nature of principle that we now think of, as apparently standing in the way, is the good old 'principle of Methodistic unity which does not admit of two bodies of Methodists on the same soil. The principle is thus expressed by the British Wesleyan Conference, and agreed to by our General Conference, "that as the American Methodists and ourselves are but one body, it would be inconsistent with our unity, and dangerous to that affection which ought to characterize us in every place, to have different societies in the same towns and villages, or to allow of any intrusion on either side into each other's labors." According to this principle, the Methodist Protestants and ourselves are not in unity, for the state of things declared inconsistent with unity exists between us. Nor do we see fully how the letter of the principle can be fulfilled in this case, without a consolidation of the bodies. If, however, it is possible to enter into some amicable relations, by which "intrusions into each other's labors," will be avoided or lessened; and by which, if two societies of Methodists belonging to the different organizations exist in the same towns, villages or country places, they may exist in amity and Methodistic fellowship, then will the principle of Methodistic unity be maintained 'substantially,' if not to the 'letter.' To realize even such an approximation towards it, we deem worthy of strenuous effort. For our part, we see not why the different Methodist ecclesiastical organizations in the United Stanes, such as the Methodist Episcopal Church, Methodist Protestant Church, M. E. Church South, African Church, &c., might not each retain its distinctive and independent existence, and at the same time such relations to each other that the unity of Methodism would be preserved, or, if already lost, restored. Why may not each be regarded as a legitimate 'department' of Methodism, operating in its own particular sphere, expressing openly its fraternity wherein it agrees with the others, and its respectful dissent wherein it disagrees. Let it ever be borne in mind that perfect agreement in non-essentials is not necessary to Methodistic fellowship and unity. There may be even family differences and sharp words,—though unpleasant, and to be avoided, if possible,—without destroying the family relationship, or mutual respect and fellowship.

* * * * * *

The Methodist Protestant is not recognized as a legitimate, regular Methodist body, by those bodies which are undeniably legitimate and regular, and which compose the regular confraternity of Methodism. God grant that it may! and that soon: but as yet it is not, and hence we could not speak of it thus. It is not a regular separation from the old Church, peaceably effected, and by mutual agreement; but a violent separation—a secession proper—accompanied with a "breach of the peace" between the two. That breach has never formally and publicly been healed. Whatever time and grace may have done, and we are happy to know they have done much, in modifying private feelings, and bringing about an interchange of fraternal courtesies between individuals or societies, there has been no Church 'action' on either part indicative of reconciliation or fraternal intercourse. This is just what we now want—what we plead for—a brotherly negotiation of the Churches, to see whether we cannot agree upon some mode of peaceable, harmonious co-existence and co-operation, without interferring with the distinctiveness or independence of either. We have been solicitous that our own Church should have the honor of making the first move in this matter; but if she is tardy, (large bodies move slowly) we shall not object to our Methodist Protestant brethren being the first to hold out the olive branch.

We hope we shall not be understood in any remark above as intending to impute blame to the Methodist Protestants any more than to our own Church, in the matter of their secession. To enter into that question, or even to make any such allusion, whatever may be our private opinions, would be foreign to our purpose. We merely mean to say that in their separation, whether by their fault or otherwise, the unity of Methodism was violated, and has never been restored. Our notion is, that the best plan to be pursued now in restoring that unity, is for both parties to proceed on the commonly received maxim, that we are all fallible beings, and that it may have been possible that there was some error on both sides, the shortest way to remedy which is to say nothing about it, but both strive to do what they can for the restoration and preservation of peace in time to come. Some of the old veterans in both parties, whose souls have scarcely yet lost all traces of the scars received in the "Radical war," might perhaps think that some concessions were due from the opposite sides; but it seems to us that to evince a desire for reconciliation and fraternal intercouse is as much concession as either party need demand.

VERY SCRUTINIZING.—A friend in a private note informs us that the publication of the letter of Major General Howe, in our paper of Oct. 7th last, gave offence to some, and did our paper some injury. We had utterly forgotten what this 'Howe letter' could be; but in referring to the said number of our paper, sure enough, near the last of the fourth page, we found, and we recognized an article which we had found standing in type on our return from the Conference at Cincinnati, and which had been selected by the gentleman who attended to the paper temporarily during our absence at the several Conferences. The article was taken from Burritt's Christian Citizen, which with some slight exceptions is one of the best papers in the country.—The article in question contained a pointed condemnation of the existing war, and some pointed reflections upon the course of the United States Government towards Mexico. Our friend informs us that the insertion of the article has given offence on political points. Now whilst we deem it our privilege and our duty in a proper manner to express our decided disapprobation of the existing war, and consider that in so doing we depart not from our position of strict neutrality in political questions, we feel free to say that the article in question is not such an one as we should have selected for our paper, forasmuch as we are ever cautious not to 'speak evil of dignities,' nor to reproach or denounce the government or administration. And we should not have admitted of its insertion, though in type, but that the form of our paper was made up before the article came under our inspection in proof, and it was not convenient to delay the press. We let it pass therefore, almost of necessity, little thinking that it would give offence to Mr. Somebody, or Br. So-and-so. Why, bless the men, is there any one newspaper published any where in Europe or America, in which some stray article is not accidentally admitted once in a while, which would be highly offensive to the partizan friends of the paper? And who does not know, that general readers, ten thousand to one, are accustomed to let any such accidental circumstance pass, as accidental, and as not worthy of passing remark. The gentleman who served as our pro tem, at the time referred to, is not now with us, or he might make apology if he saw fit. We have taken pains to give the above explanation at the instance of our friend, who professes to wish well to our paper, and of course desires the removal of any cause of complaint. And we desire that our statement should answer to meet any similar case that may possibly occur. Our friend has our thanks for notifying us of the objections, and we trust that he will still render us the like service. And right thankful shall we be, if he finds no complaint more serious than those already reported to us. We are anxious to 'manage wisely' in conducting our paper, so that no subscriber may have cause to say 'discontinue,' and that no brother minister may have cause to say he 'can get no subscribers' for us.

GOT HOME.—Cassius M. Clay, as we learn, has lately reached his home in Kentucky, after his long captivity as a prisoner of war in Mexico.

Captain Clay was honored with a public reception at Lexington, Ky., where he resides. Minute guns were fired as he entered the city. He was welcomed by an eloquent address, a procession and an illumination. Quite a change, since Mr. C. was mobbed two or three years ago in the midst of the same community, for his opposition to slavery!

FIRST M. P. CHURCH, PHILADELPHIA.—We learn by the Columbian Fountain that Rev. J. T. Ward, of the Maryland Conference, and editor of that paper has accepted an invitation to take charge of the Society and Congregation recently left vacant by the removal of Rev. T. H. Stockton from that charge to Cincinnati.

SATURDAY EVENING POST.—This is one of the best of the Philadelphia Weeklies, a large, handsome and interesting sheet. As we have heretofore advised our readers, the Post has won to itself no little praise by waging war upon demoralizing literature, or literature falsely so called. The Post deservedly enjoys great popularity. Edited by Henry Peterson. Address, S. D. Patterson & Co. publishers, Philadelphia. Terms, $2 per Annum. Four copies for $5. Eight copies for $10, always in advance.

THE NEW CONGRESS.—The New York Tribune remarks that in order to prevent confusion and mistakes growing out of the similarity of names among the members of the Congress now assembling, it will be well to remember that there are three Smiths in this Congress, all in the House—Trueman Smith, of Ct., Caleb B. Smith, of Ind., and Robert Smith, of Ill.,—three Browns: Charles Brown, of Pa., William G. Brown, of Va., and Albert G. Brown, of Miss.—two Davises: (both Senators) John Davis, of Mass., and Jefferson Davis, of Miss.—five Johnsons: Reverdy Johnson, of Md., Henry Johnson, of La., (Senators;) James H. Johnson, of N. H., Andrew Johnson, of Tenn., and Robert W. Johnson, of Arkansas—six Thompsons: James Thompson, of Pa., Robert A. Thompson, of Va., Jacob Thompson, of Miss., Richard W. Thompson, of Ind., John B. Thompson, of Ky., and William Thompson, of Iowa; two Joneses: John W. Jones, of Ga., and George W. Jones, of Tenn—two Millers: Senator Jacob W. Miller, of N. J., John K. Miller, of Ohio—two Butlers: Senator A. P. Butler, of S. C., Chester Butler, of Pa.,—two Holmeses: Elias B. Holmes, of New York, and Isaac E Holmes, of S. C.—two Duncans: Daniel Duncan, of Ohio, and Garnett Duncan, of Ky.,—two Adamses: John Q. Adams, of Mass., and Green Adams, of Ky.—two Evanses: Alexander Evans, of Md., and Nathan Evans of Ohio—two Stuarts: Andrew Stewart, of Pa., and Charles E. Stuart, of Michigan—three Clarks: Senator John H. Clark, of R. I., Franklin Clark, of Maine, and B. L. Clark, of Ky.—two Halls: Nathan K. Hall, of N. Y. and Willard P. Hall, Mo.—two Ingersolls: Joseph R. and Charles J., both of Pa.,—two Cobbs: Howell, of Ga., and W. R. W., of Ala.—two Phelpses: Senator S. S. Phelps, of Vt., and John S. Phelps, of Mo.—two Rockwells: Julius, of Mass., and John A., of Ct.—two Hales: Senator John P., of N. H., and Artemas, of Mass.

There are doubtless some other coincidences, but these are all that now occur to us.

HISTORICAL REMINISCENCES OF THE WAR OF 1812.

NO. II.

Mr. Editor: I have said in a previous number that General Winchester was ordered to supply General Tupper's mounted men with provisions, and ammuniton. He however neglected to comply with the order, keeping a large number of men and horses idle, far in advance of our sources of supply. While this force was lying idle, a man who had gone over the river to hunt, was killed by the Indians not far from the camp. A party went over and ascertained that there were but a few Indians, and following their trail a few miles, and being satisfied they were making for the head of Lake Michigan, it was thought best not to weaken the forces, to follow so small a party into the Indian country. The next morning General Winchester gave a positive order to General Tupper, to follow these few Indians, with his whole command. A previous inspection had shown that the troops had not two rounds of ammunition to the man, and scarcely a day's provisions. However as the orders were positive General Tupper paraded his men and read the orders of his superior. Colonel Allen of General Winchester's command, went to General Tupper and volunteered his services in any capacity, and was appointed an Aid.—When the men were paraded, and ready to start, Colonel Allen presented General Tupper an order of General Winchester, directing Colonel Allen to take command of the expedition. General Tupper informed his men of the order, but they refused to be placed under Allen, and dispersed without any further effort to carry out General Harrison's views. The impression left on the minds of those I saw of the expedition, was that General Winchester had determined to break it up, and had for that reason withheld the necessary means of carrying it out; and his subsequent conduct, confirmed this view of the case. While General Tupper was absent from Urbana, Governor Meigs continued the collection, and organization of the Ohio Brigade, which consisted of three Regiments. But one Battalion from Cincinnati, was with us but a few days, when it was ordered on to the St. Mary's, to garrison some fort there; and never after joined, or reported to us—so that our command consisted of one Regiment from the eastern part of the State, eventually commanded by Colonel Charles Miller, of Coshocton; one from Gallia, Athens and the country below, commanded by Colonel Robert Safford, of Gallia; and a Battalion, under the command of Major James Galoway, of Xenia; with two companies of Spies, one commanded by Thomas Hinkson, and the other by Captain Wood, of about twenty-five men each. The whole effective force, about one thousand, until subsequently reduced by sickness. The statement of Mr. Atwater, copied by Mr. Howe, that a company of Horse from Gallia commanded by Captain Womeldorf, formed a part of this Brigade, is an error. I apprized Mr. A. of this and some other errors, and he promised me that in any future editions of his work, he would make the corrections.

On the first day of October, 1812, Governor Meigs moved our Brigade from Urbana, to Kings Creek; on the 4th to Mad River; on the 7th to McPherson's Blockhouse: then the extreme limits of our settlements, 22 miles west of Urbana.—On the 12th we marched to Solomon's town, an Indian village within the Indian boundary; then deserted by its inhabitants. Here General Tupper joined us from his mounted expedition. This was a very healthy situation, with one of the best springs of water, I ever saw: equal to the supply of a camp of ten thousand men; and where we lay until the last day of October, without one sick man in our camp.

While we were at this camp, General Harrison sent to General Tupper, to procure some of the Shawnee Indians in that vicinity, to come to his camp; forming at that time near Franklinton. Captain Lewis's town, was about six miles from our camp; General Tupper and several officers, paid a visit to Lewis, with whom we had all become well acquainted while in Urbana, where he and the Crane had been frequently attending conferences with Governor Meigs. He was a stout athletic man—had in Wayne's campaign, the reputation of a great warrior.—He was one of the most eloquent men I ever heard speak.—He piloted Hull's army through the wilderness.—He went to the relief of Fort Wayne, and joined General Tupper in his intended expedition to Detroit.—He had expressed a willingness, and desire to accompany General Tupper when ever he should advance, and came several times to our camp, expecting we were about to do so.—When we afterwards joined the camp at the Rapids, he with several of his warriors, were there as spies. We found him living with those around him, in civilized style. He treated us with great kindness, and gave us a good meal, as well arranged as to furniture, as any of our more civilized community. Neither he nor his Indians would taste spirits in any form. A full-blooded Shawnee, and at the head of his tribe. He and five of his warriors readily consented to go to Gen. Harrison. Harrison's object, was to employ them, in gaining information from the British and hostile Indians. General Harrison had also informed General Tupper, that he was very desirous of getting information, by taking a prisoner, or otherwise. After Lewis had left, to join General Harrison, Logan, another Shawnee chief, living at Wapakonetta, came to Lewis's with five of his warriors, designing to join our Brigade, but learning that Lewis had been sent for, he also joined General Harrison. We were ordered to advance to Fort McAuthur on the Scioto which we did on the 31st of October and 1st of November. A company had before been sent forward, to guard the stores, being pushed out to that place. It proved a very sickly situation, and no suitable ground to encamp upon. The men soon became sickly: every rain flooded our camp. Soon after arriving there, General Tupper sent Captain Hinkson on with his company of spies to the Rapids, to reconnoitre, and if possible to obtain a prisoner, to do so; and to do no act which would risk the loss of him. Hinkson, was a bold, daring man, and the General was fearful if he fell in with any Indians, he would, if he should succeed in taking a prisoner, get up a fight, which might defeat the object. Nothing had been heard from the Rapids after Hull's surrender, except what the released prisoners brought, when discharged on parole.

Hinkson reached the Rapids without seeing any signs of Indians. There was, there, about 300 acres of corn in the fields, on the bottom, and on the Island; his men were dispersed in small squads, some in the corn near the river, others in the woods; one party of five, a short distance from the river in the woods, discovered a white man not of their party, coming towards them; they concealed themselves, and when the man was within reach of their rifles, and of speech, two of them demanded his surrender; he was about to give battle, when the other three shewing themselves, he found the odds quite against him, and he submitted to be secured.—They found that he was an Indian interpreter, by the name of Clarke. He had come with Indians to the mouth of the river, where he had left the boats occupied by about thirty British to hunt, up the east side of the river, while about 600 Indian warriors, accompanied by their women and children, were ascending on the west side. He was told that his life depended on his telling the truth, and the whole truth. He estimated the warriors, at 500: and 30 British, with the boats; the whole under the command of Col. Elliot;—their object, to secure the corn, and have the Indians live on it. The boats would take loads to Malden;—80 Wyandots, were mounted on horses, taken from Hull's army, and had trained them most perfectly. Others were mounted on Indian horses, mostly Potowatomies. The Indians were under a Wyandot chief, named Split-log, (Not Tecumseh, as Atwater has it.)—Hinkson, after collecting his men, (some of whom were within a few rods of the boats where they landed,) and resisting the desire of his men for further adventure, made the best of his way to camp, a distance of 30 miles. I was about four miles from camp, when they came in—came in with them, and conversed with Clark, and the spies, upon the expedition. Clark said he tho't himself a match for two, but five was rather too much odds. It was the after part of the day, about the 8th of November, General Tupper immediately dispatched an express to General Winchester, (who was lying with 3,000 men within forty miles, by the river,) advising him of all the facts, and suggesting the value of the corn to our future operations. After writing his dispatches, he concluded, as the express must travel 100 miles to reach Winchester, he could reach the Rapids a day sooner than Winchester; he therefore added a postcript, saying he would start in the morning with six hundred men, with four day's provisions on their backs;—that he hoped to reach there in three days,—would try and remain there one day;—but, as his pack horses were all away from camp, he must return immediately, for want of tents and provisions, &c.—Our men had been very sickly, and 600 was all the disposable force we had. Six artillery horses, was all the horses we had except those of the field and staff officers. The six artillery horses were the next morning, hitched to a light six-pounder, and we started. With great difficulty the horses drew the field piece about 14 miles that day, when it was abandoned: the horses broken down, and the carriage broken to pieces. Some of our men who had been sick, and were convalescent, gave out, and the officers' and artillery horses, were employed in helping them on.

The 2d day we reached Findley's block-house:—the third, Hull's camp ground at Portage river, about 16 miles from the Maumee. This night Captain Hinkson was sent to reconnoitre. He returned the next day when we had marched about half the distance, and reported that about day break, he ascertained their camp to be at the foot of the Rapids; and saw quite a number, mount their horses and ride up the river towards Winchester's camp.

WITTEMBURG COLLEGE.

Mr. Editor: Since my location at this place I have become acquainted with the President, and part of the Professors of Wittemburg College and also with many of the students. I have found the President, Rev. Dr. Keller, a well qualified Professor, and as far from sectarianism as any Professor I have ever become acquainted with.

This college is the property of the Evangelical Lutheran Church—is located in a healthy situation one mile north-west of the town. It has been in operation only about two years. Has a Theological and Collegiate Department. Has four Professors and three Tutors. The Collegiate Department is under the Professorship of Messrs. Liehl, Griger, and Stephenson. These gentlemen so devote themselves to their profession as to render full satisfaction, to all interested. The tuition of this department is as low perhaps as any college in the west.

In this institution there are ninety students. Thirty-four are preparing for the ministry, a number of the other students are also professors of religion. It has two literary societies with fine libraries. The different libraries in the institution contain about two thousand two hundred volumes of good books. Twenty-one of the students board themselves at an expense of from thirty to forty cents per week. Boarding in common is about seventy-five cents per week.

The instructions of the Theological Department are gratuitously given to candidates and ministers of all denominations.

Mr. Editor, at the setting of the Annual Conference at this place in 1846, the privileges of the Theological Department were tendered to the Conference by Dr. Keller. Our Conference cheerfully responded to this very generous proposition, by passing some three or four resolutions among which I find the following:

Resolved, That we recommend to our junior brethren who have the ministry in view to avail themselves of the privileges of this institution.

Would it not be proper for our young brethren before entering the ministry to spend a year or two at some good institution? Could they not in two years acquire, to good extent, those English sciences that are so much calculated to prepare men for the ministry? Could not a brother who has the ministry before him by stopping to qualify himself, win more souls to Christ in twenty succeeding years?

Of the thirty-four candidates for the ministry in this institution, only one is preparing for the travelling connection in the Methodist Protestant Church. How Brother Walker would rejoice to be joined by some ten or twelve humble, pious, young brethren in the great preparation. The doctrine taught in this institution is the doctrine taught in our church. The government of the Lutheran Church is a representative form of government, and government is taught and the propriety of proper discipline urged upon each Theological student.

If the above is worth a place in your paper you can so use it. Yours, &c.,

An Apology to "Father" Springer.

Br. Bassett: I feel disposed to profit from the hints given me by "Father" Springer in your last paper. In his notice of my humble note of the 3d inst. he has placed my "great age and experience" in juxtaposition with his "youth" and "inexperience" (of course meaning vice versa,) thereby indirectly intimating to me the manner of address I ought to have used in relation to himself. And here I humbly acknowledge myself guilty of the great crime of not having lived so long in this poor sinful world as some other men. I moreover acknowledge that I ought to have addressed him by the very appropriate appellation of "venerable patriarch." Hope he and your readers will forgive me and I will try to do better next time.

As to the appellation of "Father," I was not aware till now, that it would be either appropriate or agreeable to him. But I hope in all this I have not committed the unpardonable sin against my old "tried" friend, and "venerable Father in the Gospel." Yours, with much respect,

E. S. HOAGLAND.

Brownsville, O., Dec. 24, 1847.

News of the Week.

The tremendous catastrophe which lately occurred on Lake Michigan, in the loss of the steamer Phenix, and between one and two hundred lives, ought to arouse the public to the danger of trusting to the ordinary vessels transporting passengers on our Lakes. The Phenix it seems was only a propeller of inferior build, badly manned and overpacked with human beings, mostly emigrant Hollanders, who had paid for passages on board of a first class steamer, but were crowded by the steamboat agents on board this vessel.—Before this fire took place, the firemen had discovered that the pumps refused to work and the boiler was nearly out of water. The Captain was sick in bed and the second officer in command on being informed of the danger, refused to get up and repair the pumps. Half an hour after, the boilers were red hot and had ignited the wood-work around them. This roused all hands, but help was too late. The fire swept over the vessel with fury, and the affrightened passengers either leaped overboard or climbed the rigging and fell into the flames and were lost. Out of the whole mass, about twenty only were saved, though the land and a steamer hurrying to their assistance, were both in sight. Even to our imagination, at this distance from the scene, how terrific the spectacle, and what must it have been to those who saw their lives hovering over the glaring monster Fire! with no hope for their horrible agony? God, alone can tell. There was but a single boat attached to the Phenix and not a life preserver on board. Had she been furnished as the law should prescribe for every vessel on those perilous lakes, on our sounds, coasts and the ocean, every life might have been saved. As it was the fierce fire and the remorseless water bore them to eternity. The calamity is charged by those who have investigated the matter as the result of carelessness. How awful the thought—and shall it not arouse the severest scrutiny of the public for the future?—N. Y. S.

Sad Accident.—Yesterday morning John C. Kirk, while employed in painting the front of a house, in Front street, between Vine and Callowhill, was precipitated from the second story window, by the board on which he was standing slipping from its fastening. In the fall upon the marble steps below his elbow was dreadfully fractured, and when examined, the shattered bone was found protruding through the skin. He was immediately conveyed to the Hospital, where the limb was amputated above the elbow. The sufferer is quite a young married man, with a wife and one child dependent upon him.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Distressing Calamity.—Island of Tobago.—It will be recollected that, from the Jamaica papers received some weeks ago, we announced that a terrible hurricane had recently devastated the beautiful island of Tobago, one of the British West India possessions, causing a great destruction of property and human life. The New Orleans Commercial Times has letters giving some details of this catastrophe, from which we learn that sixty-one large country residences, fifty-nine plantation sugar works, and six hundred and thirty-two dwelling houses, and other edifices, of which some were religious ones, churches, chapels, &c., have been swept into irretrieavble ruin by this awful storm. Up to the latest dates, the names of 30 human beings have been ascertained, as having perished during the terrible war of elements; and it is believed when full accounts are received from the remote parts of the Island, that that number will be very much increased.—The Jamaica papers say that the distress occasioned among the population by the disaster, is so great, that a memorial has been addressed to the Home Government, for succor.

Singular Anniversary.—The anniversary of the burning at sea of the noble packet ship Thos. P. Cope, of Philadelphia, occurred on Monday night last. A wealthy gentleman of Philadelphia, who was a survivor of that awful calamity, celebrated the anniversary by a feast at his house, to which he invited as guests all the survivors of the wreck in Philadelphia. Religious exercises formed a part of the celebration, and a scene such as it was, perhaps, was never before witnessed.

Relief Still Going.—The New York Irish Relief Committee still continues its good offices. The "Ashburton," on Monday, carried out to Cork no less than 1,000 bbls, of corn meal, besides other articles of food for the famishing.

Great Fire at Louisa, Ky.—An extensive fire occurred at Louisa, Lawrence county, Ky., on Faiday night last, by which a row of buildings, owned by Mr. Frederick Moore, and occupied by J. M. Redden and Wm. McFarland, dry goods merchants and grocers; and Joseph Pickrell, merchant tailor, as also the post-office, was entirely destroyed. The post-office books and papers, and the money, books and papers of Mr. McFarland, were saved. Mr. Redden saved about one half his stock—all the rest a total loss. There was also destroyed goods in store for others, amounting in value to about $3,500.

A Windfall.—We understand that Lyne Starling, Esq., of Columbus, has made a donation to the Medical College of this city, of thirty thousand dollars. This is truly a liberal gift, and will place that institution of Medical Science upon a permanet basis.

Little Miami Railroad Company.—The following gentlemen were, on Tuesday last, elected officers of the Little Miami Railroad Company for the ensuing year.

Jer. Morrow, President; Jac. Strader, Secratary; John Kilgour, Treasuer; Wm. H. Clement, Superintendent.

Directors—Jer. Morrow, Jac. Strader, Jno. Kilgour, Griffin Taylor, R. R. Springer, Abr. Hiveling, Wm. McCammon, Sam. Barnett, Jas. Hicks, Lewis Broadwell, Jno. Kugler, Nat. Wright.

An excellent selection.—Cin. Atlas.

Br. O. P. Stephens, we regret the irregular receipt of the paper at C., and are confident it is not our fault. If you had taken the trouble to inform us what numbers are missing, we would have sent other copies to each brother.

Saturday Gleaner.—The publisher of this elegant weekly, is requested to send the paper of Rev. C. S. Callihan to Overfield, Barbour Co. Va., instead of Melon, same county.

Two dollars paid by L. Pierce, Woodfield, will be paid to Br. Springer for Vol. 6, he having been already credited for vol. 9. Register sent.

The Law of Newspapers.

1. Subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, are considered wishing to continue their subscriptions.

2. If the subscribers order the discontinuance of their papers, the publishers may continue to send them till all cash charges are paid.

3. If subscribers neglect or refuse to take their papers from the offices to which they are directed, they are held responsible until they have settled their bill, and order their paper discontinued.

4. If subscribers remove to other places without informing the publishers, and the paper is sent to the former direction, they are held responsible.

5. The Courts have decided that refusing to take a paper or periodical from the office, or removing and leaving it uncalled for, is "prima facie" evidence of intentional fraud.

Liabilities of those who take Periodicals.

Thes law declare that any person, to whom a periodical is sent, is responsible for payment, if he receives the paper, or makes use of it, even if he has never subscribed for it, or has ordered it to be stopped. His duty in such a case is not to take the paper from the office or persons with whom the paper is left, but to notify the publisher that he does not wish for it.

If papers are sent to a Post Office, Store, or any other place of deposite,, and are not taken by the person to whom they are sent, the Postmaster, Storekeeper, &c., are responsible for the payment, until he returns the paper, or informs the publisher that they are lying dead in the office.

We have to congratulate our good brother Wheat, that though relinquishing all gainful pursuits, in favor of a better cause, he has nevertheless got Rich at last. We trust however that after this good fortune, he will still be condescending towards his poorer brethren, & that he will not consider it beneath him to do what he can, as heretofore, for the Western Recorder.

THE OHIO CULTIVATOR FOR 1848.

Published at Columbus, Ohio, on the 1st and 15th of each month, M. B. Bateham, Editor and Proprietor. Terms, $1 per year—four copies for $3—payment invariably in advance.

THE fourth volume of the Ohio Cultivator will commence Jan. 1st. 1848. This paper has now become so well known that it is scarcely necessary to speak of its character, or to allude to the commendations it has received from the Public Press and other sources. The editor is determined to spare no pains on his part to sustain the reputation of the work, and make each succeeding volume more useful than the preceding one. Our motto is "upward and onward;" and the object of the "Cultivator" is not only to collect and disseminate valuable facts and information relating to practical agriculture, but to inspire 'Farmers' with more just conceptions of the dignity of their profession; to induce them to cultivate the 'Mind' as well as the 'soil,' and thus cleavate themselves to that position which it is their duty and privilege to occupy as 'American Agriculturists," in this age of Progress and Improvement.

With its very large list of contributors, numbering over "two hundred," most of them practical farmers in the West, the pages of the "Cultivator" will contain the results of "Experience," as well as the teachings of "Science;" and being written or selected with special reference to the climate, productions and farming of Ohio, this paper will be found more valuable than any other for the farmers of this and the adjoining States. It will contain the latest intelligence of the "Markets" of this country and England; notices of the weather and the crops; descriptions (with engravings,) of improved implements, machines, &c.; instructions in gardening and fruit culture; rearing and management of domestic animals; construction of farm buildings, fences, &c.; and a "Ladies' Department" devoted to household affairs, useful receipts, &c.

The friends of Improvement in Ohio and adjoining States are requested to obtain and forward subscribers for the Ohio Cultivator. Remember that the price is only "seventy-five cents" each, when four or more names are sent by one person. All subscriptions must commence with the first number of the volume; a complete index is furnished at the end of the year. Specimen numbers and a prospectus will be forwarded to all who desire them.

☞ "Now is the time to subscribe!" Letters with remittances may be sent by mail at the risk and expense of the publisher. Address,

M. B. BATEHAM.

A NEW AND IMPROVED VOLUME FOR 1848!

SEARS' PICTORIAL FAMILY MAGAZINE,

Established for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge!

A Monthly Miscellany of moral and instructive information, embellished with numerous ENGRAVINGS of the various subjects treated of in the course of the year. Published monthly, in parts of 48 large octavo pages each.

PROSPECTUS FOR THE FIFTH VOLUME.

For four years the Pictorial Family Magazine has been before the American public, and it is peculiarly gratifying to the Publisher to know, that his efforts to do good through its medium, have met with the universal approbation of the public & the public prints, wherever it has found its way. It is now too firmly established upon the broad foundation of public confidence, to require a great flourish of trumpets to proclaim its continued existence, or the tricks of 'puffery' to allure the people to its support.

To those who are acquainted with the Magazine, it is unnecessary to speak of its design & merits; to those who are not, we will make a brief statement of both. The original design of this work was a noble one, and worthy of all praise. It was intended as a vehicle for conveying solid information to that class of citizens whose circumstances denied them the privilege of drinking abundantly at the fountain of useful knowledge; & it has been the constant aim of the present publisher to carry out fully the above laudable designs. Its price, compared to the amount of its reading matter, and the number and quality of its Engravings, is exceedingly low; and we think we hazard nothing in saying, that it is by far the cheapest periodical published in America.

Natural History, Biography, Travels, History, Science, Useful Arts, Fine Arts, Agriculture and Rural Economy, Sketches of American Scenery, Political Economy, Essays, & Miscellaneous Reading, all receive a due share of attention, and all bear, as far as practicable, a decidedly American character. We aim, also, to preserve a high tone of morals, in the conduct of the Magazine, and to blend useful information with correct moral instruction, in order that it may, in every respect, be a useful and agreeable teacher in the domestic circle.

☞ Price two dollars per annum—three copies for five dollars, or ten copies for fifteen dollars—invariably in advance, as no Numbers are sent out until the subscription is paid.

☞ Thus far we have gone on steadily advancing in public favor, the sure indication of which has been a healthy increase in our subscription list. That we shall double our present number of subscribers in 1848, we have little doubt, for we intend doubling our efforts and increasing very greatly the value of the Magizine. We shall engage the very best engravers to be found. We have now some plates, illustrating a great variety of subjects, in progress for our new volume, that will be equal to anything that has appeared in the country.

☞ EVERY MAN HIS OWN AGENT.—All remittances of money for this Magazine must be sent to us free of postage. Those wishing to take our Magazine, will please write direct to us, enclosing a year's subscription ($2,) or the price of a club (ten copies for $15,) in funds current in the State where they reside. This simplifies the whole matter of subscription, perfectly, and makes the communication, between publisher and subscribers, as it should be, direct.

Agents Wanted in every town and county throughout the Union, to sell SEARS' NEW AND POPULAR PICTORIAL WORKS, universally acknowledged to be the best and cheapest ever published, as they certainly are the most saleable. Any active Agent may clear FIVE HUNDRED or a THOUSAND DOLLARS a year. A cash capital of at least $25 or $30 will be necessary. Full particulars of the principles and profits of the Agency will be given on application, either personally or by letter. The postage must in all cases be paid.

Please address, ROBERT SEASS, Publisher.
128 Nassau Street, New York.

☞ Newspapers copying the above (including this notice,) and giving it two or three insertions, shall receive a copy of the Magazine for one year. Send only one copy of each paper, marked.

PROSPECTUS

For the Congressional Globe and Appendix

WE issue this Prospectus to apprise the public of renewed preparations on our part to publish the Congressional Globe and Appendix for the approaching session, and to invite subscriptions. The two Houses having contracted with us for the work, on such terms as enable us now to make complete reports, to multiply and issue the numbers in quicker succession than heretofore, and without increasing the price to subscribers, we hope to make a good return for the liberality and high official sanction thus bestowed on the publication. We shall increase the volume at least one-third beyond the ordinary bulk, and endeavor to add to its usefulness by extending still further its large circulation.

This last is not the least important point in the view of Congress. Faithful and durable reports of the debates of the body are of value in proportion to the extent of their circulation among the people. It is in this way that Congress is brought into the presence of its remote constituents—that it obtains easy access and holds communication with them from day to day, and renders the government really representative.

Having received from all parties in Congress the strongest marks of approbation and confidence, in the liberal means and permanent contract voted to continue the work, we shall not be found wanting in the impartiality and industry necessary to the due fulfilment of the engagement on our part. The next session will task to the utmost the best efforts of those connected with the undertaking. It will be distinguished by discussions of extraordinary interest and results of abiding concern. The war, its origin and conduct by officers in the cabinet and in the field, will furnish subjects of profound inquiry and consideration. The terms of peace, the disposition to be made of conquests, the consequences to be drawn from all that has been done, as affecting parties in this country, and especially as bearing on the approaching presidential election, will open up novel and powerfully operating discussions, rendering the councils at Washington during the next year as pregnant of good or evi to this continent as those of Rome were to the Old World in the days of her early energy. Such a field for deliberation and action was never presented to any previous Congress. All that has transpired, or may hereafter transpire before the close of the approaching session of Congress, in New Mexico, California, in the capital of Mexico, and the provinces still dependant on it, will come under the consideration of the next Congress. Its debates will contain the history of the war, and its action determine its results, whether they be decided by arms or diplomacy. And whatever is developed concerning this vast and interesting matter on the floor of Congress or in the Executive messages, will be found recorded in the Congressional Globe & Appendix.

The Congressional Globe is made up of the daily proceedings of the two Houses of Congress, and printed on superfine double royal paper, with small type, (brevier and nonpareil,) in quarto form, each number containing sixteen royal quarto pages. The speeches of the members, in this first form, are condensed—the full report of the prepared speeches being reserved for the Appendix. All resolutions, motions, and other proceedings, are given in the form of the Journals, with the yeas and nays on every important question.

Every member will have an opportunity to read his remarks before they are put to press, and alter our report if he shall think it incorrect.

The Appendix is made up of the President's annual message, the reports of the principal officers of the government that accompany it, & all speeches of members of Congress, written out or revised by themselves. It is printed in the same form as the Congressionhl Globe, and usually makes about the same No. of pages during the session.

During the first month or six weeks of a session, there is rarely more business done than will make two numbers a week—one of the Congressional Globe and one of the Appendix; but during the remainder of a session, there is usually sufficient matter for two or three Nos. of each every week. The next session will be unusually interesting; therefore, we calculate that the Congressional Globe and Appendix together will make near 3,000 large quarto pages, printed in small type—brevier and nonpareil. We furnish complete indexes to both at the end of a session.

We will endeavor to print a sufficient number of surplus copies to supply all that may be miscarried, or lost in the mails; but subscribers should be very particular to file their papers carefully, for fear that we should not be able to supply all the lost numbers.

We have a few surplus copies of the Congressional Globe for the last session of Congress, which we will sell for the original supscription price—$1 a copy. We have no surplus copies of the Appendix for that session.

TERMS.

For one copy of the Congression Globe,	$2 00
For one copy of the Appendix	2 00
For six copies of either, or part of both	10 00

Proprietors of newspapers who copy this prospectus before the first day of December, and send us one copy of their paper containing it, marked around with a pen to direct our attention to it, shall have their names entered on our books for one copy of the Congressional Globe and Appendix during the session.

Our prices for these papers are so low that we cannot afford to credit them out. Therefore, no person need consume time in writing for them, unless the money accompanies the order.

Subscriptions should be here by the 13th December, at farthest, to ensure all the numbers.

POET'S CORNER.

Written for the Western Recorder.

LINES TO THE CLOSING YEAR.

WRITTEN ON CHRISTMAS DAY.

As England's Bard, obsequious to the Fair,
With willing hands, took up his dulcet lyre
"To dress a sofa with the flowers of verse,"
So I, at her command, take mine to sing
The sad obsequies of the dying year.
How soon, alas! how very soon the year
Grows old and dies! A few short months ago
His youthful locks were wreathed with vernal flowers.
The soft green grass sprang up beneath his feet,
And birds sang sweetly on the boughs, as he
With jocund mirth, danced tip-toe down the vale.
But, soon, the fair wreath of flowers faded,
And then, with grace, upon his sun-burn'd brow
He wore the harvest crown! Across the mead
With stately steps, he slowly walked: Or threw
His form full length beneath the shady elm.
Ere long his crown had fallen; and his hair
Waved loosely in Autumn breeze. Here and there,
The frost had tinged his auburn locks with grey.
With sombre pace, and solemn mien, he passed
Along, and strewed the ground with yellow leaves.
But, soon, his face grew pale and sad, and now
His head with Winter's frost is silver'd o'er.
Infirm, decrip't, old, he creeps along,
And murmurs, mournful, at his dismal fate.
A few, short days will end his brief career:
"So life glides smoothly and by stealth away."
How brief the time since thine was in its spring!
How brief the joys that youthful hope can give!
Have all hope's blossoms ripen'd into fruit?
Or were they nipt while yet within the bud?
Look at thy cheek; The lily blossoms now
When erst the Rose had bloom'd—alas! how soon
The Summer of thy life will pass away!
Autumn, the time for fruit, comes on apace,
And winter, soon, will close the scene.—But stay,
My Muse! must I here drop the Lyre! Must I
Let death's dark pall still hover o'er the grave!
Is there no better world beyond the tomb?
Ah, no! my Muse! let me not settle here.
Teach me to rise on faith's expansive wing,
And soar beyond the confines of the tomb.
We die—and, dying, life is just begun!
Near nineteen centuries the knell of Time
Has toll'd, since life and immortality
Was brought to light! Still thousands celebrate
This day, and trust that the Redeemer liveth!
And if He, lives then you will live, and I,
(By faith in him) still in primeval youth,
When twice ten thousand centuries have pass'd,
Thrice multiplied by twice ten thousand more,
Added to twice ten thousand times the sum
Elapsed till then, since time begun!
In vain
The Muse would fain compute Eternity!
Let it suffice that thou who trust in Him
Wilt live coeval with the Lord himself.
Strange truth; and more than strange, Sublime!
And will we live forever?—Eternal!
Such is the Christians hope. Deist, tell thine!—
All long for life and immortality;
But O how few regard the will of Him
Who brought these truths to light! Rapine and wrong,
Are terms familiar to my ears, but, Oh!
How often am I pain'd, with sights and sounds,
That make me weary of this world of Sin.
Its noise, its strife, its mad contention, all
Jar on the tender chords of my sad heart!—
The dulcet harp, for gentle breezes strung,
Alas! makes mournful dischord, when rude blasts
Sweep o'er its wires. Ambition and revenge
Are plants that seem to thrive in human breasts:
Oppression, famine, pestilence and war,
Are all their bitter fruits! These are the fruits
The down trod are compell'd to pluck: On these
The widow and the orphan feast! On these
The Irish now grow fat! On these, Oh, shame!
Our own brave men, in Mexico, have fed.
Shall I extend this list of hopeless woe,
And catalogue of wrongs? lo! the poor slave
Who bears the impress of the Mind Divine,
Degraded to the level of a brute!—
But sick at heart, I turn from this sad theme,
(Ere I suspend my harp upon the willow,)
To weave a garland, of the cyprus branch,
And ivy sear, to grace December's brow.
Cold, dark, dreary month! wast thou not milder
When the BABE of Bethlehem was born? No!
What thou art now, so thou hast ever been.
Unchanged, yet ever changing! like the year,
A term by which we mark the strides of Time.
Soon, months and years will be the same with us.
Time, like Ocean's tide, is rolling on!
Year, after year, as wave succeeding wave,
Is hurried onward by the lapse of Time,
And swallowed in its sempiternal sea.
But, Time, like Ocean's tide, no reflux knows;
'Tis always in its flux; a wave once past,
Is ever past—it never will return!
Still onward is its course, revolving round
Some everlasting center, as the spheres
Around the solar sun.—So shall it be
Until the angel down from Heaven comes,
And with one flaming foot upon the sea,
And with the other planted on the earth,
And with his hand to Heaven lifted up,
Shall with the voice of seven thunders swear,
By Him that lives forever, Time shall be
No longer! Then will the much disputed
Time, times, and half a time, be at an end.
The sun will then be darkened, and the moon
Will cease to give her light! The earth will melt
With fervent heat—the stars from Heaven fall,
And universal Nature groan—expire!

BY "PHILOM."

VI.

The character designed to be formed by the gospel is one that must reccommend itself to every true hearted philanthropist. From the first faint outlines to the swelling fulness of the finished portrait it is the character of a good man. Every thing that can ennoble; every thing that can exalt and dignify enters into, blends with and forms a part of the beautiful whole. Selfishness that bane of human life, forms no part of the truly good man's character. Selfishness is destructive of happiness, and the gospel frowns and is the declared opponent of every thing that would diminish the sum of human felicity. Every thing which would essentially debase the individual character finds no favour in the gospel. The gospel seeks the happiness of man; and to this end enjoins the formation of a character which cannot but make the possessor better and happier. Every grace that can adorn, every virtue that can elevate, every element that can dignify, is recommended and commanded by it: Every vice, fashion, sentiment, or, feeling that is calculated to degrade, is on the contrary, disapproved and condemned. An individual exhibiting in all the features the character of a Christian as drawn in the gospel would be, indeed, nearly allied to Good. The natural man is supremely selfish—the true believer is nobly benevolent. Supreme love for God, and equal love for our neighbor, are the leading sentiments of the gospel; and he that possesses them in all their morally grand developements is worthy of the enviable appellation of being a GOOD MAN.

VII.

When a temptation is presented to the mind of an individual urging him to the performance of some act, or, to the gratification of some desire or propensity, which performance or gratification can only consist with the use of unlawful means, the resistance, if any, with which it is met and opposed will be in proportion to the strength of the mind in virtue—its love for happiness. The will or disposition to exercise this love of virtue and right in opposition to evil, is derived from, and dependent upon the hallowed presence and influence of the Divine Spirit, and does not arise from within the mind itself, as something inherent in it; "for the natural mind is enmity against God, and is not disposed to be subject to the law of God." But this disposition to resist evil, though originally flowing from the operation of the divine spirit, depends for its actual exercise, upon the personal will of the individual. If he chooses to resist he may and can; if, on the contrary, he chooses to yield to the solicitation to evil now before his mind, the Divine Spirit will not, by any extraordinary interposition prevent him from following the inclination of his own heart. In every act of resistance—the power is of God, the act is man's. And every instance of resistance does but give increased strength and potency to the moral principle. Consequently the individual is prepared to offer increased resistance to the same temptation at any future presentation of it; or, to give an equal opposition to a temptation increased in virulence bearing a proportion to the increased strength of his power of resistance. Our love of virtue and holiness, and by natural consequence our power to resist evil, is strengthened by exercise, as truly as are the organs of the body. But indolence, inattention and non-resistance to evil weakens its energy as effectually as confirmed sedentary habits weaken the body and prevents the healthy operation and developement of its various functions. And at every renewed temptation, more and, yet still more ground is yielded, till the mind is "led captive by the devil at his will." If the influence of the Divine Spirit would be secured by us, we must co-operate with it—we must "work out" it we would have it to "work in" us. The simple voluntary indulgence of thoughts and desires which cannot be lawfully gratified is extremely pernicious to spiritual safety. Such indulgences soon acquire the strength of a habit—and what fearful consequences result from the voluntary formation of a simple habit? For when "lust is conceived it bringeth forth sin" and the end of sin is death. Such indulgences, also, increase the influence of tempations to overt acts of evil. For as the disposition to resist is diminished, which is the consequence of all such indulgences, the temptation is, at least relatively, increased. From these remarks we may see the propriety of the Scriptural precepts, "Resist the devil, and he will flee from you." "Keep the heart, for out of it are the issues of life and death." The more we resist, the easier it will become. The more our thoughts are controlled & prevented from revelling amid impure scenes and guilty imaginings, the more confirmed does the habit of virtuous thought become, and consequently our moral strength is advanced. If we do not resist at all times—if, in our resistance, we are weak and uncertain, through culpable neglect of not bringing to our aid the whole energy of our moral being—we do but invite the enemy to prolong the contest, thereby endangering our safety and spiritual liberty.

SANDWICH ISLAND.

LETTERS FROM MR. GULICK.

Visit to Hawaii—Waipio.

Mr. Gulick is now laboring at Waialua, on the island of Oahu, in connection with Mr. Emerson. For the purpose of improving his health, which has been considerably impaired for several years he made an excursion to Hawaii last year, visiting nearly all the stations occupied by the brethren of the mission on that island. In a letter which is dated December 25, 1846, he gives a brief narrative of this tour. Having landed at Hilo and visited the great volcano, he proceeded to Waimea, Kawaihae, Kohala, Kailua and Kawaloa.

Through all the distance which I travelled, I was struck with the change which is rapidly taking place in the appearance and condition of the Hawaiians. I had supposed that this change was nearly confined to the inhabitants of the seaports and their vicinity; but it appears to be general. Should the transformation go forword in its present ratio a few years, there will be scarcely a vestige left of the custome which was almost universal fifteen years ago.

My subsequent acquaintance with those inhabitants of Oahu who are most remote from its seaport, corroborates the preceding remark. They now demand calico and cotton of a much superior quality to what they bought eagerly a few years since.

Mr. Gulick arrived at Waipio, a romantic valley in the district which is in charge of Mr. Lyons, on the afternoon of Saturday. His remarks upon this secluded spot, and the Sabbath which he spent there, will be read with interest.

Waipio is about a mile wide at the mouth, and extends perhaps three miles in the interior; but after the first mile, it tapers rapidly. It is supposed to be twelve hundred feet below the level of the surrounding country. A beautiful stream formed partly by eascades, which are seen leaping down, at one or two bounds, one thousond or twelve hundred feet, meanders through the middle of the valley. And the ocean after rolls in mountain waves across its mouth, with a violence which, to a stranger, seems to threaten sudden destruction to all the inhabitants.

As we descended into this verdant spot, it lay spread out before us like a map; and an interesting sight it was, sprinkled here and there with human habitations, with horses, cattle and goats, grazing on the margins of the brook. As we drew nearer, pigs and poultry of various kinds appeared. Here we first saw cattle traned to carry loads with pack saddles on their backs; which is quite common on this part of Hawaii. They are guided by a string attached to a ring in the gristle of the nose. When well trained, however, the string is but little used; the word of command being sufficient. The ascent from this valley is so steep in the most favorable places, that the inhabitants are obliged to carry their produce up on their own shoulders nearly half a mile. Then they load their cattle, and thence drive them to Waimea, Kawaihae, and other places.

On the Sabbath I preached twice to attentive, orderly and respectable audiences; and the congregation was larger, moreover, than I expected to see, as they had no previous intimation of my coming. The house was thatched, and entirely in Hawaiian style. But it was rendered comfortable by a pulpit and settees of their own workmanship. Many of the hearers manifested a pleasing interest in the subject discussed and in spiritual matters in general. I did not learn that a single foreigner resided in the valley; and being twelve miles from Waimea, they can only occasionally have the benifit of brother Lyon's labors. These things being taken into the account, the inhabitants of this secluded spot seemed to furnish as striking an illustration of the happy influence of the gospel at these islands as any part of the nation that has come under my observation. The kind people had a table set for us, and food cooked in a civilized and comfortable style.

Mr. Gulick spent several days at Waimea; and during his stay there he made a brief visit to Kahala, "the most secluded station," he thinks, "except Kau, in the Sandwich Island mission; while in natural scenery, neatness, order of the buildings, garden, &c., it is unquestionably one of the most interesting."

Hilo has much improved in its appearance, Mr Gulick says, since his visit to the place eight years before. "There are now streets well laid out, good roads, several respectable buildings, besides three mission houses: and others are in the process of erection. Owing to the of the harbor, the abuntance and excellence of the water, its accessability, the fertility, of the adjacent land; &c., it can scarcely fail to be a place of importance, so long as there shall be commerce in the North Pacific."

It also appears that the cultivation of sugar and coffee at Hawaii,, is receiving more and more attention, "The former is confined to the northern parts; but the latter grows in the west, as well as the north. Mr. Gulick saw several flourishing fields of it, some of several thousand trees.

Schools of Waialua—Property of the Natives.

Another letter of Mr. Gulick, dated February 4, contains a few statements, which may give us some additional information respecting the state of things at the Islands.

We have recently had an examination of our schools. Although those in this district are comparitively backward, the evidence of improvement was very obvious. Ten years ago, and even later, scarcely any thing except spelling and reading was taught in the common schools; and most of the pupils were adults. Now the pupils are entirely children and youth,; and spelling, reading, writing, arithmetic, and geography are generally taught. And the pupils are drilled in these various branches with as much care probably, as was usually bestowed on the same branches in the common schools in the United States, twenty years since. I do not mean to say, however, that there is the same amount of inteligence in our schools, as was then found in the United States. The condition of society at the Islands forbids this.

On the whole I was much pleased with the thoroughness of the examination, conducted by the government superintendant of our district.—He seemed to be determined to know whether they understood what they recited.

Another thing that pleased me, was the decent and cleanly appearance of the children in general. Very few of the boys were destitue of a good shirt and trewsers. All the girls had frocks; and these were generally of good calico or bleached cotton.

Ladies' Department

Young Women

There—we were just going to say that we love to look upon a blooming, healthy active, young lady—we do sincerely. But where in the city can we find one? They are weak, sickly, sentimental, bloated or pale as death. Their manner of living—their fashions—play the mischief with them. Not a day passes but our apothicaries' shops are thronged by young women, who have seen advertised medicines for the cure of the various diseases with which they are afflicted, and which they freely purchase, vainly hoping to find some relief. Why don't they take the fresh morning air and moderate exercise? Why don't they cease to lace their bodies? Why don't they go to bed in season, and dress according to the weather? It cannot be that all females are born into the world with feeble constitutions. They ruin themselves, and scatter the seeds of disease through their system, because, forsooth, it is fashionable. If young ladies would be careful of themselves and live according to the dictates of wisdom, they would need but little medicine and be cheerful and happy. Impure blood produces bloated faces, and debilitates the system. Exercise tends to purify the blood and so does simple food. Remember this and many months will not pass away before we shall behold a regiment of young ladies—stout, strong and hearty—capable of making excellent wivesand mothers and well prepared to exert a good influence over those who may come after them—Colesworthy in the Boston Olive Branch.

A NEW GAME.—A couple of rogues have been playing a new game in the Western part of Ohio. One passed through the country, confining his visits to small villages, distributing Bank Note Lists, in which the Tenth Ward Bank, of New York, a broken establishment, was quoted at par. The other soon followed with the bills of the said Bank, and succeeded in doing the honest people to the amount of some hundreds.

Look out!

A NEW LIFE-PRESERVER.—Mr. Edward Sargent, of Bangor, Me., has invented a new method of stopping railroad cars, by which, says the Whig, at the slightest notice the brakeman may apply the velocity of the train to aid in bringing all the wheels in the train to a dead stop.

Let's have it.

The dwelling house of Mr. Fleet Weeks, at Babylon, Long Island, took fire a few days since, and was burned to the ground, and an interesting boy six years old, was consumed. The rest of the family was rescued, some with severe burns.

Miscellaneous.

From the New England Puritan.

"No Tenement."

Such an averment is quite common in paishes.—There is "no tenement" for the ministers of the Gospel. Perhaps he has been settled for years, and all that time, like a certain dove, has found no place for the sole of his foot. A pastor, who has recently been dismissed from an able parish was settled (?) in it more than half a dozen years, yet all the while he was subject to inconvenience for want of a suitable tenement. A good minister, now in heaven, was tossed about from year to year, in a prosperous community, to the constant discomfort of himself and family because the society to which he ministered would not fulfil its agreement to provide a parsonage. At this hour, there are scores of Christ's ministers, pastors of churches, perplexed exceedingly because tenements are not provided for them. A thousand facts on this subject might easily be collected, that would startle every hearer of them, should he not be himself one of the guilty. Why should those whom Christ employs, be hunted about in a place, till they are hunted out of it, as if they were devouring beasts from the woods? If a parsonage be built, the probability is that it will be a standing proof of contractedness. Some part will be unfinished, and perhaps it will be amazingly incommodious. Parsonages are generally distinguishable, by their manifest want of paint. Rents, too, are often unreasonably high.

Why are parishes so cruel to ministers of the gospel? Wherefore should there be a combination to pluck his small salary from him? It sometimes seems as if all with whom the pastor trades, are in hot pursuit of his last cent. Church members would do well to be a little more cautious how they allow their shepherds to be treated. Jesus Christ will curse those who trample on his ambassadors.

That hospitality which once characterized ministers, and which ought to be cultivated, is dying out, if it be not now dead. The pastors are so pinched every way, that they must seem to be unkind!

A parish is quite willing to conclude the minister is rich, though there are the most unquestionable proofs that he is poor. Suppose he is "well off;" it will do his people no hurt, but much good, to make him occasional presents. Sympathy expressed in tangible, tokens has a decidedly favorable influence on a pastor. Alas, how little of such sympathy some of them get!

Ministers are men, but their office is sacred, and for any to treat it with contempt is to be guilty of a fearful deed. How can revivals of religion be expected while such narrowness as now exists towards pastors, is permitted to remain? Mighty God, thou seest thy people devoured by covetousness. Woe, woe, woe will be to those minister-abusing churches and societies.

From the Southport American.

The Great Lakes.

The chain of "Fresh Water Mediterraneans" that go so largely towards dividing the territory of "Uncle Sam" from the domain of 'Mrs. Vica' are geographical wonder. Extending from east to west over nearly fifteen and a half degrees of longitude, they seem, regarding them upon the map, to rest like a crown of waters upon the head of the Union, their centre of gravity, the Island of Mackinac, balancing upon the meridian which separates Indiana & Ohio, equi-divides Kentucky and Tennessee, and passes between Georgia and Alabama, and East and West Florida into the Gulf of Mexico. The difference in the latitude of the northern and southern extreme points of the Lakes is not far from eight & a half degrees.—The estimated area of country draining into them is 400,000 square miles—the extent covered by the waters of the whole is 93,000 square miles, divided as follows: Ontario, 6,300; Erie, 9,600; St. Clair, 360; Huron 20,400; Michigan, including the Bay, 24,400; Superior, 32,000. The waters of the "Father of Lakes" (Superior) are 628 feet above the level of the sea; which elevation is attained by equal gradations, each lake rising above the previous one, from Ontario to Superior. The surface of the waters of Ontario is 232 feet above the tide water of the St. Lawrence—Erie rises 333 feet above Ontario—St. Clair 6 feet above Erie—Huron and Michigan are 13 feet higher than St. Clair, and Superior rises 44 feet above those.

The St. Clair, is by far the shallowest of any of the lakes—the average depth being about 20 feet—Erie averages in depth about 84 feet—Ontario 500—Superior 900—Huron and Michigan 1000, as nearly as can be arrived at. The deepest soundings are found in Lake Huron. Off Saginaw Bay. we are told, leads have sunk, 1,800 feet, or 1,200 feet below the level of the Atlantic Ocean, without reaching bottom.

Great difference is observable in the transparency and purity of the waters of the several lakes. Those are Ontario, Erie, and the Southern part of Michigan have no peculiar excellence—while those of the Northern part of Lake Michigan and of Lake Huron, surpass in clearness and flavor any waters of which we have ever drank, though a still greater purity and a higher relish is said, by those who have visited that lake, to distinguish the waters of Superior.

So completely transparent are the waters of Huron, that the rays of the sun are said to pass through them as through the cloudless atmosphere, without meeting with solid matters in suspension to elicit their heat. Thus Dr. Drake accounts for the fact, which he himself ascertained by experiment, that the water on the surface and that two hundred feet below the same spot, had precisely the same temperament, fifty-six degrees.

Through the Welland Canal the navigation of the lakes is uninterrupted for distance of 844 miles from east to west—the distance north and south is, of course, various, ranging from 347 miles as the extreme distance. The country to which these waters are the great highway of transport, has been the theme of high wrought eulogium, for the variety and richness of its soil, and the extent of its resources. As well as the justness of these praises, as the extent to which this fertility is being subjected to the hand of culture and the rapidity with which these resources are being developed, under the life-bringing touch of the enterprise which peculiarly characterizes its inhabitants, is gathered from a bare glance at the fact that the commerce of the four lakes, including all capital afloat, during the year 1843, was estimated by the Topographical Bureau at $65,000,000.

The total amount expended by the general government on these lakes for the improvements necessary to protect and convenience this commerce, is stated by Mr. Whittlesey of Ohio, at $2,100,000.

When the projected ship canal around the Falls of St. Marie, shall be completed, the wide expanse of Lake Superior will be added to the present extent of the lake navigation—allowing the adventurous commercialist to crowd some 175 miles still farther North and several hundreds farther West. The length of the route proposed to be cut by this canal is said to be but three-fourths of a mile, and the whole expense of the improvement is estimated, if we rightly remember, at about $230,000. By this comparatively small outlay, less than the cost of three months congressional black-guard, access is at once attained to the whole country tributary to Lake Superior—the tract so rich in timber and mineral wealth that it has not been unaptly termed the "Denmark of America."

From the Watchman of the Valley.

"Cast thy Bread upon the Waters"

It sometimes happens that a christian may labor, for years in the service of his Heavenly Master, without being permitted to see any fruit of his toil, or gather up any substantial results.—Under such circumstances, it requires strong faith and undying perseverance to press on with vigor, in the path of duty.

The Tract distributor and Colporteur perhaps, oftener than any others, are called, in their self-denying labors, to toil on for a long time, without seeing any fruit. The following fact, furnished a short time since by a worthy clergyman in Indiana, beautifully illustrates the Divine precept and promise, "Cast thy bread upon the waters, for thou shalt find it after many days."

A student at Cincinnati, while prosecuting his studies for the Christian ministry, was accustomed each Saturday P. M. to labor as a Colporteur, and distribute tracts on the steamboats he found at the crowded levee. During all this time he saw no other fruit of his labor than an occasional look of interest, or an expression of gratitude, for the silent messengers of mercy he bestowed. At length, having completed his studies, he went out as a Domestic missionary to the state of Illinois. His field of missionary labor consisted of a large and destitute county, through which he was accustomed to travel, and to preach at those points, where he could best assemble the people together. On one occasion, as he penetrated into a remote neighborhood, which he had never before visited, he called at a house where he was instantly recognized by a young lady, a member of the family, who expressed great joy at seeing him. He was himself unable to recover any clue, by which he might identify the individual who addressed him, and inquired where she had ever seen him before.

"But do you not remember," said she, that when we were moving out from Pennsylvania to Illinois you came on board the steamboat at Cincinnati, and talked with me about my soul, and gave me this tract, "The Way to be Saved?"

"This tract," said she, holding up the silent messenger of truth, worn by frequent perusal, "this tract, through the boundless mercy of God, led me to see my sins, and to trust in the cross of Christ alone for pardon. The same Divine mercy has reached my dear parents—both impenitent before—and they now rejoice with me in the same atoning Saviour. Oh sir!" she added, "we can never express our gratitude to God, for sending you to meet us on our way, with such precious words of instruction. We shall never forget you, nor this tract, to our dying day."

The young minister was overwhelmed with surprise and joy. He had entirely forgotten the person before him, and the circumstance of ever giving her a tract. But he found by comparing the date with that of his own Colporteur labors, that he was distributing tracts among the boats at the same time. He had labored long and faithfully, and had distributed many tracts, but had never before seen any direct results. But now, a long time after he had in toil and sorrow, sowed the seed of Divine truth, he found it coming up and bearing precious fruits of righteousnes, directly on his field of missionary labor.—His heart was filled with gratitude, and he went forward with new courage in the service of his Heavenly Master.

Christian reader! are you engaged in the self-denying work of Tract distribution? Be not discouraged. You go forth now weeping, bearing precious seed. But if you persevere with real faith, you shall return again rejoicing, bringing your sheaves with you.

P. B. D.

Who Rob orchards!

In a certain village of the far West was an atheist. He was a great admirer of Robert Dale Owen and Fanny Wright; but he could see no excellence or beauty in the Son of Righteousness. This man, of course, never entered any place of worship. Indeed, in the fruit season, he was specially busy on the Sabbath in defending his orchards from his great enemies, the woodpecker, and the idle and profligate persons of the village, who, on that day, made usually sad havoc among his apples and peaches.

One day, while at work with his son-in-law—an atheist like himself, although a more kind and courteous gentleman—as the pastor of a congregation was passing, he very rudely thus accosted the minister:—

"Sir, what is the use of your preaching?—What good do you do by it? Why don't you teach these fellows here better morals? Why don't you tell them something about stealing, in your sermons, and keep them from robbing my orchards?"

To this the minister pleasantly replied, "My dear sir, I am sorry you are so annoyed, and I should most willingly read the fellows who rob your orchards a lecture on thieving, but the truth is, they are all so like you and the major here, I never get a chance!"

"Good, good!" replied the major, laughing; on which the elder atheist, blushing a litle, and in an opologetical tone, said,

"Well, I believe it is true enough; it is not the church-going people that steal my apples."

Any sin committed in a jest, is greater than when it is done in earnest.

☞ If the sick wish a diseased stomach restored and impure blood cleansed without endangering the constitution, go to J. Deen, Grocer and Shoemaker, Putnam, and obtain a box of Dr. Le Roy's Sarsaparilla and Wild Cherry Pills which is the best family medicine now in use. So says Mr. O'Neil the Agent.

DR. LE ROY'S

Wild Cherry, and Sarsaparilla PILLS.

DR. LE ROY has most happily succeeded in combining Wild Cherry and Sarsaparilla with other vegetable ingredients, so as to produce a medicine at once tonic, and purgative, the only perfect discovery of the kind ever made. Their great peculiar excellence, and that which distinguishes them from all other purnatives is, that their operation is followed by no re-action. Their unrivalled purifying and purgative properties, for which they are indebted to the essence of Sarsaparilla, and other ingredients, being controlled by their highly tonic virtues, derived from the extract of Wild Cherry, they do not strain the digestive organs into action, as is the mode of operation with other cathartics, but on the contrary strengthen them into action. Thus all other purgative medicines produce more or less subsequent costiveness, and sluggisnness of the gastric juice, while Dr. Le Roy's Pills leave all the machinery of the system full of life and activity, and the bowels open and natural. "Hence," writes Dr. Cheeseman, "they are the only active purgative which I can recommend with confidence, and without alarm; for they remove nothing but what ought to be removed—neither rack, nor strain—occasion no apathy or debilitation—and leave the bowels free, open, and vigorous." But the great virtue of Dr. Le Roy's Pills—the virtue which has spread their fame over the two hemispheres with a rapidity almost miraculous—lies in their purification of the blood. Here they not only stand altogether unrivalled, but fill up the measure of desire. They at once arrest the formation of bad blood, by removing all impurities from the chyle, of which the blood is formed; and moreover keep it clean, by toning and strengthing the digestive organs, so as to be able to exclude from it all matter of an innutricious nature; and then they purify the blood already in circulation; and never cease operation until it is entirely free from every noxious particle, & full of health, life, and vigor. THE BALM OF GILEAD.

In Gilead's vale a tree was seen,
Renowned in days of old;
Summer and winter it was green,
And pleasant to behold.

Not like the tow'ring cedar trees
Of Lebanon it stood,
Fann'd and caress'd by every breeze,
Lord of the mountain wood.

Not like the sturdy oak it grew,
Nor like the lofty pine;
But fair though lowly like unto
The myrtle or the vine.

In the low vale it humbly spread
Midst fadeless groves of palm;
Its constant cool refreshing shade
And sweet its precious balm.

Through every pore however small
Ascending from the root,
This famous band pervaded all
The trunk, the branch, the fruit.

From wounds the precious juice distill'd
Like tear-drops from the eye,
While all the atmosphere was fill'd
With sweetest fragrancy.

To give their tortured systems ease
With healing virtues fraught,
The sick of many a dire disease
This peerless balsam sought.

Twice told its weight in silver pure
Was in the balance laid,
By eager merchants, to procure
This precious balsam, paid.

'Tis lowly thus to human view
The sacred vine appears,
But green and fresh and lovely through
The change of rolling years.

Here from affliction's noon-tide heat,
Or from the low'ring sky,
To find a sure—a safe retreat,
The humble soul can fly.

Thus from its wounds most freely flows
A precious—priceless balm,
Potent to heal life's numerous woes,
The troubled breast to calm.

Not gold nor silver need we bring
This balsam to procure,
'Tis free alike for slave and king,
The rich or suffering poor.

HISTORICAL REMINISCENCES OF THE WAR OF 1812.

NO, III.

MR. EDITOR: In my last number I mentioned that the spies sent to the Indian camp saw quite a number of Indians on horseback proceeded up the river towards Winchester's camp, about 40 miles up the river. As we were fearful they might not return before dark, we kept our forces in the woods, out of sight, until after dark. The weather was cold for the season, (12th November,) and ice formed half an inch thick that night: our men suffered intensely, as they were in worn-out summer clothes; fires could not be lighted for fear of discovering ourselves to the enemy: and we lay on the bank of the river until about nine o'clock P. M. In the meantime, Captain Hinkson, with a few of his men went down the river, till opposite the Indian camp, (3 miles,) when they found they were having a dance, and making much noise, apparently unconscious of our being in the vicinity. Two of our men who lived at the Rapids before Hull's surrender, were sent with horses to ascertain if the river was fordable; on their return, one reported it practicable to ford, though high; the other was of opinion it was not fordable for men on foot. This was a dilemma we had little reason to expect, as we had had no rain from the time the spies had been there when Clark was taken, and they had represented the river as low. (We ascertained afterward that at Winchester's camp the river had risen four feet that day.) Our men were eager for action;—the opportunity was a good one to attack the hostile Indians by surprise.—The plan of attack had been made known; the danger if defeated explained; and permission for any who were not prepared to run all risks to return.—None took advantage of this permission, and so far as appearances would justify conclusions, we thought our chance of success was very flattering: so the General determined to try. In order to encourage the men, he was the first to enter the river, on foot, with Captain Wood of the Spies. The men were directed to ford in platoons, each man holding by the shoulder of his left hand man, while with his right arm, he held his gun out of the water. Our choicest men were the three companies from Gallia and Athens, volunteers; these were in first. The ford was about a mile below where we had lain for several hours. The road along the margin of the river, over a prairie elevated four or five feet above the water. I had been left in the rear to see that the different battalions took up the line of march in the proper order; when I arrived at the ford, the river was full of men, and I hastened over with a man on my horse behind me, but ere I could reach the opposite shore, a large number near that bank had fallen, and were struggling to regain their footing, but continued to drift further and further down the Rapids. General Tupper, Captain Wood, and several other officers and men had gained the bank, but the men in the river were alarmed at the halooing, and noise.—The water in some parts came to the arm-pits, and was very swift. After rescuing the fallen men with the assistance of a few officers on horseback, I satisfied myself we had not mistaken the ford, by crossing over and back above the men; and having as was my duty, inspected the condition of those who had crossed, found nearly all the guns wet with loads in them;—all the cartridge ammunition spoiled;—but the rifle powder in the horns dry. I reported the state of affairs to General Tupper, and he, consulting with the officers around him, it was determined to halt the troops, not yet in the river; and re-cross with the assistance of the officers' horses, those on the west side of the river. This we effected about two hours before daylight. We regained a position in the woods;—unbreached the guns, to get out the wet loads;—made a distribution of the dry ammunition, and prepared for action as well as we could. About forty men, mostly Spies, under Captain Wood, had left the ford while we were re-crossing our wet men, and took a position to cover us from any attempt the enemy might make to intercept our retreat; and they remained on the west side of the river during the balance of the night, opposite where we had built our fires; but they without fire. In the morning I assisted in bringing these men over the river, on a few (9) officers' horses. On the first crossing three out of the nine horses fell, with two men on each These men could not again mount and had to wade; this was about the usual proportion which fell. While the men were getting their guns in order, before day, General Tupper again sent Captain Hinkson down, to see if the Indians had discovered us; with orders not to show himself; and he was informed that the detachment would, as soon as they could be got ready, be marched down, nearly opposite the Indian camp; with a view of decoying them to this side; as they had boats, and a plenty of horses, (as I have said eighty of which were from Hull's army.) About the time we had crossed the men over the river that morning who had remained there over night, the troops were ready to march. Two men of Major Galloway's Battalion had been taken sick, and two well ones were left with them, with two horses, with orders to go back for our camp, as soon as possible. The command was then marched down the river, in the woods, until opposite the Indian camp, about half a mile from the river, and then halted, to hear from Captain Hinkson. Hinkson arrived on the edge of the high ground opposite the Indian camp, about day-light; and while he with his nine men, were earnestly observing them, three Indians, who had crossed early, and were in the corn-field immediately below them, fired on them. They missed their aim, and our men firing on them, killed one, and wounded another; but as soon as the guns were fired, a large number of the Indians rushed to the boats, to cross, and Hinkson with his utmost speed, made for the location where he had left us. Having run these three miles, he found we had left, but found the two sick men and their guard still there—warning these of the danger, he took our trail, and returned down the river to us. A few minutes brought the pursuing Indians to our lines; but we were ready to encounter them, and they soon retreated. Being discovered, we advanced, and shew ourselves opposite their camp; and could see large numbers. A few shots were fired at them over the river, but the distance was too great for any serious effect. We saw the British boats push off down the river;—the women and young ones were leaving on the Detroit road; but the warriors, many of them on horses, going up the river towards the ford. As we had been already 24 hours without provisions, and had neither axes or tents, it was necessary we should be on our way back to our camp that night; and the detachment was marched on their way up the river. Near half a mile had been passed over, when some of the men fired at a gang of hogs, that passed down one line, and two men who had lived there, stopped to get a piece of one they had killed; and as the troops continued to advance, they were left behind, and the Indians killed one, while the other made his escape; another half mile and the Indians attached near the rear of our line, trying to draw us back from the river, while a large body of them were crossing on their horses, under the superintendence of Colonel Elliot. They were discovered and a few rounds of musket shots drove them back; though a few had reached our side of the river. Several were killed in the river though the distance from the high ground was a very long shot,—a pond and prairie lay between us and the river.—We had been skirmishing with Indians, mounted, and on foot, for several hours; though most of the fighting on our part, was done by the two companies of Spies, who not being confined to a particular place in the lines, fought as skirmishers, and as the Indians mostly fought on horseback, with carbines, and pistols, they would, in small squads, dash up, fire, and retreat; and this kind of contest suited the character of the Spies, and they nobly acted the part assigned them. Captain Wood was supposed to have killed three, as they were seen to fall, at the crack of his rifle, by others in his company. One old Spy was chased by three Indians on horses, some distance, until nearly exhausted, he had almost given himself up for lost, when a Spy that was lame, and on horseback, dashed out of our line to his rescue, and at the distance of a hundred yards, shot the foremost Indian from his horse, and the other two retreated with the body of their comrade before one of them. Their horses were admirably trained; and some of them were known by our men as having been owned by officers of Hull's army, particularly a fine grey, on which Colonel Elliot rode round our lines at full speed to reconnoitre our command during the day.

Letter from a German to his Fatherland

A Milwaukie (Wisconsin) paper publishes a translation of a letter in the Schnell Post from a German in that Territory to his friends in Germany. It shows how much our privileges are prized by those who never previously enjoyed the like:

"DEAR FRIENDS—We arrived at America in good health. We reached Milwaukie on the 10th of July, and hope that this letter will find you in good health. We have all been sea-sick, but nobody died. The 3d of July we took the steamboat to Albany, and there took the railroad for Milwaukie. We then bought land of the State.—I, John———, bought me eighty acres, (that is, in Germany, 120 morgen.) Then we went by wagon to a place thirty-six miles from Milwaukie, where we could feast our eyes on trees.—There I built me a house of trees, 28 feet long and 18 feet wide, and have bought a stove for $18, upon which we can cook and bake bread too. We have bought a cow with a calf for $15, which could not be bought in Germany for forty dollars.

"They think, in Germany, it is all wild in America;—no, the wild part is in Germany. The cities are prettier here than there, and we have all kinds of trees, which they have not got in Germany. I have on my land many trees, oak, beech, Linden, sugar cane, (maple) and citron (cedar) trees. We are two miles from church. We have mass every month. After New-Year we have it every Sunday. Here we live Catholic—here we can nightly pray. The very poorest is as good as the richest. One can every day and year go to the highest officers. We need not touch our hats: we can keep our pipe in our mouth. We can thank God a thousand times, that he has brought us out of the land of bondage into the promised land; for we have here a fine land, and liberty.

"I pay every year $2 taxes for 120 morgen; it is fixed by the United States of America.—There is every thing enough in America. Flour costs $3 a barrel, and there is every thing cheap here.

"Trade is free to all here. I wish you would all come to me. You need not be ashamed to come, for people come here who have no more money than John W——, of Berg. Who is once in the Kingdom, (United States,) he never goes back to Prussia. The very poorest in America is more than the very richest in the Graud Duchy of Luxemburgh. A day laborer earns every day a dollar, and he need not give any drunken lawyer's clerk any thing of it. All lads and lasses I bid come. Here we are happy. He who serves a year can earn or buy 80 acres of land, and none of it goes to the officers as in Germany.—Come all from the slave land,—from the slave land to the free land,—for we have a free land here, and we thank God a thousand times that he has brought us out of the slave land to the free land. Brothers and sisters, come all to me—to us. I write to you the truth—the whole pure truth—so as God may help me, and His Holy Gospel. Believe the letter which I write to you. You would thank God if you were here, for I think how much a free land is better than a slave land. Here is no war, and nothing to fear: here every thing is plenty.

"There are now twenty-nine United States.—The money that they coin has on it a star for each. This signifies that the United States are as free as the stars of Heaven. One State is larger than France. Shall we not rejoice that we are in this land. Yes, we thank God one thousand times, and one thousand times one thousand, that he has brought us out of the slave land to the promised land. It is calculated that five hundred come every day. You must not think that America is all wild—for there are railroads, steamships, and manufactories, as in Europe. I hope from my heart that this letter will find you in good health; and write me back how it is in Germany—for I have heard that the hail has done much harm, and that the taxes have become much heavier.

"We have all thought of you much, but we do not want to be with you; and if Peter———, of Berg, would give me his whole property, if I would carry back my wife and children, I would say no! I wish yet that we could all see each other in America, but we shall never see each other till the last day. I salute you all. Amen."

Quaint and Curious.

Some plodding genius has discovered, while spending his own time, that the word TIME itself, when artificially transposed or meta-grammised, will form the following words: meti, emit, item. And, if the afore-named words and its anagrams be placed in the following quadratic position, they will form what may be termed an anagramic palindrome:

TIME.
ITEM.
METI.
EMIT.

This word, Time, is the only word in the English language which can be thus arranged, and the different transpositions thereof are all at the same time Latin words. These words in English, as well as in Latin. may be read either upwards or downwards.

The English words, TIME, ITEM, METI, and EMIT, (to send forth,) are mentioned above; and of the Latin ones, (1) Time signifies—fear thou; (2) Item—likewise; (3) Meti—to be measured; (4) Emit—he buys.

Materials for Thought.

Poetry of Childhood and Age.

"When I am a man!" is the poetry of childhood. "When I was a child," is the poetry of age. There is a world of truth in this observation. In both cases, the past and the future preponderate over the present. What Italy was, is the poetry of Europe. What America will be, is the poetry of the New World.

"'Tis strange how thoughts upon a child
Will, like a presence, sometimes press,
And when his pulse is beating wild,
And life itself is in excess,—
When foot and hand, and ear and eye,
Are all with ardor straining high,—
How in his heart will spring
A feeling, whose mysterious thrall
Is stronger, sweeter far than all;
And on its silent wing,
How with the clouds, he'll float away,
As wandering and as lost as they!"

In looking upon the Boy, the aged may exclaim—

"There's something in a noble boy,
A brave, free-hearted, careless one,
With his unchecked, unbidden joy;
His dread of books and love of fun,
And in his clear and ready smile,
Unshaded by a thought of guile,
And unrepressed by sadness,
Which brings me to my childhood back,
As if I trod its very track,
And felt its very gladness."

TEMPERANCE.—When inebriating liquors were first introduced, the earth was visited with innumerable new curses. They have overspread the earth like a second deluge, the waters of which have but recently began to subside. There is only one mountain in all the world, where safety can be found; and it is large enough for all of earth's inhabitants. To all it is visible.

Let but the real followers of Christ be true to Him, and He will take care of his Church. Let them preach his Gospel, and He will make it the instrument of overturning anti-christ. Preaching in its wisest sense is comprehensive not merely of the delivery of formal discourses, but the use of all those means, private and public, the living voice and the press, by which truth may be put in contrast with the minds and hearts of our fellow-men.

INTOXICATION IN SWEDEN.—For the fourth offence a man is exposed in the parish church the following Sunday, deprived of the elective franchise, and disqualified to appear as a representative. Good. A drunken man should not be allowed to vote for sober men, and less for drunkards. Drunkards are sorry representatives of their fellows. Sober men they can not truly represent at all.

Ministerial.

Useful Hints to Public Speakers.

It is a curious fact in the history of sound, that the loudest noises always perish on the spot where they are produced, whereas musical notes will be heard at a great distance. Thus if we approach within a mile or two of a town or village, in which a fair is held, we may hear very faintly the clamor of the multitude, but more distinctly the organs and other musical instruments which are played for their amusement. If a Cremona violin, a real Amati, be played by the side of a modern fiddle, the latter will sound much louder of the two; but the sweet brilliant tone of the Amati, will be heard at a distance, the other cannot reach. Dr. Young, on the authority of Derham, states that, at Gibralter, the human voice is heard at the distance of ten miles. 'It is a well known fact that the human voice may be heard at a greater distance than that of any other animal. Thus, when the cottager in the woods, or in the open plain, wishes to call her husband, who is working at a distance, she does not shout, but pitches her voice to a musical key, which she knows from habit, and by that means reaches his ear. The loudest roar of the largest lion could not penetrate so far. "This property of music in the human voice," says the author, 'is strikingly shown in the cathedrals abroad. There the mass is entirely performed in musical sounds, and becomes audible to every devoted, however placed in the remotest part of the church; whereas, if the same mass had been read, the sounds would not have travelled beyond the precincts of the choir.' Those orators who are heard in large assemblies most distinctly, and at the greatest distance, are those who, by modulating the voice, render it more musical. Loud speakers are seldom heard to advantage.

Burk's voice is said to have been a sort of lofty cry, which tended, as much as the formality of his discourse in the house of Commons, to send the members to their dinner. Chatham's lowest whisper was distinctly heard: 'his middle tones were sweet, rich and beautifully varied,' says a writer, describing the orator; 'when he raised his voice to its highest pitch, the house was completely filled with the volume of sound; and the effect was awful, except when he wished to cheer or animate—and then he had spirit-stirring notes, which were perfectly irresistible. The terrible, however, was his peculiar power. Then the house sunk before him; still he was dignified, and wonderful as was his eloquence, it was attended with this important effect, that it possessed every one with a conviction that there was something in him finer even than his words: that the man was greater, infinitely greatly, than the orator.—Cowper.

A CHILD'S TEARS.—A Welsh clergyman asked a little girl for the text of the last sermon. The child gave no answer—she only wept. He found out that she had no Bible in which to look for the text; and this led him to enquire whether her parents or neighbors had a Bible; and this led him to begin a Bible Society for Wales. Some good people in London said, "Why should not we have a Bible Society for England, too?" And others said, "And for France and the nations of Europe?" And then another said, "And why not have a Bible Society for the whole world?" The tears of that little girl led to the formation of the British and Foreign Bible Society.—Amer. Messenger.

Miscellaneous.

Pius IX---The Reformer.

PIUS IX.—Cardinal Mastai Ferreti was elected Pope, June 16th, 1846, and assumed the title of Pius IX. He at once entered upon a course the reverse of that which his predecessor had pursued. He went through the street on foot, which the five preceding Popes had never done. He preached, which no Pope had done before for three hundred years. He sought the society of men of talent and information, and spent much time with them and with the officers of the government, discussing projects of reform. He gave audience without the ordinary ceremonies, and appointed days on which the meanest subject could have free access to his person.

Nor were these mere tricks to gain popularity, but the fruit of an honest desire to be acquainted with the wants of his people, that he might relieve them. A common soldier brought to him a loaf of miserable bread, and said it was a fair sample of their rations. Pius took the loaf, and laid it on the plate of the minister of war, whom he had invited to dinner; and as the astonished functionary turned pale, charged him with the fault. After that he went through the barracks, found 4000 loaves of a similar character, which he distributed to the poor; he degraded the minister, imprisoned the bakers, and gave each soldier money to buy bread for himself.

On the 16th of July, just one month after his elevation, appeared the first great public act of his administration, in a decree of amnesty for political offences, which restored to liberty, their country, their homes, and the rights of citizenship, the victims of previous tyranny, to the estimated number of 6000. Many of them were in great poverty, and a subscription was started in Rome for their relief. Marini governor of the city, represented to the Pope that a dangerous political motive had prompted the movement. The Pope called for the subscription paper, put down his own name for 100 and Marini's for 10 scudi and ordered it to be handed around amongst the nobility. Renzi, the leader of an insurrection at Rimini the previous year, called on him to return thanks for the restoration of his liberty, and was received as a son rather than a rebel, and during a long and affectionate conversation, Pius took from his desk a copy of Renzi's revolutionary proclamation, and said that although parts of it were wrong, it contained many useful suggestions of which he should avail himself.

Galetti, another rebel leader, who had been in prison three years, presented him a memoir on the reforms which were needed in the law of mortgages, and received in return a medal of honor. This conduct showed that he sympathized with the motives and actions of the political offenders, as well as with their sufferings. He in fact put himself at the head of the reform party, and set himself busy at work to bring about those very changes which a few months before it was treason to think of. "My people," said he, "laying his hand on the New Testament, "may expect justice and mercy from me, for my only guide is this book."

He sent out circulars to the governors of the provinces, requiring them to investigate and report upon the temporal and religious condition of the people, and the methods of improving them, and especially with regard to the diffusion of education, and the establishment of a military school for poor boys at Rome. With the same object, he re-instituted a board of education, which had been first established by Leo X, but never called together since his time. He appointed a number of committees, partly of ecclesiastics and partly of learned laymen, each charged with the investigation of some subject which concerned the public welfare and the drawing up of the plans for meliorating the condition of the people.

Among these subjects were the following—Reform of the municipal organization—Reform of the criminal and civil code, the commission on which have already reported in favor of trial by jury—suppression of vagrancy—improvement of forests and rivers—construction of railroads—the condition of the Jews in Rome—the tariff on imports—the duties upon salt and other articles of home production—the sanatory condition of towns, and the erection of gas works. He proposed also to his council the abolition of capital punishments, secularizing of the state offices, which had long been monopolized by the clergy. The cardinals who composed this council were some of them shocked at the infalible radicalism of the Holy See and one of them told him that if he did not alter his system, the people would demand a constitution. "And why," was the answer, "should I not accede to their desire, if a constitution is necessary to the welfare of my subjects."

Such an answer did not satisfy the uneasy dignitaries, and a conspiracy was formed, but its authors were discovered, the council abolished, and one appointed in its place composed of simple prelates with a single cardinal for president; and now that also has given way to a body composed partly of laymen. Formidable opposition was experienced from neighboring despotic governments and especially that of Austria, which made energetic protests, gathered armies, fomented insurrections, and even marched the troops into the papal territory. Amidst all these difficulties, added to those which are inseparable from such an immense labor of reform as Pius IX marked out for himself, it is not wonderful that he has been obliged to defer the execution of some projects till a more favorable season, and to even recede slightly in one or two points from positions already taken.

Thus in regard to the censorship of the press, a point on which the remonstrances of Austria are supposed to have been especially urgent, the subjects of the Pope were greatly disappointed by the language of the decree which he issued, mitigating but slightly the severity of previous laws, and equally gratified by the character of the new censors, who had been selected from the ranks of literary men of known liberality. The execution of the law has been so satisfactory, that the number of newspapers in Rome has trebled under its influence, and that of other publications doubled, so that the whole number of periodicals is now not far from 30.

Be the intentions of the new Pope what they may, he has so managed both his private conduct and public acts, as to gain the unbounded confidence of his people, and produce such good conduct, order and quiet among them as to astonish even his best friends. The number of offences committed against person or property in Rome, in June, 1846, was 500, in July, 340, in August 360, in September 200, and in Oct. 112. —Jour. of Com.

THINGS WHICH YOU MUST BE SURE TO DO.

When you go from a room on a cold day, you must be sure to leave the door open. It's so pleasant to have a fresh breeze in a heated apartment.

When you see a house nicely furnished be sure to rest your feet upon the chairs. If you are seated use the rounds; but if you're standing, put one foot upon the floor and the other upon the seat of the chair. It shows that you're easy in your manners.

If you're a tobacco chewer never throw your quid out upon entering a parlor or a place of worship. It's so picturesque to see the walls and floor of a church bespattered with tobacco juice.

When you go out a visiting be sure to take all your children along. If your friend should have a number of handsome books lying about, and the children overhaul them pretty roughly, "to see the pictures," don't interrupt the pretty dears by any means. You may say "don't my darling" in a mild voice, but you must never attempt to enforce the admonition. What if your friend does feel a little uneasy or has some trouble in arranging things after you have gone?—Your visit will be remembered the longer for it.

When you spend some time with a friend, "make yourself at home," by putting everything in confusion. 'Twould reflect on his hospitality to attempt being orderly.

If you get into a controversy be sure to denounce all who differ from you as being influenced by sinister motives. Its an admirable method of displaying the charity, which thinketh no evil.

When you go to church be sure to stand about the doors, for fifteen or twenty minutes to converse about matters and things in general.—When you enter be careful to note how your acquaintances are dressed. Take particular pains to stare strangers out of countenance, especially females; and neglect upon no consideration to turn your head around whenever the door opens. It shows that you are interested in all that's going on.

N. B. If you have a baby that's given to squalling be sure to fetch it along. The exercise of its infantile lungs will relieve the monotony of worship.

You needn't be particular about attending your own church regularly. Run about from one place of worship to another. It shows that you are actuated by a liberal spirit.

If you belong to a choir, select the most difficult pieces and endeavor to "show off" upon all occasions. It will prevent the unmusical congregation from uniting with you in the praise of God.

If you wish to purchase a yard of tape, or two cent's worth of needles, be sure to make the merchant empty his shelves upon the counter.—It shows that you appreciate his accommodating spirit.

Never submit to the decision of the majority in church affairs if it goes against you. It shows that you're independent. And if you are not made a leader in any undertaking, have nothing to do with it. It shows that you respect yourself.—Meth. Prot,

To Destroy Cockroaches.

MR. BATEHAM: In your last paper, I notice you ask for information how to destroy cockroaches. The following composition is a certain remedy for them:

Take a teaspoon heaped full of red lead, mix it well in an earthen dish with half a gill of molasses, then add a pint of fine corn meal—when well mixed together, put it on the floor and places where they are discovered, and they will soon disappear. Nothing will kill them more effectually than this composition.

GEORGE FELIX,
Manufacturer of 'Extract of Coffee.'
Pittsburgh, Pa., Nov. 1847.

ANOTHER REMEDY.—A subscriber in Summit county, informs us that cockroaches can be effectually distroyed, or driven from a house, by scattering lobelia, the green or dried plant (Lobelia inflata,) about their haunts. He says these varmints are radical 'Thompsonians' and so fond of lobelia that they will kill themselves with it. If this is so, they are the greatest fools of their size we ever saw.—O. Cult.

A Caution to Horse-thieves.

A Colporteur in Indiana apologises for not sending a prompt report by saying, "My horse was stolen on the night of the 28th ult. I pursued the thief four days, caught him, and recovered my horse. Court being in session, the rogue was tried, and sentenced to hard labor in the state prison for seven years!"

We hope light-fingered gentry will learn that colporteurs are made of too energetic to lose their horses without a long chase! Seven years' hard work is paying dearly for a four-day's ride on a stolen horse. "The way of transgressors is hard."—Amer. Messenger

PLEASING INCIDENTS.—A kind and good, as well as a distinguished man, was the late Judge Smith, of New Hampshire. His interest in the young, his power of entertaining them, and his familiar intercourse with them, form to our view one of the pleasantest features of his character. In this respect he was like Chief Justice Marshall. An interesting fact or two will illustrate this:

A lady, at whose house he was, asked he daughter, about three years old, to go to anothe room for her father.

'I will,' she said, 'when Judge Smith is not here.'

A little fellow, just beginning to talk, was so entertained by him that every time he paused, he called out—

'Man, talk more; man talk more!'

Another little girl, with whom he had been playing and talking some time, being asked to go out with her mother, said—

'No, no; I want to stay here; I want to hear what he will say next!'

This pleasant and simple character of the Judge is well exemplified in an incidental picture which is drawn in his chamber, with a little child of vicious and disolute parents, sleeping in her little crib, in one corner of it. 'The sight of the little creature,' says his biographer, 'seemed to double the enjoyments of his own comforts.—When he saw her put to bed at night in her flannel night-gown, or dressed in the morning before the cheering wood fire, he always manifested the livelies pleasure; exclaiming again and again—

'A brand snatched from the burning! a brand snatched from the burning!'

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

This Conference met at Indian Creek Camp Ground, in Claiborne Parish, La., on the 13th of October, 1847, and was opened by the President, Br. Elias Carroll, with reading a portion of Scripture, singing, and prayer; when it went into the election of Secretaries. Brother Henry M. A. Cassidy, Secretary, and Br. Joseph Friend, Assistant Secretary.

The election for President resulted in the election of Brother Elias Carroll, the present incumbent; and for Conference Missionary, Brother Joseph Burns.

Brother Wm. Kersey, elect of the Conference of 1846, was solemnly ordained on Sabbath, as Elder; also, Br. Samuel Williams, elect by present Conference to Elder's orders, and Br. Wm. McDonald, Deacon. The scene was an impressive one.

The consent of the Louisiana District was obtained to the setting off that part of the District lying within the State of Texas, as a new District, to be known as the Texas Conference.

The Stationing Committee reported as follows: Elias Carroll, President: Joseph Burns, Conference Missionary. Lafayette circuit, A. W. Simmons: Ouchita, J. B. McGlassan: Claiborne, Peter McDonald, Joseph Friend: Union circuit, John Queen: Holly Springs circuit, G. W. Johnson: Bayou See circuit, to be supplied: Camden Station, A. M. Scott: Caddo circuit, Levi Pressly: Badrow circuit, to be supplied. Father Jas. Ford holds a superannuated relation to the Conference; H. M. A. Cassidy and Allen Rushing are within the bounds of the Texas Conference; James G. Calcote transferred to the Texas Conference; Wm. Lee in the hands of the President; L. S. Markham in an unstationed relation; A. W. Long, withdrawn. Number in society, 584.

Resolved, That we keep the first Friday in February, June and September, as days of fasting and solemn prayer to God for the outpouring of his Holy Spirit.

Conference adjourned on Saturday at 4 o'clock, P. M., (by prayer and thanksgiving to our kind and merciful Preserver,) to meet again on Wednesday before the 3d Sabbath in October, 1848, at Union Church Camp Ground, in De Soto Parish, Louisiana.

Dear Brother: we would, in gratitude to God, record with great satisfaction the good order which prevailed on the ground during this meeting. The Word was regularly preached during the usual hours to a respectable audience, who gave serious attention and appeared to take a deep interest in the meeting: God was pleased to bless, so that the church rejoiced greatly, and several who had not known God in his saving power, were privileged, and that boldly, to bear witness that through our blessed Redeemer he had power on earth to forgive sin. There were some accessions to the church, how many we do not now know. May the impressive soul-saving truths delivered on that occasion appear to have been fitly spoken, when the curtain of time shall be lifted and eternity brought forward.

Yours in the bonds of a peaceful Gospel,

Religious Intelligence.

PITTSBURGH DISTRICT.

Connellsville, Pa., Dec. 28. 1847.

Br. Bassett: We have just closed a protracted meeting, which continued from day to day near two weeks. We had the assistance of Br. and Sister Reeves from Pittsburgh the first week, Sister R. preached once. Br. N. Watson of Uniontown, assisted us the second week. We believe the church was much benefitted. One conversion. O for a revival of religion. This year (as well as last,) we have much peace and comfort at all our appointments, but we feel that we are not able for this field of labor, single handed; last year three men were employed, where I now travel alone, and how can I do justice to myself and to such a field of labor? Connellsville ought to be a Station, the Church here requires the labors of one man, and are willing to pay for such labor. I know there are objections to setting apart Stations from Circuits, but in this case I believe both Station and Circuit would be benefitted. Connellsville does not wish to be numbered with small stations, requiring only the service of a single man, but has taken the noble ground, that she will in the event of her becoming a station, receive any efficient laborer that Conference in their wisdom may send. Now taking this ground, who would object to her becoming a station when her interests and the interests of the church require it, and where is the married minister that would object if in the wisdom of Conference, a single man be sent to any place thus declaring itself able and willing to support any efficient laborer, be he married or single? We believe that there are fields of labor where it is necessary to send single Preachers, and that there are other fields that as much require the service of married Preachers, but we believe the ground taken by Connellsville (a willingness to receive any preacher that Conference may send, and a desire or preferance for a married one,) to be the proper position for any people, to take desiring to become a station. In conclusion, I would say that we have in this place a very pleasant Sabbath School, established since we commenced our labour with this people.

Yours in the Gospel,
HENRY PALMER.

Mt. Blanchard, O., Dec. 13, 1847.

Br. Bassett: Having to write to you on business, I will say a few things with regard to my field of labor. I arrived at Mt. Blanchard, the second week after the rise of Conference, and commenced my labors. I found the circuit at some points in rather a cold situation. A declension on the subject of religion appears to be a general thing in this region among all denominations. But we are praying and looking for better days: and the star of hope begins to gild our pathway; we have realized the fulfilment of the promise to some extent that "they that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength." Since my arrival here I have endeavored to labor faithfully with the people, but some times I have been almost discouraged when I look at the importance of the work, the feebleness of the instrument, the deep slumber which appears to pervade the church, and the insensibility of sinners to their great danger. O that the God of Israel may strengthen us and revive his work on Mt. Blanchard circuit—that the out-casts may be gathered in and the lame be healed—that we may see glorious days in the land of the living. Brethren, pray for us that the Lord may make bare his mighty arm for our deliverance.

Yours in Christ,
T. B. GRAHAM.

INDIANA DISTRICT.

Tanner's Creek, Dec. 14th, 1847.

Br. Bassett: Having to write you on business, I wish to inform the brethren how we are doing on Tanner's Creek. After a delay of three weeks (from the time appointed in consequence of sickness in my family) I set out on the 16th of November, reached the circuit on the 20th. The appointments had been kept up and the pulpits filled by Brother Proctor, the only unstationed minister in the circuit.

I commenced my labors on the 21st, at the West Fork Chapel. The brethren here, as far as I have been able to learn, are living in peace and love, and are punctual in their attendance on the public worship of God. Our first quarterly meeting was held at the West Fork Chapel on the 11th and 12th instant. The congregations were orderly and attentive to the word.—On Sabbath morning the brethren and sisters spoke feelingly of the work of God on their hearts. The communion was a solemn, and I trust, profitable time to many. The brethren here are praying for better times. Pray for us.

Yours, in love,
JAMES EDMISTON.

Graham, Ia., Dec. 14, 1847.

Br. Bassett: I commenced my labors on Drift-wood Mission in two days after the rise of Conference: found the mission in a very healthy state. The last year was a year of great affliction to our much lamented Brother Sevier. He greatly endeared himself to the people with whom he labored, and it appeared that everything was ripe for a revival, and we have been made to rejoice since Conference in the displays of divine grace in the awakening and conversion of sinners. We have received into the society since Conference eight members, all but one, new converts from the world. Pray for us that the Lord may carry on his work.

Yours as ever,
GEORGE WHEATLEY.

NORTH ILLINOIS DISTRICT.

Harkness Grove, Ill., Dec. 24, '47.

Br. Bassett: Knowing your readers always love to hear of revivals, I would say the good Lord has not forgotten us altogether in this Western world. When I came to this circuit the brethren seemed generally discouraged; there was not a regular prayer meeting on the circuit. The first time I preached at this appointment, (Harkness Grove) I urged the necessity of prayer meetings; consequently there was one appointed on Wednesday evening; from a small beginning, it rapidly increased, both in numbers and interest, and the members of other denominations came in and took hold like Christians.—We appointed a Union Protracted Meeting, to embrace the 3d Sabbath of December. The E. M. minister did not get there, but the United Brethren preacher did. We held meetings every night for one week, and Saturday and Sabbath, at which time I was left alone with the brethren.

We had called for mourners four nights in succession, but none came; but on Tuesday night one arose for the prayers of the church. We appointed, as we supposed, the last meeting for Wednesday evening. The Lord was there; four or five were willing to say, pray for us, and a general seriousness prevailed. One professed to find peace on the next evening; the congregation was larger. Two more came out for prayers, and others wept on their seats but would not come forward. Amongst the mourners was a man and his wife, I should think near 50 years old, and a daughter, a young woman, and this man opened his house and invited us to hold our prayer meeting there. It makes me think of the house of Obed Edom that was blessed because the ark of God rested there. The E. M. minister will be there to-night, and the meeting will continue, but I must leave. O! brethren, God will revive his work, if the church will pray. You will hear from me again.

Yours, for the cause of Christ,
S. DILLEY.

WESTERN RECORDER.

PUTNAM, OHIO, THURSDAY, JAN. 6, 1848.

☞How Many New Subscribers Will Be Furnished Us By Our Agents, To Commence With The Year 1848? ☜

The Departed Year.

This is a season peculiarly proper for reflection.—A "high point of time," from which we may survey the past, and contemplate the future. Another year has finished its course and passed away. It has borne its faithful record of "Earth's doings to Eternity, and every act of every individual will be indelibly registered there. You and we, dear reader, are not exempt. Our deeds have helped to swell the sum of that vast account. Let us then calmly and carefully and prayerfully reflect upon ——"our past hours

And ask them what report they bore to Heaven."

Has each moment as its glided past, marked us blameless? Have the hours written our holy thoughts, our secret prayers, our words of kindness? Have the days witnessed our acts of charity and love, and the weeks our religious improvement, our moral and intellectual culture? Have the months inscribed our usefulness and the accomplishment of our plans of benevolence? And has the year upon the whole, which is just gone forever, left us nearer heaven, as well as nearer eternity? In a word, have we done our duty? Have we offered the incense of praise & thanksgiving from grateful hearts to Him who has 'crowned the year with his goodness?' Retrospection will doubtless reveal to us many instances of failure. We have often failed thro' inadvertency, and the faithful finger of conscience points perhaps to other cases, in which we ——"knew our duty, but we did it not."

But do we deplore our errors? Let us not despair. Tho' the past cannot be recalled, we may humbly ask and be forgiven. There is hope, bright hope for the future.—He who "is touched with the feeling of our infermities" will graciously aid, us in days to come.

The Opening Year.

We are again permitted to welcome a New year. It has been ushered in with smiles and gladness. Salutations of "A happy New year" have echoed from many glad voices. We join the cheerful gratulations and most heartily and sincerely wish our many friends "A happy New year." May peace and plenty smile upon them and prosperity crown their labors. But above all may they enjoy religious prosperity which can alone render them truly happy. Let us not forget on this festival season to render a grateful tribute of thanksgiving to the Author of our blessings. Let our cheerfulness be chastened with reflection. Have we failed in duty the past year, let us make resolutions for improvement at this commencement of the new. Let us be active—be useful. What we do, must be done quickly. The sands of life are fast numbering. Every new year we greet, shortens the period of our present existence. Time, like a rapid stream, is bearing us swiftly onward with its resistless current to the shoreless ocean of Eternity. Shall we amuse ourselves with the bubbles upon its surface when such destiny awaits us? Shall we trifle with the follies of life when Eternity is so near? Many who hailed the opening of the past year with high hopes and bright prospects, are now low in death. It may be that ere the present one, which has just smiled so flatteringly upon us, completes its course we two shall have gone to the dreamless slumbers of the tomb, or we may be called to mourn the loss of our dearest friends—to plant the cypress upon the graves of those we love. Let us hasten, dear reader, to redeem the time. Let us endeavor to obtain a preparation of heart, that will enable us calmly to meet the tide of coming events, and receive with a reconciled spirit the dispensations of Divine Providence.

U. S. Congress.

Monday, Dec. 20—Senate.—Mr. Atherton introduced resolutions passed by the Legislature of New Hampshire, in favor of the repeal of so much of the "act to establish Post Routes, and for other purposes," as enlarges the franking privilege and increases the postage on newspapers not sent from the office of publication, which were read, and ordered to be printed. The resolutions of Mr. Calhoun on the conquest of Mexico, were taken up, and after some debate made, the order of the day for Tuesday, January the 4th.

House.—Mr. John Q. Adams presented a petition praying for peace, which was referred to the committee on Foreign Affairs. Mr. Phelps presented resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Missouri, asking Congress to create a new territory west of the State of Missouri. A bill relative to postage on newspapers, was introduced by Mr. Brodhead, read and referred. Mr. Henly also introduced a joint resolution to amend "An act to establish certain post routes, and for other purposes." Referred. On motion of Mr. Nicoll, it was Resolved, that the committee on post offices and post roads, enquire into the expediency of abolishing the present postage on transient newspapers, and substituting the same postage now charged on other newspapers, regularly sent by publishers. On motion of Mr. McIlvane, a resolution was passed, instructing the committee on post offices and post routes, to enquire into the expediency of so amending the post office laws, as to provide for the free transmit of newspapers through the mail within the county where published. On motion of Mr. Cummins, a resolution was passed instructing the committee on post offices and post routes, to enquire into the expediency and propriety of repealing so much of the 13th section of the "Act," &c., as prohibits editors and publishers of newspapers from sending their papers postage free, to subscribers within thirty miles of the place of publication.

Tuesday, 21—House.—Mr. Giddings presented a memorial signed by citizens of the District of Columbia, representing that the slave taade is carried on in the District to a large extent, and asking that all laws authorizing or sanctioning such trade be repealed. A motion was made to lay on the table. Vote: Yeas, 97; Nays, 97.—The Speaker then voted in the negative, declaring himself in favor of a respectful consideration of all petitions in respectful terms. So the motion was rejected. The consideration of the memorial was laid over. Mr. Robert Smith introduced a bill to provide for the completion of the Cumberland Road in the States of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois and Missouri. Read a first and second time, and referred. Resolutions, thirteen in number, were introduced by Mr. Botts, against the existing war. Resolutions on the same subject were presented by Mr. Thompson of Indiana, Mr. Toombs and Mr. Vandyke.

Senate.—Mr. Hale presented the memorial of the Yearly Meeting of Anti-Slavery Friends in Indiana, praying the adoption of measures for the immediate termination of the war with Mexico, and for the immediate termination of Slavery. A motion to receive the petition was laid on the table by a vote of 33 to 9. Mr. Hale then presented a memorial from citizens of Pennsylvania praying for such alteration of the Constitution and laws as shall abolish slavery throughout the Union. A motion to receive the petition was laid on the table.

A New Year's Gift.—On the morning of New Year's Day, an old friend, a gentleman of this place, favored us with a call, and gave us the names and address of four of his friends at a distance, authorizing us to send them our paper for the year 1848, on his responsibility. This was to us a most acceptable New Year's gift, and we trust it will prove such also to those four friends who are to receive our paper. We are grateful also that a number of brethren at a distance are remembering us just now. Let us see. This week we have eighteen new subscribers in all. Should be right glad to double that number the coming week. For we apprehend that our New Years' Gifts will not all have reached us for several days to come.

Emancipation in Delaware.—The population in the State af Delaware is about 83,000. The number of colored people is 5,300, of whom 3000 are free, and 2,300 slaves. The number of slaveholders is 800. A Delaware Anti-Slavery Society has been formed, and an Anti-Slavery periodical is published, called The Delaware Abolitionist, conducted very spiritedly, by J. B. Brooke. We have not seen the publication, but observe that it is very favorably noticed in the Cincinnati Gazette.

☽ & ☉—Early risers had, on Sunday morning last, a beautiful view of the planet Venus in conjunction with the Moon. As the morning was clear, both luminaries were very brilliant.

Death in the U. S. Senate.—A gloom was thrown over the festivities of the Christmas holidays by the sudden death of Senator John Fairfield of Maine, on the evening of the 24th December. It is stated that on the previous day he was attending to his duties in the Senate, and reported a Bill, as Chairman of committee on Naval Affairs. Intending to avail himself of the advantage presented by the adjournment of Congress for a few days, he on Friday called in his physicans to perform an operation upon a diseased leg, which he had had done to some advantage, a year ago. The operation was performed accordingly, but from that moment his sufferings continued to increase till 7 o'clock in the evening, when he died in great agony. The Saturday Courier remarks, that within the short space of a year, not less than five members of the U. S. Senate have died, viz; Pennypacker, of Virginia; Brown, of Louisiana; Speight, of Mississippi; Huntington, of Connecticut; and Fairfield, of Maine. Quite a severe mortality for so small a body of men. Mr. Fairfiied was formerly governor of his state.

Foreign.—The Steamship Hibernia reached Boston on the morning of the 25th ult., having left Liverpool on 4th. She brought intelligence that the civil war in Switzerland had been terminated. The following items of news by this arrival are taken from the Baltimore Sun.

"The state of the corn market in England is such as to confirm the impression that the demand of the ensuing spring will not be very remarkable, probably not sufficient to afford a basis for extended speculation.

The condition of affairs in Ireland is quite lamentable; crime seems to beget crime, and murder is assuming the nature of the pastime of revenge. There is a method about it, too, that exhibits the meditative purpose of the assassination. The popular mind has become callous under the inauspicious state of the affairs of the nation; and the hopelessness of penury finds its relief only in the gratification of vindictive emotions.

The affairs of Italy increase in interest upon every arrival. The liberal action of Pope Pius IX is surrounding him with a variety of affecting and exciting events, and he commands the sympathy of every heart, alive to the dissemination of popular rights.—Italy is the cynosure of every eye, and, according to his prepossessions or prejudices, has the hearty wishes or bitter curses of the observer. The effect of the liberal measures of the Pope is seen in the ardor and determination peculiar to popular excitement in that section of the world, throughout the vicinal provinces and principalities of Sardinia, Piedmont, Savoy, &c. The times are rife with great events, and these are of them.

The Norwegian Emigrants.—A writer in the Presbyterian of the West states that not less than 23,000 Norwegians have emigrated to this country. Their chief locations are in the northwest. About 70 families, including about 500 persons, are settled in Chicago. All these have been visited by a Norwegian colporteur, employed in Illinois, by the American Tract Society.—He distributed tracts amongst them, addressed public meetings in the Danish language, and established a Sabbath school among them. He was uniformly received with kindness, and considerable indications of good have resulted from his labors.

'Light Advancing."—The Golden Rule says that when a Teacher presents himself for admittance into any of the public schools of the Queen City of the West, the first enquiry is: Are you a tobacco chewer, a slave to the Indian weed in any form? Is the Teacher constrained to answer in the affirmative? What then? "Good bye, sir, good bye; no room here." Who does not say, just right?

Small Pox.—We learn by private letter from Rev. A. Perdieu, that the small pox has been prevailing in Muncietown, Ia,, and vicinty. He states that all public meetings have been stopped, and the people cannot be got together for any purpose. Several cases had proved fatal, both in the village, and in the country.

Pittsburgh Gratitude and Sympathy.—A public meeting was lately held at the court house in the city of Pittsburgh, in behalf of the sufferers by the recent flood. The Mayor of the city presided. A preamble and resolutions were adopted, purporting that when their city was scourged by the great fire of 1845, the people of Ohio kindly extended a helping hand; and now that the towns along the Ohio had been visited by a remarkable inundation, by which many have been reduced to destitute circumstances, it is proper that measures be taken to extend relief. It was resolved, that the Councils be solicited to have the sum of $500 remitted to the Mayor of Cincinnati, out of the unexpended balance of the Relief Fund, to be by him applied to the relief of suffering families. An arrangement was also made to appoint collecting committees in each ward, who were also urged to act promptly, as the sufferers at this inclement season require immediate relief.

Sears' Magazine.—This work appears in improved form, with the commencement of a new volume. The January number is well filled with interesting and useful reading matter, and contains 22 embellishments. Sears' is an instructive Magazine and is worthy of a good patronage.—Terms, $2, in advance. Address Robert Sears, New York.

Episcopal Recorder.—We perceive that the Rev. Mr. Ridgely has retired from the editorship of this paper, "tired," as he says, "not of its toils, for these he has found pleasant, but of its peculiar trials." It is to be conducted hereafter by an association of clergymen. The Recorder is an organ of the evangelical portion of the Protestant Episcopal Church, published at Philadelphia, at $2,50 per annum; a good religious newspaper.

Bicknell's Reporter and Counterfeit Detector.—This is a large weekly sheet, published in Philadelphia by Matthew T. Miller. It is a most valuable and useful publication to business men. Besides a complete list of sound and broken banks in all the States, it gives a weekly report of new counterfeits, general prices current, prices of stocks, and a general exhibit of Money, Bank and business matters. It is also a good newspaper, containing an ample share of early general intelligence. Business men, who are acquainted with the Reporter, we apprehend, would think they could hardly do without it. Terms, $3 per annum in advance. Two copies for $5.

Bicknell's Counterfeit Detector, and Bank Note List, is published by the same gentleman, semi-monthly at $1,50 per annum, and monthly at $1 in advance.

Columbian Magazine.—The January number of this work is superb. The volume commences with a new ornamental title page which is quite an improvement. The engravings, four in number, are very fine. 1. Rich and Poor. 2. A beautiful view of Constantinople. 3. Washington's Reception at Trenton Bridge, 1789. 4. January Fashions. The writers who contribute for this number, are chiefly ladies of the first abilities. Fanny Forrester has a fine poem on the Peach Tree. John Inman and R. A. West are Editors: John S. Taylor, Publisher, N. York. Terms, $3, in advance: two copies for $5. A copy of a full length portrait of Washington, is also promised to each subscriber sending payment in advance, post-paid.

Death of a Minister.—By letter from Brother G. Wheatley, we learn that Rev. James Sevier, a member of the Indiana Conference, M. P. Church, and superintendent of Washington circuit, departed this life on the 30th November last, aged about 55 years.

ADMONITORY.

Mr. Editor: Towns, and villages, as well as men, usually have a moral reputation, either good, or bad. When we find a village having an unusually good character for the morality of its inhabitants, it may usually be traced to the labors of a few pious men, devoted to the good of their fellow men, giving a tone to the moral sentiment, by the influence they exert. Where vicious habits prevail, so as to give character to the community, there will be found a deficiency of the usual means of grace, or the means will not be used by those who are entrusted with the moral and religious education of the people, with that energy and faithfulness which they ought. These appear to me to be truths, almost self-evident; and if so, why is the character of our village so deteriorated, as to make us, I fear, a byword, a thing to be pointed at?

Once we were considered a very moral, and quite a religious community. Is that our present character? Have not the youth of our village, who have enjoyed the most, and the best advantages, of moral and literary culture, so conducted themselves in the house of worship, the Sabbath school, and the social circle, as to alter that reputation much for the worse? Is not their rudeness and want of respect, for a proper public sentiment, proverbial? And can this change have taken place without an adequate cause? Why has this change came over us?

Do those who are placed in "Zion's walls as watchmen" discharge their duties faithfully?—Or will the blood of souls be found upon their skirts? Do they exhort to virtue, expose vice, reprove sin, warn those in the broad road to death, and encourage those who are seeking that straight and narrow way that leadeth unto life, as they ought? Have the pastors sought the young, and erring, and, as it were, "carried them in their arms" or gently led the inexperienced by the hand? Or have they contented themselves with the public exercises of the Sabbath, or other assemblies? Have elders, class-leaders, and Sabbath school teachers, been faithful to the trust they have accepted? Or has rank and wealth scared them from the faithful discharge of duty, "without respect of persons?" How have professing parents discharged their duty, to their children? Have they striven to bring them up for God, or have they cared more for their personal accomplishments, and creature comforts, than for the welfare of their souls? Have they forgotten if these children should obtain all the world can give of wealth, rank, and honor, and lose their souls, the bargain would be a very unprofitable one?

Let us all, Mr. Editor, so examine ourselves as to be able to give a suitable reply to the question; "How have you used the talent committed to you?" if God should call us to give an account of our stewardship.

Quarterly Conference Resolutions.

Whereas Coshocton Circuit was providentially prevented from having a lay delegate at the last session of the Muskingum Annual Conference, and Brother William Ross (a minister) represented said circuit, and whereas Br. Ross has since been called to serve the circuit as its Superintendent, therefore the Quarterly Conference passed by a unanimous vote the following resolutions which they request you, Mr. Editor, to give a place in the Western Recorder.

Resolved, That the appointment of Brother William Ross as Superintendent of Coshocton Circuit was without any solicitation on his part, or his relations.

Resolved, That this resolution be published in the Western Recorder.

LUCINDA JANE ALTER.

By the request of my bereaved brother and fellow laborer John Alter, I take my pen to offer an humble tribute to the memory of our excellent sister Alter, who by an afflicting dispensation of Providence has been snatched from her worthy husband, from the Church and her many friends, who all deeply tho' with humble resignation deplore her loss.

Sister Alter was the daughter of William and Isabel Black. She united with the Meth. Protestant Church, about eleven years ago under the labors of Br. W. W. Paul, in the Wabash Valley. Was united in matrimony to Br. Alter on the 29th day of August, 1843. Lived a christian life which even the foul tongue of slander never dared impeach.—Died calmly and tranquilly (tho' of a very painful disease) on the 20th day of September last. And left not an enemy in all the world. She has gone—but the recollection of her virtues like the fragrance of the withered rose will ever be sweet and consoling to her many friends, till we meet our dear sister in that country where the good and the beloved "pass not away."

MR. GEO. LITTICK.

Br. Bassett: It becomes my painful duty to record the death of an old Father in Israel, George Littick, was a native of Germany. He emigrated to this country when a young man, has been a citizen of Coshocton county, near 40 years, and a permanent member of the Methodist Protestant Church since its organization in this section of the country. The house of Father Littick has been the preacher's home for many years, and his pious example and devotedness to the cause of Christ, secured to him the affections of many around him. About the middle of November he was taken with a severe pain in his side, which finally terminated his earthly career. From the time he was taken ill he professed no expectation or desire of recovering; but was rather anxious "to depart and be with Christ which is far better." Two weeks before his death while all were looking for him to die, he told his companion that he would stay with her till Christmas. He still lingered along, mortality wasting away, while the happy spirit seemed to be struggling for deliverance from its fading habitation till about 4 o'clock Christmas day; when death came to its relief, found the string of life, cut the cord and let the old body fall fall asleep after a long journey (of 84 years) thro' this stormy world. While no doubt the happy soul spreads its wings and winds its way above the storms and clouds of earth, till safely landed upon the immortal shore, and then for ought we know, with folded pinions, waits to catch the sound as it rolls from the tongues of the higher order that blaze before the throne, and then lifts its voice to swell the song of hallelujah to the King of Kings and Lord of Lords. On the 27th we strove to deliver a funeral discourse to a large and deeply affected audience, after which his mortal remains were consigned to the narrow mansion, there to rest till aroused by "the voice of the Son of God" when soul and body, united, will doubtless shout with the redeemed millions upon the "banks of deliverance." Many friends are left to mourn the loss; but while we mourn, it is not as those without hope, for our loss is doubtless his eternal gain.

News of the Week.

Serious Affair at Yale College.—A serious affair occurred at Yale College, New Haven, Conn., on Wednesday night, as we learn from the telegraphic dispatch in the New York Herald, between two of the tutors, and two students, resulting in the stabbing of one of the tutors with a sword cane. The stab, however, is not likely to prove fatal. The other was knocked down with a bar of iron. This case, it is feared, will prove fatal. The names of the tutors are Emerson and Goodrich, the latter a son of Professor Goodrich, of Yale College. The names of the students are Towers, of Philadelphia, and Ewen, of Tennessee. The students were arrested and held to bail in $4,000 each; they found bail and were discharged. The affair produced great excitement. Goodrich is not expected to survive.—Baltimore Sun.

The Yale College Tragedy.—Mr. Goodrich the tutor at Yale College, was living on Monday morning, and some hopes were entertained of his recovery. Mr. Emerson is out again. The two young men who are suspected to have committed the outrage, are in jail at New Haven, and their bail has been increased to $10,000 each.

Distressing Accident.—The large four story brick building, on R. Habersham & Son's Rice Mill wharf, at the upper end of the city, used as the reception store for rough rice, suddenly gave way and fell to the ground, burying all the persons in it at the time beneath the ruins. Luckily the accident occurred when the laborers were not at work, otherwise the loss of life must have been very great. The number of persons in the building has not yet been positively ascertained. Two persons have been extricated from the ruins—Mr. Thomas Naylor, a clerk at the yard, who, though severely bruised, it is hoped is not dangerously hurt, and a negro man named Abram, belonging to Mr. W. N. Habersham, who was quite dead. The second miller, Mr. John Bell, is supposed to be still under the ruins, as well as several laborers. One laborer, a negro man belonging to Mrs. Burke, seeing the building giving way, sprang from one of the windows of the second story, and happily escaped all injury. From six to eight thousand bushels of rough rice were in the building, at the time of its fall.—Savannah Republican, Dec. 22.

Fatal Accident.—At Utica, N. Y., on Saturday evening, a daughter of Mr. Cushing Baker, of the Utica House, by accident, fell through the open scuttle of the fourth story of the store adjoining, a distance of at least forty feet. She died in an hour. She was an amiable and intelligent young woman, about eighteen years of age.

Exciting Scene.

On the afternoon of the 23d inst., a scene occurred at the Menagerie of Messrs. Raymond and Co., in this city, in consequence of the elephant Columbus, an immense specimen of his species, becoming furious, and attempting to kill his keeper, which beggars all description. The facts of this stirring incident, attended, as it was, with most serious consequence to one of the parties engaged in the affair, appears to have been as follows:—The keeper, William Kelly, of New York, whose acquaintance with Columbus was only short, was employed after one o'clock in paring his feet, and otherwise preparing him for exhibition in the afternoon, when the animal becoming restive, Kelly left him, and procured a fork, with which to chastise him; but the sagacious animal seeing him returning with the weapon, screeched, and instantly seized him with his extended trunk, and threw him twice into the air, and then left him, foaming with rage. He then knocked down two cages in which were a hyæna and a wolf, both of which escaped therefrom, and ran several times round the ring, before they were captured and secured, which was done without any injury to the persons who performed that daring and dangerous act—the animals being dreadfully alarmed at the screeches of Columbus and his ungovernable fury. It was truly a fearful time; for all the animals, from the King of the Forest down to the most insignificant reptiles were struck with consternation and awe, & each gave vent, in its own peculiar manner, to the dread that prevaded it. The elephant, seeing Mr. Waring and his men taking measures to secure him, rushed towards them, and they escaped up the seats provided for the audience, partly followed by him, but he was compelled to withdraw, as the flooring gave way under his ponderous weight. Herr Driesbach, Mr. Waring, and others, then obtained a cable, which was placed in the centre of the ring, and finally, after much manœuvering, they succeeded in noosing the elephant by the legs; they then retreated towards the southerly corner of the menagerie, where the animal followed them—managing to elude him, they afterwards, with great efforts, succeeded in getting iron manacles on his legs. —Driesbach then took the matter in hand, and at his command, the animal proceeded to the ring, and proof of his good humor being restored by the most implicit obedience to all his requirements. The fear that the enraged animal would demolish the cage of the lions or tigers, had induced the proprietors to have the means at hand for his destruction, in case their efforts to overpower him should not succeed. A cannon was, therefore, procured, charged with canister, and stationed in front of the building, on Walnut st., to be ready for any emergency, but, fortunately, his submission rendered such a recourse unnecessary. The only animals killed by the elephant, were a couple of monkeys. A rabbit was devoured by one of the dogs. The animals which escaped, were all returned to their cages, without their harming any one. The damage to the ring curb, seats, cages, etc., was immediately repaired, and the Menagerie was opened again in the evening, at the regular hour, and the performance went on as usual. There was a large attendance of visitors, and the evening's exhibition went off undisturbed. The occurrence collected an immense crowd of people in the vicinity of the Menagerie, and gave rise to great excitement. The affair fortunately occurred at a time when a very few persons were in the building. Had it been delayed but a short time, it would have occasioned a dreadful scene of alarm, as a large number of children, belonging to a Sunday School, were about entering the building at the moment of the occurrence.

Mr. Kelly lingered until Saturday morning, when he expired. His remains were decently interred, on Sunday morning, at the Lafayette Cemetery, in Moyamensing.

There are two similar cases of elephants becoming unmanageble, mentioned in periodical works, in both of which, the life of the animal was taken. One occurred at Exeter Change, in the year 1826, and the animal was dispatched with rifle balls. He did not fall until he had received from one hundred and ten to a hundred and twenty balls in his head. The other elephant was killed at Geneva, in May, 1820. In this case, an attempt was made to poison it, but without effect. It was finally killed by a cannon ball, which entered near the ear, behind the right eye, and came out behind the left ear. It was remarkable in the case of Columbus, that he did not touch the cages of the lion or tigers. If they had escaped from confinement, the only alternative would have been to shoot them.—Alexander's Messenger.

Distressing Casualty.—Mr. Aaron Harkless, a very worthy citizen of Bloom township, met with a serious accident on the 25th ult., which resulted in his death. On that morning, having gone into his coal bank to attend to some repairs, and whilst in a stooping posture, a stone about 8 feet long by four wide and about 18 inches thick, became detached from the roof above and fell upon the upper part of his body, crushing him to the ground. On being released it was found that his spine and one thigh were broken, besides great internal injuries. He lingered in great agony until the ensuing Monday when death put an end to his sufferings.—Morgan Herald.

Painful Accident.—We learn from the Reading (Pa.) papers, that Mr. Daniel Graeff, of that city, slipped on the ice in his yard, on Friday, and in the fall injured himself so seriously that he died the next day.

Life Prolonged by Science.—As an evidence to prove that an advanced state of science, and the improvement in the condition of the various classes of society, tend to prolong life, the following statement is made. It has been found that the average length of life of persons born in Geneva was, in the 16th century, less than 9 years; in the 17th, the average rose to 13; in 1750 it had increased to 27; in 1800 it was 31; in 1813, 40; in 1832, 45.

Fatal Accident. — A telegraphic dispatch from Rochester, states that the bridge over the Genesee river, near Angelica, fell on Sunday night last, immediately killing Mrs. George P. Russel and Miss King.

Melancholy Shipwreck.—A whole crew perished.—A letter from Major Hunter, one of the commissioners of wrecks in Princess Anne, to a house in Norfolk, states the following particulars:—

"I am sorry to have to inform you, that the new schooner Sea Witch, of N. Y., came ashore on the beach six miles South of Cape Henry, in the snow-storm of Thursday, and all on board have perished. Both masts are gone, or at least are floating alongside. We have her boarded this morning, and it is thought she was in ballast. Three men have been found along shore, and I think the remainder are in the rigging. As soon as the tide falls we shall endeavor to save what we can."

The schooner Amanda, of Riverhead, Smith, master, went ashore at the same time and place —crew saved. Saw the crew of the Sea Witch lash themselves in the rigging.

Population of Cincinnati.

As the period approaches for taking the National Census of 1850, considerable interest is felt and expressed here as to the population of Cincinnati—present, and probable at that date. The enumeration of the white youth, who are entitled to the benefits of the District School system, taken in 1846 and 1847, is supposed by some to indicate a population short of the generally received estimate on this point. There were of these in 1846, 20,732—in 1847, 21,981. This is considered by these persons correspondent to a population of 62 960 last year, and 70,000 this.

My opinion has been deliberately formed and long since expressed on this subject. It rests not on a single basis, but in a series, all concurring to the same result. These are,

First. Dwelling houses increase. In 1840 there were 6781 buildings of all kinds in Cincinnati. There are more than twice that number at this time, and the difficulty of obtaining a house for rent is as great as formerly.

Second. The vote of the city. In 1840, during a highly exciting canvass which left at home as small a proportion as ever absented themselves from the polls, the vote of Cincinnati was 6340. In 1844 the next most general turn out, the vote was 9783 which at the ratio of voters to the ascertained population of 1840, would give 70.636 persons as the number of inhabitants at the latter date. The same ratio of increase would yield us now a population of 98,000 souls to the city proper. It will not be pretended that the vote of 1844 was more general than that of 1840.

I have watched the growth of Cincinnati for the last seven years so closely as to be perfectly satisfied our progress in population is at least as great during the last three as the previous four years. If this be correct, following the ratio of increase from 1840 to 1844 as indicated by the popular vote, there are now not much short of 100,000 souls within the corporate limits of Cincinnati.—Cist's Adv.

Exemplary Damages for Mal-practice.—At the supreme Court held in Portland, Maine, Carzilla Howard has recovered $2,500 as damages against Dr. John Grover, for mal-practice in an amputation case. The amputation was first performed in February, 1843; subsequently the defendant performed another operation upon the same limb, and in January of the next year, the patient was oblige to submit to the third, an amputation and dislocation at the hip joint. He did not recover for a year after the last operation.

Fatal Steamboat Explosion.—Twelve to fifteen lives lost.—Early on Sunday morning, says the New Orleans Picayune, of the 21st instant, a deplorable steamboat explosion occurred about 12 miles down the river. The steamer Westwood, Capt. J. Swiller, jr., belonging to the Mexican Gulf Railway Company, was going down the river, laden with coal, on her way to Ship Island to meet the Teviot, the English steamer from Vera Cruz. The fog was dense, and the boat unfortunately run into the bank and hung there about fifteen minutes, her bows being elevated about three feet above the water line. The water in the boat's boilers was thus thrown aft; the flues became excessively heated, and when the boat fell off and the water rushed forward, the explosion was instantaneous, doing dreadful execution on the small number aboard. Almost all were thrown into the water, and every one was more or less injured—some, however, so slightly that they reckon it nothing in the general catastrophe.

We fear that from twelve to fifteen lives were lost. The engineer was missing and doubtless killed. The following deck hands were killed: Edward King, Thomas King, John Nyland, James Smith, Patrick Ward, John Tierney, and a Frenchman, whose name we do not know. Of the deck hands, we are told that Charles Doyle alone escaped. The firemen were all colored men and were all killed. The mate was so severely injured that his life is despaired of. Capt. Swiler was severely injured about the chest, but it is hoped not dangerously. The bodies of Thomas King, John Tierney, and the Frenchman had been recovered and decently interred at our last accounts. The boilers are said to have been in admirable order.

Wonders of Science.—The late Dr. Chalmers, in his work on Astronomy, remarks:—"While the telescope enables us to see a system in every star, the microscope unfolds to us a world in every atom. The one shows us the insignificance of the world we inhabit; the other redeems it from that insignificance—where the Almighty Ruler of all things finds room for the exercise of His attributes." Recent discoveries in Geology have brought to view a great multitude of facts, truly wonderful—especially respecting the state of animate creation many centuries past. While on the one hand it is found by the remains of some ancient animals, that they were larger than any now living upon the earth, on the other hand, microscopic animals, almost inconceivably small, yet possessing mouths, teeth, stomachs, muscles, wings glands, eyes, and other organs, are not only found in a fossil state, but forming rocks and soil for miles in extent. Chalk and even flint, and some of the gems, are found, to a great extent, to be composed of animalcula. A cubic inch of iron ochre is said to contain the remains of one billion of living, acting beings. Professor Hitchcock states that the silicious marl found under peat swamps in New England, appears to be made up almost entirely of the skeletons of animals. It is also said that a thousand millions of these animals would, together, form a mass no longer than a grain of sand.

The New Planet "Iris."—Professor Maury states that this new planet was first observed at the Washington Observatory on the night of the 27th ultimo by Professor Hubbard, U. S. N., with the west transit instrument. He publishes the result of numerous observations lately made there upon it. This object was discovered by J. R. Hind, of Mr. Bishop's Observatory, London, on August 13th, 1847. It makes the seventh known star in the group of Asteroids. It is of the ninth magnitude, and is remarkable for the eccentricity of its orbit and the length of its period of revolution.

Shipwreck by Collision at Sea, and Loss of Life.—The schooner Effort, Bartlett, master, from Philadelphia, for Newburyport, was run into at midnight on the 24th instant, off the Isle Shoals, by schr. Bellona, Allen, master, of Boston, for Sedgewick. Henry Stikman and J. H. Brown got aboard the Bellona. The Effort sunk shortly after. Captain Bartlett, Gideon Hickman, mate, and John Macon, were lost. The Effort was a good staunch vessel, of 87 tons burthen. She was insured for $2.500, in the Neptune office, Boston.

It is only nine years since the first gold pen was manufactured in this country—now they are exported to England in large quantities, where they sell for a guinea each. It is estimated that no less than one million of these articles are manufactured annually, consuming eight hundred pounds of gold.

A New Republic.

Our files of West India journals just received, bring news that will be as animating to every American heart as it will be startling to G. Britain and the whole colony holding European world. The British West India Islands, including Jamaica, Trinidad, Demarara, St. Vincent, and Barbadoes, with the British South American Colony of Guiana, imitating the example of the thirteen colonies upon which our republic is based, have, after a calm survey of their condition, the restrictions and oppressions under which they exist, and the hopelessness of trusting any longer to the policy of the Home Government, formed themselves almost unanimously into into a solemn league for petition and protest, called the "Loyal West India League," under which its members, embracing the large majority of all the inhabitants of the Islands are sworn like the "Liberty Boys" in our revolution, to "unflinchingly exert themselves to gain that participation in the control of their affairs, which has ever been held by British subjects to be the birthright of freemen." The object of the British West Indies is precisely the same as that which produced the American revolution, and the result beyond question will be the resistance of the Home Government to their claims, and finally their revolution in favor of independence or annexation to the United States. It is a tremendous movement, and if successfully carried out, will be the end of British Colonial power on or contiguous to the American Continents, for Canada cannot long resist such an example in the West Indies. Jamaica, the great and leading island of the West Indian Archipelago has taken the lead, followed by all the lesser islands, while Guiana, in South America has even proposed a withdrawal from the mother country. This however is not the present declared object of the League. The League asks for the islands a constitution and local Legislature, in which the Islanders shall represent themselves, legislate for their own wants, make their own revenue laws and post-office arrangements; and farther, as set forth in the resolutions passed by an immense meeting of the inhabitants of the Island of Grenada.

That in order to be placed on an equal footing with their fellow subjects in the mother country, this meeting claim an immediate removal of all duties on British West India Sugar and Molasses; the unrestricted admission of Sugar and molasses into breweries and distilleries—the equalization of duty on British and Colonial spirits—and the option of shipping their produce in foreign vessels; they also urge the right of this Colony participating equally in proportion with the larger Colonies in a share of captured and other Africans by government vessels, from which they are at present excluded, and that a more lengthened term of Indentures be permitted on immigrants from Africa or any other part of the world.—New York Sun.

Death-bed Confession.—Last spring a pedlar lost a trunk at the Lowel railroad depot, worth, with its contents, $200. The Boston Traveler says it has been found, with some of the property, through the death-bed confession of a teamster in Chelsea.

Improvements in Manufactures.—The Scientific American announces a revolution in calico printing at hand; house paper is to be printed so cheap that blocking must be done away. Instead of two or three weeks now required to engrave a copper roller of the highest finish, the inventor, with a few diamond point gravers and acids, gets up one in as many hours. He has also invented a machine for shearing cloth, which shears five to six hundred pieces in a day and does the work better than it is now done by the old process.

Stephen Hopkins, the Quaker patriot from Rhode Island, had been afflicted with a paralytic stroke, which caused his hand to be tremulous. He nevertheless refused the signature offered by his amanuests, and with slight aid signed his name—saying emphatically, "If my hand trembles, John Bull will find my heart won't!" which electrified Congress, & made the most timid firm in their purpose.

Thirteen Year's Work for a Bible!—In the year 1272 the wages of a laboring man were less than four cents a day, while the price of a Bible, at the same period, was about one hundred and eighty dollars. A common laborer, in those days, must toil on industriously for thirteen long years, if he would possess a copy of the word of God! Now, the earnings of half a day will pay the cost of a beautifully printed copy of the sacred oracles. What a contrast!—What an illustration of the power of the press!—

Acquitted.—The trial of James A. Freeman, who was indicted for being engaged in the slave trade, after occupying the United State Circuit Court, at New York, for several days back, terminated on Friday in his being acquitted. The prisoner, it may be remembered, was taken on board the bark Chancellor, officiating as captain of her, on the coast of Africa, and was sent to New York with the United States vessel which seized her. Captain Canot, who has been indicted for fitting her out, with intent to use her for the slave trade, will be tried for it in a few days.

Singular Death.—The Easton (Md.) Star states that a singular and startling death occurred at the residence of William Goldsborough, Esq., in that county, on Christmas day, under the following circumstances:

'Mrs. Harriet Austin, who has been living in the family at Myrtle Grove for the last eight or nine years, was in her room dressing for the purpose of visiting a near neighbor, and had put on new cap presented to her, when a servant in attendance upon her while dressing, familiarly asked Mrs. A. why she was going to wear that cap? to which she pleasantly responded—'do you not know that I am going to get married?' when she sank upon the floor, and immediately expired.'

Stage Upset.—The Western stage with several passengers, upset at the farther end of the bridge over the west branch of the O., at Bridgeport, on Monday night. A Mrs. Shaffer, of Pittsburg, was severely injured, and a young lady named Funk, slighly injured.

Fatal Accident. A young lady named Rachel Ingle, while riding in a sleigh in company with a gentleman, along the bank of a creek, in Butler county, Kentucky, beyond Venice, was thrown out by the vehicle overturning, and dashed down the precipice amongst the projecting roots of trees, one of which penetrated her skull, and killed her almost instantly.

Telegraph to New Orleans.—The Louisville Journal, of Friday last says: "While riding out yesterday evening on the Bardstown road, we found Mr. O'Rielly's men vigorously at work putting up post upon the telegraph line to New Orleans via Nashville. Mr. Orsleara, the suprintendent of the construction informed us that it is there intention to finish from ten to fifteen miles per day."

Steamboat Explosion.

SEVENTY LIVES LOST.

Cincinnati, Dec. 30—10 A. M.

The Steamer A. N. Johnson, from Cincinnati to Wheeling, blew up yesterday with a tremendous oxplosion, when near Maysville, killing 60 or 70 people, and scalding many more,

Thirty of those are not expected to live. Among the killed, were Mr. Fairchild, 1st Clerk; Mr. Lyle, Engineer, and Redman, a flat boat pilot.

Among the Scalded—Everheart and son, G. L. Witherby of Philadelphia; Wheat and Pilson, of Baltimore; John Gilbreath of Pittsburgh.

Saved—Arthur Foote, T. McDonald, James Wickersham, G. Baker, & J. Ferguson, of Pittsburgh.

The boat took fire, and was burned to the water's edge.

One hundred and sixty passengers were on board when the accident occurred.

The A. N. Johnson, mentioned above, is an entirely new boat, and was making her first trip, from Cincinnati to Wheeling. She was built and owned in Wheeling, and commanded by Captain H. Bennett, formerly of the Anthony Wayne.

Among the scalded it will be seen were Mr. Everheart and his son, from Belvernon; and Mr. Gilbreath, of this city.—Pittsburgh Commercial Journal.

The Law of Newspapers.

1. Subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, are considered wishing to continue their subscriptions.

2. If the subscribers order the discontinuance of their papers, the publishers may continue to send them till all cash charges are paid.

3. If subscribers neglect or refuse to take their papers from the offices to which they are directed, they are held responsible until they have settled their bill, and order their paper discontinued.

4. If subscribers remove to other places without informing the publishers, and the paper is sent to the former direction, they are held responsible.

5. The Courts have decided that refusing to take a paper or periodical from the office, or removing and leaving it uncalled for, is "prima facie" evidence of intentional fraud.

Liabilities of those who take Periodicals.

Thes law declare that any person, to whom a periodical is sent, is responsible for payment, if he receives the paper, or makes use of it, even if he has never subscribed for it, or has ordered it to be stopped. His duty in such a case is not to take the paper from the office or persons with whom the paper is left, but to notify the publisher that he does not wish for it.

If papers are sent to a Post Office, Store, or any other place of deposite,, and are not taken by the person to whom they are sent, the Postmaster, Storekeeper, &c., are responsible for the payment, until he returns the paper, or forms the publisher that they are lying dead in the office.

JEREMIAH ELDER, P. M.

☞ If the sick wish a diseased stomach restored and impure blood cleansed without endangering the constitution, go to J. Deen, Grocer and Shoemaker, Putnam, and obtain a box of Dr. Le Roy's Sarsaparilla and Wild Cherry Pills which is the best family medicine now in use. So says Mr. O'Neil the Agent.

DR. LE ROY'S

Wild Cherry, and Sarsaparilla PILLS.

Dr. LE ROY has most happily succeeded in combining Wild Cherry and Sarsaparilla with other vegetable ingredients, so as to produce a medicine at once tonic, and purgative, the only perfect discovery of the kind ever made. Their great peculiar excellence, and that which distinguishes them from all other purnatives is, that their operation is followed by no re-action. Their unrivalled purifying and purgative properties, for which they are indebted to the essence of Sarsaparilla, and other ingredients, being controlled by their highly tonic virtues, derived from the extract of Wild Cherry, they do not strain the digestive organs into action, as is the mode of operation with other cathartics, but on the contrary strengthen them into action. Thus all other purgative medicines produce more or less subsequent costiveness, and sluggishness of the gastric juice, while Dr. Le Roy's Pills leave all the machinery of the system full of life and activity, and the bowels open and natural. "Hence," writes Dr. Cheeseman, "they are the only active purgative which I can recommend with confidence, and without alarm; for they remove nothing but what ought to be removed—neither rack, nor strain—occasion no apathy or debilitation—and leave the bowels free, open, and vigorous." But the great virtue of Dr. Le Roy's Pills—the virtue which has spread their fame over the two hemispheres with a rapidity almost miraculous—lies in their purification of the blood. Here they not only stand altogether unrivalled, but fill up the measure of desire. They at once arrest the formation of bad blood, by removing all impurities from the chyle, of which the blood is formed; and moreover keep it clean, by toning and strengthing the digestive organs, so as to be able to exclude from it all matter of an innutricious nature; and then they purify the blood already in circulation; and never cease operation until it is entirely free from every noxious particle, & full of health, life, and vigor. THE OHIO CULTIVATOR FOR 1848.

Published at Columbus, Ohio, on the 1st and 15th of each month, M. B. Bateham, Editor and Proprietor. Terms, $1 per year—four copies for $3—payment invariably in advance.

THE fourth volume of the Ohio Cultivator will commence Jan. 1st, 1848. This paper has now become so well known that it is scarcely necessary to speak of its character, or to allude to the commendations it has received from the Public Press and other sources. The editor is determined to spare no pains on his part to sustain the reputation of the work, and make each succeeding volume more useful than the preceding one. Our motto is "upward and onward;" and the object of the "Cultivator" is not only to collect and disseminate valuable facts and information relating to practical agriculture, but to inspire 'Farmers' with more just conceptions of the dignity of their profession; to induce them to cultivate the 'Mind' as well as the 'soil,' and thus elevate themselves to that position which it is their duty and privilege to occupy as 'American Agriculturists,'' in this age of Progress and Improvement.

With its very large list of contributors, numbering over "two hundred," most of them practical farmers in the West, the pages of the "Cultivator" will contain the results of "Experience," as well as the teachings of "Science;" and being written or selected with special reference to the climate, productions and farming of Ohio, this paper will be found more valuable than any other for the farmers of this and the adjoining States. It will contain the latest intelligence of the "Markets" of this country and England; notices of the weather and the crops; descriptions (with engravings,) of improved implements, machines, &c.; instructions in gardening and fruit culture; rearing and management of domestic animals; construction of farm buildings, fences, &c.; and a "Ladies' Department" devoted to household affairs, useful receipts, &c.

The friends of Improvement in Ohio and adjoining States are requested to obtain and forward subscribers for the Ohio Cultivator. Remember that the price is only "seventy-five cents" each, when four or more names are sent by one person. All subscriptions must commence with the first number of the volume; a complete index is furnished at the end of the year. Specimen numbers and a prospectus will be forwarded to all who desire them.

☞ Now is the time to subscribe!" Letters with remittances may be sent by mail at the risk and expense of the publisher. Address,

A NEW AND IMPROVED VOLUME FOR 1848!

SEARS' PICTORIAL FAMILY MAGAZINE,

Established for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge:

A Monthly Miscellany of moral and instructive information, embellished with numerous ENGRAVINGS of the various subjects treated of in the course of the year. Published monthly, in parts of 48 large octave pages each.

PROSPECTUS FOR THE FIFTH VOLUME.

For four years the Pictorial Family Magazine has been before the American public, and it is peculiarly gratifying to the Publisher to know, that his efforts to do good through its medium, have met with the universal approbation of the public & the public prints, wherever it has found its way. It is now too firmly established upon the broad foundation of public confidence, to require a great flourish of trumpets to proclaim its continued existence, or the tricks of 'puffery' to allure the people to its support.

To those who are acquainted with the Magazine, it is unnecessary to speak of its design & merits; to those who are not, we will make a brief statement of both. The original design of this work was a noble one, and worthy of all praise. It was intended as a vehicle for conveying solid information to that class of citizens whose circumstances denied them the privilege of drinking abundantly at the fountain of useful knowledghe; & it has been the constant aim of the present publisher to carry out fully the above laudable designs. Its price, compared to the amount of its reading matter, and the number and quality of its Engravings, is exceedingly low; and we think we hazard nothing in saying, that it is by far the cheapest periodical published in America.

Natural History, Biography, Travels, History, Science, Useful Arts, Fine Arts, Agriculture and Rural Economy, Sketches of American Scenery, Political Economy, Essays, & Miscellaneous Reading, all receive a due share of attention, and all bear, as far as practicable, a decidedly American character. We aim, also, to preserve a high tone of morals, in the conduct of the Magazine, and to blend useful information with correct moral instruction, in order that it may, in every respect, be a useful and agreeable teacher in the domestic circle.

☞ Price two dollars per annum—three copies for five dollars, or ten copies for fifteen dollars—invariably in advance, as no Numbers are sent out until the subscription is paid.

☞ Thus far we have gone on steadily advancing in public favor, the sure indication of which has been a healthy increase in our subscription list. That we shall double our present number of subscribers in 1848, we have little doubt, for we intend doubling our efforts and increasing very greatly the value of the Magizine. We shall engage the very best engravers to be found. We have now some plates, illustrating a great variety of subjects, in progress for our new volume, that will be equal to anything that has appeared in the country.

☞ EVERY MAN HIS OWN AGENT.—All remittances of money for this Magazine must be sent to us free of postage. Those wishing to take our Magazine, will please write direct to us, enclosing a year's subscription ($2,) or the price of a club (ten copies for $15,) in funds current in the State where they reside. This simplifies the whole matter of subscription, perfectly, and makes the communication, between publisher and subscribers, as it should be, direct.

THE CLOSE OF THE YEAR.

BY GEO. D. PRENTICE.

Gone ? gone forever—Like a rushing wave,
Another year has burst upon the shore
Of earthly being—and its last low tones,
Wandering in broken accents on the air,
Are dying to an echo.

Yet why muse
Upon the past with sorrow ? Though the year
Has gone to blend with the mysterious tide
Of old Eternity, and borne along
Upon its heaving breast a thousand wrecks
Of glory and of beauty—yet, why mourn
That such is destiny ? Another year
Succeedest to the past—in their bright round
The seasons come and go—the same blue arch
That hath hung o'er us will hang o'er us yet—
The same pure stars that we loved to watch
Will blossom still at Twilight's gentle hour,
Like lilies on the tomb of Day—and still
Man will remain, to dream as he hath dreamed,
And mark the earth with passion. Love will spring
From the lone tomb of old affections—Hope,
And Joy, and great Ambition, will rise up
As they have risen—and their deeds will be
Brighter than those engraven on the scroll
Of parted centuries. Even now the ■■■
Of coming years, beneath whose mighty waves
Life's great events are heaving into birth,
Is tossing to and fro, as if the winds
Of heaven were prisoned in its soundless depths,
And struggling to be free.

"NOW OR NEVER."

BY J. CARPENTER.

Now or never ! now or never !
Let the maxim ne'er depart,
'Tis the watchword that forever
Should inspire each manly heart ;
For, if justice must be rendered,
On the wrong that's done to thee,
That no malice be engendered,
"Now or never !" let it be.

Now or never ! why to-morrow,
If the dead be good to-day ?
There may lurk an age of sorrow,
In one hour that's thrown away :
It is better to be doing,
For the future who may see ?
And delay may lead to ruin—
"Now or never !" let it be.

Now or never ! now or never !
When grim poverty appears,
Do the best of your endeavor
To assuage the mourner's tears ;
For a time may come, thy measures
May be meted out to thee,
Would you give from out your treasure ?
"Now or never !" let it be.

Conference Collections.

NO. V.

MR. EDITOR :—I presume so much said upon this subject is as unpleasant to you as it is to myself. I would a thousand times rather have it in my power to congratulate my brethren upon their successful schemes and plans for usefulness and benevolence, than to feel it to be my duty to rebuke them for laying Gothic hand on the plans prepared by others for charitable and humane purposes. I regret to be under the necessity of saying so, publicly, but the circumstances in which I am placed, seem to call for it, that I never returned from an Annual Conference with more discouraging sensations than I did from the last Muskingum Annual Conference. Br. Shinn was not there, whose clear head and honest heart enabled him generally to guide the counsels of the church aright. Brs. Brown, Reeves and Dalbey had no vote there, being transferred to other Conferences.—These are all men of the most sterling intelligence and integrity, who were with us from our infancy, and understand all our wants and interests. In their hands any cause is safe.—But there was there a younger generation, some of whom do not know in the neighborhood of half as much as they seem to think they know, laying rude hands upon every proposition to improve the financial system of the Conference, and otherwise, from the want of experience, conducting the business so as to injure the cause. From sheer bad management wounds & bruises were made that may never be healed. My heart then bled and still bleeds for the interests of our Zion.

When the unprovoked and uncalled for attack was made on the Preachers' Aid Society, I determined, if there were energy enough in the press, under its present mangement, to hold those who made it, responsible to public opinion for their act. And, Mr. Editor, I still entertain that resolution. So you see I am not done with the subject yet. I had no intention of beginning with Br. Burns in connection with these Conference Collections. The surprising blunder of the Secretary, in reporting the action of the Conference in relation thereto, was the accidental cause of introducing this subject here.

I wish further to state, there has always been a good understanding between the Secretary and myself. I have sometimes been more than a little tried at his tergiversations, yet for his many good qualities I have held for him a decent respect. And I am determined that this investigation shall not interrupt those relations, on my part. And, as God is my judge, I have no private pick to gratify in exposing the acts of brethren to the public, as I have had no personal difficulty with the parties concerned. My only object is the welfare of the church. As brethren, hitherto, have seemed disposed to pay but little attention to what they received, by the "hearing of the ear," they may, perhaps, be led to take a different view, of their doings when they are made to look at them by the seeing of the eye. And if we should be in any degree instrumental in improving their official doings, no difference whether it be by enlightening their counsels, or stimulating their fear of exposure, we will in part have accomplished our object.—After these general remarks we come to the Secretary's defence, and shall attend to the sentiments of both his numbers, as best suits our convenience.

In relation to the amendment to my resolution, after admitting he said nothing about "striking out," the Secretary adds: "but what I did say amounted to the same thing.—I moved to amend the resolution so as to read as follows," &c. Now reader remember, his amendment, if thus introduced, would be a substitute to my resolution, and bear in mind also that there lay a rule on the table, regulating the business of Conference, which, in substance, forbade any member offering an amendment, and the chair from entertaining it, which was a "substitute for the original." I, therefore, leave the Br. to say himself, whether this attempt, according to his own shewing, to violate the order of Conference business, with the rule directly under his nose, was done in "wilfulness or ignorance."

But the Secretary is not very confident that he introduced his resolution with the words we have just quoted from him, but he "thinks he said" so, or "at least that was what he intended to say." Now, reader remember here is an other little mistake of the Secretary, for, it will be seen by the following quotations, from him, that it was not "said" at all but that his resolution was written.—"Br. S. came to the table and I shewed him my amendment; he said he did not care, as the object would be secured."—So, you see, from this admission, that the Secretary's resolution was submitted to writing. I read it, as he states, and that, too, with scrutiny, and I will testify any time, if necessary, that there were no such words prefixed to the amendment, as the Secretary thinks, nor any thing like them. No! Sirs!! If I had seen about it any thing like the horns of a substitute, be assured! I would have done my best to knock the pitiful thing on the brains, that it might have expired on the Secretary's table where it originated! That I did not consider the Secretary's resolution, while I held it in my hand, a substitute, is fairly inferable from the remark he admits I made, that it would "secure the object." Now what was my "object?" Why, I never had but one on the subject and that was declared and explicit, viz: to pass such a rule as would require the superintendents to attend to the Conference Collections in person. The secretary may say himself, whether his substitute,—which does little else but attempt a crusade against the poor stewards,—secures our object, above.

From the views and feats here exhibited, whatever others may think on the subject, we are entirely satisfied that the Secretary is guilty of corrupting the journals of the Conference. If this be considered "uncharitable" we cannot help it, because, in our mind, the facts sustain the allegation. But, in as much as he assures us he gave what he supposed to be the action of that body, on the question at issue, and had no intention to commit "error" in the case, we are bound as a gentleman and as a christian to admit the integrity of his intention. But still we must be allowed to say that a person who would commit such a gross blunder as this, under the circumstances, is not, in our judgment, competent to be the Secretary of a deliberative body.

The Secretary informs us—and we did not know it before—that he is the author of the "resolution," or question, to be proposed annually by the chair, "making the superintendents responsible for the collections." And for this, and the promptness with which, he says, he attended to the Collections himself, he claims great merit, and asks, in consequence, to be exempt from the charges we have preferred against him. We know little about his personal attention to these Collections, save what he says himself, but are willing to give him full credit for all he claims. But, as it respects his being the author of the above resolution, that, taken in connection with his subsequent conduct, places him in no very enviable "position," and is a fair specimen of his business talent. In the first place, according to his own statement, he introduces, & obtains the passage of a resolution, to catechise the superintendents, annually, about a duty that no act of the church had yet made their duty. and thus fixes up the cart before the horse. And this little mistake of wis, has made the occasion of all the quibling, about Conference Collections, with which that body was bored for several years.

By thus going wrong end foremost to work, he accomplished any reasonable amount of disputation, but precious little for the needy missionary. But, secondly, when the attention of a member, who had two ideas on the subject of the order of business, was called to this ridiculous "position," he offered a resolution, under the authority of the Constitution, making it the duty of superintendents to raise Conference Collections, thus making the Secretary's catechism an orderly document, and, although he, in the following language, admits the jurisdiction of the Conference in the premises.—"We do not question the right of the Annual Conference to order as many Collections as she please in addition to the one in question."—Yet, lo! and behold!! this great champion for Conference Collections is the very first man to kill off this orderly resolution—the only resolution that will ever be likely to induce the superindentents to act generally & efficiently in favor of the needy preachers—and thus fairly entitles himself to the reputation of the old cow in the fable who gave a good pail of milk and then kicked it over. And by this very act he has done more to "shield delinquents" than any other man in the Conference.

The Secretary in assigning reasons for his amendment to my resolution, says; "I offered that amendment because I thought it more in accordance with the law, and as likely to secure the object as the resolution in its original form." More in accordance with the "law!" Why he does not seem to know that my resolution was designed to originate a "law!" And one, too, that was called for by the pressing exigency of the case. And it was emanating from a source that he admits had jurisdiction over the subject. "More in accordance with the law!" eh!! And pray, Sir, what was your Conference Catechism, or question, which you tell us you introduced at "Coshocton" making "seperintendents responsible for Conference Collections," and for which you "stood up" so perseveringly? This resolution of yours, tho' introduced in a disorderly way, had for its object precisely the same thing that our resolution had. It was all right and proper for you to be the author of an act to hold "superintendents responsible," tho' in an irregular way, but when another man attempts the same thing orderly, forsooth, the Secretary finds out, all at once, that it is not in "accordance with the law!" Bah!! This, gentle reader, is the kind of men who assume to rule the destiny of Muskingum Conference. Men who have no general views of any subject whatever, who are just as likely to go to work wrong end foremost as otherwise, and who by medling with subjects they do not understand, often throw the business of the Conference into confusion, as in the case before us.—As to the other branch of the Secretary's reason just quoted, that he "thought" his "amendment" "was as likely to secure the object as the resolution in its original form;" or in other words that the stewards would be as "likely" to raise as much by contributions from the public, as the superintendents would—I have to remark, I dare not doubt the Secretary's veracity. He says he believes this thing—so be it! But I think it doubtful if there be another man, woman, or boy, belonging to the Conference, who has been twice to church and once to market, but what knows, in the general, that the preacher in charge of any congregation can do more with his people, on any subject, whatever, than any member can do. And if the Secretary has no more discrimination than this—is no better able to improve from the events with which he is surrounded, I think it doubtful if he be able to manage even his own affairs, properly, without the assistance of a guardian much less the affairs of the public.

The Secretary asks why his resolution is "nonsensical," This I thought I had sufficiently indicated when I mentioned the subject. But as he seems to be rather dull of apprehension, I will try to gratify him by explaining myself. Then, first, I call it nonsensical because it accomplishes nothing. It was already the duty of the superintendent, by the requirement to "execute Discipline," to see that the Stewards and every other officer under his care, did their respective duties, and if they did not, to present them to the proper tribunals charged with their delinquencies; and for the discharge of this duty he was already accountable to the Annual Conference. Now when a man rises up to speak, says all he intended to say, and it means nothing, is not that nonsense? So when a brother offers a resolution which expresses every thing he proposed, and it accomplishes nothing, is not that nonsense also? Secondly, it is nonsensical because it is perfectly imbecile for the object proposed. His resolution can no more give talent, and tongue, and confidence, and influence to the officers to whom it refers, to qualify them for their duty, than, he, himself can create a world; and without these qualifications little could be done for the needy. Yet the Sec. seems to consider his resolution a very fine affair. By this, again, the reader will be able to estimate the extent of his business powers.

The brother says, in his second number: "my object in this communication is to relieve myself from the odium attempted to be cast on me, for caring not for my brethren who travel the poor circuits."—When the Constitution of a preachers' Aid Society was reported to the Steubenville Conference, which had for its object the relief of the needy itinerants, their widows and orphans, who, I ask you, Sir, was the very first man to lay violent hands upon the document? I reply, Secretary Burns, who was soon assisted by several congenial spirits, and in all probability would have choked the thing to death, had it not been for the timely aid of Br. Brown, of the Pittsburgh Conference, who rose in its defence, testifying his surprise at the course of brethren. both by words and gestures. When an attack was made upon the same society, at the last Conference, from another quarter, who, I ask again joined in the effort. I answer, Secretary Burns. And these repeated attacks so puralized the exertions that but little could be done in favor of the object. When a resolution was offered, at Youngstown, making it the duty of superintendents to raise contributions, from their respective charges, for the same purpose, who I ask defeated the resolution by a manœuver equal to a dexterous trick in cards? I answer still, Secretary Burns! If such a course does not lead to anarchy, to what does it lead? Say it yourself! Now my dear brother, just take these facts with you, and go to the pennyless preacher—the fatherless and the widow and "relieve yourself," if you can, "from the odium they cast upon you."—But I anticipate you will indignantly reply to all this, "that you have reasons for your course, and that you have just as good a right to your opinion as any man." Very well!—admitted! If you have reasons I challenge you to produce them. It will be a great treat for me to see them in print. So far you have offered nothing but growling for argument. No, my brother you can produce no reason justificatory of your course. The whole is the result of disposition of mind, to meddle with subjects you have not ideas sufficient to enable you to understand.

The Br. claims that I am in "error" in supposing that an Annual Conference may in any case disregard the acts of a general Conference. I would reply, in the first place, that properly speaking the rule, in the Discipline, which charges the duty of Conference Collections upon the Stewards, is not the act of any General Conference, but, as I shewed in my last, is the act of the same convention which formed the Constitution, that gave the Annual Conferences complete control over the subject of finance; and the explanation which reconciles that matter, is, that the convention only designed this rule, as they expressly have some others, as a temporary expedient, until the Annual Conferences should have time to mature financial plans. The General Conference has sense enough to know that it has no jurisdiction over this subject, and has, therefore, never meddled with it, leaving the responsibility of managing finance with the Annual Conferences. So that the pretext against passing my resolution, for fear of coming in contact with the General Conference, is all a humbug. Secondly, I did not rest my argument in favor of my resolution, as the Secretary states, on the ground that "the acts of the General Conference may be disregarded," but on the following reasoning; hear it—"even admitting the rule of the General Conference, charging the duty of Conference Collections on the Stewards to be of binding authority, and that the rule cannot be superceded by the act of an Annual Conference, still the Annual Conference has power, by virtue of the above constitutional provision, to require the superintendent to attend to the same duty also." The Secretary, in a quotation which we have already made from him, admits the correctness of this reasoning. Why then equivocate, and raise dust on the subject, by attempting to make us occupy "positions" we have not assumed? It is true, we said, that where an Annual Conference adopted a financial system the power of the General Conference must cease; so we say still, if there be wisdom and justice in the church, but we have not said yet by what process this will be effected.

If the Secretary would learn to treat the opinions & interests of others with a little more courtesy, or respect, it would be creditable to himself, and would, no doubt, render him more useful to the church.

Very respectfully yours, &c.,
CORNELIUS SPRINGER.
Meadow Farm, Ohio, Dec. 22nd, 1847.

Answer to "A Virginian."

NO. III.

"Virginian" exclaims—"I ask my Brother, what injury the mere relation to slavery does us as a Church? Does the evil of slavery rest on that relation? I answer, no." He then proceeds to prove that the EVIL of slavery rests, in an abuse of the relation to slavery, and not in slavery itself. This he attempts to prove in the first place, by a reference to two slaveholders, one converted to Christianity, treats his slaves well, feeds and clothes them well; the other an unbeliever in religion, treats his slaves like a savage, in laying the whip on their backs, &c. From this he thinks I can see that it is not the relation to slavery that makes the sin, but a bad heart taking advantage of that relation.

The second argument is drawn from the conduct of two married men. One treats his well, and the other abuses his wife, &c. And to put the argument in full force, he asks—"Now Br., which makes the sin, the holy institution of matrimony, which has God for its author, or the bad heart of the husband?" Now, Virginian, your arguments are founded upon the supposition that slavery is right; and a Christian may be guiltless, and be a slaveholder, if he only treats his slaves well, and that the institution of slavery is as holy as the institution of matrimony.—I ask, sir, are you sincere? are you in earnest? and do you mean to be understood that the slaveholders' relation to slavery is not wrong or sinful, and it is only made sinful by an abuse of that relation? If so, then all that is necessary in order to remove all the evils of slavery, would be to correct the abuse, and enlarge the relation to slavery. And if you are honest in such views, how could you use the following language in the first item of your article? "As it regards our relation to slavery, we are truly sorry that there are any amongst us." Are you truly sorry that a holy institution like that of matrimony is amongst you, and that you have a relation to that institution?—If slavery is an unholy institution, (which I believe and affirm) then it is wrong and sinful to hold a relation and connection with it, or in any way to promote its continuance; and very great evils must of necessity, grow out of that relation, whether the slaves are well or ill treated. There may perhaps be instances where individuals are measurably compelled by the peculiarities of the laws under which they live, to hold slaves, while it is against their own will to do so; and in such cases the guilt may be resting upon the law-making department. I believe the system of slavery owes its existence to the moderate, whom our Virginian would call the good, and Christian slaveholders. They are the men who keep in hopeless bondage, three millions of men, women and children, possessing powers and capacities sufficiently large to arise in glorious contemplation, to the Author of their being, and bow in full submission to his holy will; but who are compelled, and doomed to obey the will of tyrants, and oppressors. In every part of our country, laws have been made, prohibiting every crime, which has been condemned by the moral and religious part of community which has come within the bounds of human legislation; and if these evils exist they are condemned by law. And as slavery is a creature of law, it can live no longer than it is supported, and nourished by law, and as the more honorable or moral, and Christian part of community in general, control the law-making department, it follows that slavery lives by their indulgence, and fattens upon their support. The doctrine has spread all over this land, and is not now called in question, that the moderate and fashionable drinkers and dealers in alcoholic drinks, are the ones who sustain the system, and keep the fires of the distileries burning. And never was the strong arm of the law bro't to bear against old King Alcohol, until the better part of community arose in their strength against him. And who, I ask, sustains the institution of matrimony? It is the men who make good husbands. If all married men treated their wives as the "bad hearted" one referred to by our Virginian, marriages would be like angel's visits, few and far between. And who cannot see that the more kind and humane masters keep the slave system in being, and thereby place savage tyrants in a condition where they can enter into and abuse their relation to slavery? Slavery dies the very day that the professed friends of Christianity pronounce its death warrant. It lives or dies at their bidding, and God will hold them responsible for its existence; and if it did not exist the evils rising from an "abuse of a relation to slavery" could not exist. Now, Virginian, after reading the following passages from the sacred Scriptures, you can see that kind slaveholders as well as bad hearted ones, are held responsible for the evils of slavery. "Is not this the fast that I have chosen? to loose the bonds of wickedness, to undo the heavy burdens, and to let the oppressed go free, and that ye break every yoke."—Isa. 58: 6. "Wo unto them that call evil good," &c.—Isa. 5 chap. 20 verse.—"All things whatsoever you would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them,"—Mat. 7: 12. "Be ye not called Rabbi; for one is your Master even Christ, and all ye are brethren,"—Mat. 23: 8. "Inasmuch as ye did it not to one of the least of these, ye did it not to me,"—Mat. 25: 45.—"And hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on the face of the earth,"—Rom. 17: 26. Remember them that are in bonds, as bound with them,"—Heb. 13: 3. "And he that stealeth a man and selleth him, or if he be found in his hand he shall surely be put to death,"—Exodas 21: 16. "Thou shalt not deliver unto his Master the servant which is escaped from his Master unto thee."—Deut. 23: 15.

NO. XVIII.

Having stated in my last number, my arrival at Brother J. Bell's, Lower Sandusky, I shall now conclude by stating, that on Friday 25th, set off to find the little flock. After riding eleven miles, reached William Montgomery's son of the preacher, who informed me that some of the class had died, some had moved away, two had returned to the old church, and but eleven yet remained. I left an appointment for next day at 4 o'clock, in the evening, and went on to Brother J. Sowder's and there commenced my regular appointments. Preached several times at Lower Sandusky, visited Portland, and established five preaching places—reorganised the class, and formed two other small classes, with a prospect of a large class at Lower Sandusky. Held a two day's meeting at Brother Sowder's, which had been given out by Brother Frece, a local preacher who had left the Methodist Episcopal Church six years previous. He came thirty miles in company with another preacher. We had a precious season together—the good Lord blessed our labors. There is no doubt but a good circuit may be formed in this region. But my temporal affairs call me so strongly that I cannot stay much longer, though I confess that the liberality of the people here, brought me under obligations to love and esteem them as consistent Christians, and if circumstances would admit, I intended to visit them again. Nine years after this, I was appointed Conference Missionary again, and on the 15th of June, 1841, I set out to visit the northern circuits, and according to agreement, met Brother Bassett at a camp-meeting near Tiffin. Here I met with my old friends. God blessed our labors—many souls were converted—twenty-seven joined the church. Here I was prevailed on to visit a Mission in the State of Michigan. The Missionary, Br. Chapman, had written for Brothers Bassett or Ragan to come and assist him at his quarterly-meeting, at Adrian. Neither of them could go. At the close of camp-meeting I set off, reached Lower Sandusky next day, pressed on my journey,—reached Perrysburgh that night; next morning crossed the Maumee, and passed through the city of the same name, and through a dismal wilderness a number of miles and in the midst of the swamps met a tremendous rain storm; but by a kind Providence got to Adrian before night.—Here I might give some interesting items, but perhaps I have already tresspassed on the readers of the Recorder, I will therefore close, by saying that we had a pretty good time at the quarterly-meeting in Adrian, and a prospect of a good circuit. I took leave on Tuesday and set off for home by Fort Defiance.

Ladies' Department.

Domestic Education of Females.

BY REV. P. H. WINSLOW.

The greatest danger to females at the present time is the neglect of domestic education. Not only to themselves, but husbands, families and the community at large, does this danger impend. But far the greatest amount of happiness in civilized life is found in the domestic relations, and most of this depends on the domestic culture and habits of the wife and mother. Let her be intellectually educated as highly as possible, let her moral and social nature receive the highest graces of vigor and refinement, but along with these let the domestic virtues find ample place.

We cannot say much to our daughters about there being hereafter wives and mothers, but we ought to think much of it, and to give the thought prominence in our plans for their education. Good wives they cannot be, at least for men of intelligence, without mental culture;—good mothers they certainly cannot be, without it; and more than this, they cannot be such wives as men need unless they are good house keepers; and they cannot be good house keepers, without a thorough and practical teaching to that end. Our daughters should be practically taught to bake, wash, sweep, cook, set table, make up beds, sew, knit, darn stockings, take care of children, nurse, and do everything pertaining to the order, neatness, economy and happiness of the household. All this they can learn as well as not. It need not interfere in the least with their intellectual education, nor with the highest style of refinement. On the contrary, it shall greatly contribute thereto. Only let that time, or even a portion of it, which is worse, than wasted in idleness, sauntering, gossip, frivolous reading, and the various modern female dissipations which kill time and health, be devoted to domestic duties, and to domestic education, our daughters would soon be all that can be desired. A benign, regenerating influence would go forth through all the families of the land. Health and joy would sparkle in many now lustreless eye, the bloom would return to grace many a faded cheek, and doctor bills would fast give place to bills of wholesome fare. —Practical Educator.

THE PILGRIM'S JOURNEY.

I.

See the lone Pilgrim on his way
With sacred stole, and staff in hand;
Nor sorrows drear, nor darkling day,
Prevent his march to Canaan's land.

II.

Lo! onward bold, through threat'ning woes,
That gloomy rise, a fearful band,—
Urging triumphant through his foes,
A passage to bright Canaan's land.

III.

Though oft-times weary, sad, and faint,
And trembling can but feebly stand;
Yet utters he no mournful plaint,
But presses on to Canaan's land.

IV.

Springs in the desert murm'ring rise,
Pure treasures alway at command;
And glory beams along the skies,
To gild his path to Canaan's land.

V.

Yet way-worn now his steps become,
His staff he holds with feeble hand;
Sighing for his heavenly home—
A resting-place in Canaan's land.

VI.

Behold a stream, whose gloomy waves
Roll sullen by life's fading strand;
While the perennial bank it laves,
Of Canaan's ever blooming land.

VII.

Lo! the poor Pilgrim on its shore,
With gloomy thoughts its depths he scanned;
Pilgrims had crossed its waves before,
Could he not reach fair Canaan's land?

VIII.

But yet he stood with trembling fear,
Till music from a Seraph band,—
A heavenly strain—fell on his ear,
Borne on the breeze from Canaan's land.

IX.

"Fear not!" he hears the voice of God,—
He looks, and angels beck'ning stand;
Boldly he plunges in the flood,
With rapture gains the holy land.

X.

There, Pilgrim, rest thy weary soul,
And take thy golden harp in hand;
Let music from it ever roll,
To him who gave thee Canaan's land,

HISTORICAL REMINISCENCES OF THE WAR OF 1812.

NO. IV.

Mr. Editor: In my last number I mentioned, that the Indians attempting to cross the river, were driven back. They used their horses to cross over the deep water, and leaping off, turned them back for others; while Colonel Elliot could be distinctly seen, directing their measures.—It was now nearly night: they were seen building fires along the bank, as if determined to renew the contest in the night. We had no axes to make breast works,—no provisions for our men,—were eighty miles from our camp,—and had heard of no co-operation from Winchester. It was necessary for us to return; but we put on a bold front, built our fires, and kept a good look-out until darkness covered our movements, when I was left with a rear guard to keep up the fires, until the rest of the command were fairly on their march; when this was the case, and darkness also hid our movements, we also left. We had six miles of wet prairie to pass over, where the water was from two to six inches deep, and ice not quite hard enough to bear. Through this I marched on foot, having given up my horse to a man who had given out from fatigue and hunger. Two hours before day we reached one of Hull's encampments at Portage river, where we lay down, mostly without any thing to eat, and swamp water to drink. General Tupper here for the first time, learned that the two sick men were on the ground where we left in the morning, when the Spies returned from their first reconnoisance; and that they were probably killed or taken by the Indians who followed the Spies; & as we returned without passing that place, their fate was uncertain. He gave two of the Spies a large gratuity, to return, and ascertain their fate. They found the body of one, and one horse; and it was ascertained that one of the well men with one horse, joined us during the day, because the sick men refused to be removed. The other two were taken by the Indians. Besides these, one of our men who had left his place in the lines, and gone into a corn field, was shot in sight of an officer, who was also there, by the Indians, with a pistol. One other was also killed in this field, and one in a turnip patch, where he had gone to get turnips to eat. One Spy was wounded by a bullet in the shoulder, I have reason to think by one of our own men, by mistake; and one young man had a bullet pass through the flesh of his arm. These were the loss on our part. The Indians fared worse, as we ascertained from a white man, an Frenchman, who resided there at the time, & near whose house the Indian camp was. Their acknowledged loss was sixteen killed, and a number wounded, amongst whom was the chief Splitlog, their leader. And amongst the killed, a favorite Pottowatomy chief; and probably those killed in the river were not included in the number. The Indians did not attempt to pursue us. The next day we reached Fort Finley on the Auglaze, where pack-horses had brought us some flour, so that we received two tin-cups of flour to each man at night, and one in the morning, on which they had to march about forty miles. No more provisions were there, because no more pack-horses had come into camp, in season to send. The next day General Tupper and his staff, reached camp, and dispatched all the horses to the assistance of the men. I have been thus particular in giving an account of this expedition, because it has in several instances, been grossly mis-stated, especially in Mr. Atwater's History; from which it has been copied into others of more importance. Our main object was to save the corn, and this we effected, for the Indians left, without gathering any more than they consumed, and General Harrison's horses were kept on it the latter part of the winter, and a great deal was gathered after we joined him in February.

Had Winchester co-operated with us as he ought, and might have done, much might have been done to have prevented the subsequent destruction of the Kentucky troops, at the River Raisin, by breaking up the power of those tribes of Indians, most efficient in the British service. Our express reached Winchester's camp in season for a detachment from his camp to have reached the Rapids while we were there, and the road from their camp was on the west side of the river. As it was, he for two days resisted the solicitations of his officers, and on the day we had our skirmish with the Indians, Colonel Allen left with four hundred men, (out of 3,000 Winchester had,) and was met the night we left the Rapids, about half way down, by an express sent by General Tupper to advise any who might be on the way, of our not being able to cross the river, &c. This information saved Allen's detachment from destruction; for there were 600 Indian warriors, then on the alert, and not again to be caught off their guard. It was evident General Winchester did not wish to co-operate with us.

On our return to camp, General Tupper found two dispatches from Gen. Harrison, one advising him that Gen. Winchester had preferred charges against him, for not following the Indians with the mounted men, when at Defiance, and directing him to consider himself under arrest. The other a countermand of that order, directing him to consider the first as if not given. General Tupper considering the second order as having been given because he had started on the expedition, and being now over, gave up the command of the troops to the senior colonel, and repaired to General Harrison's head-quarters, in obedience to the first order, and demanded an investigation of the charges. General Harrison ordered him to resume his command; and he returned. During his absence, a very rainy time showed us that our camp would be subject to continued inundations, and the camp was moved to a more suitable spot, and huts or half faced camps, were erected, and puncheons put in for floors, for the men to lodge on, and subsequently these were shut in, in part, by chimneys of the same width as the camps. Our men had become very sickly, in consequence of the bad quality of the water, and damp lodging; so that 250 were reported unfit for duty. When we had the means, we sent our sick to Urbana, to a hospital there; but it frequently happened that there were no wagons to send them by, and they had to remain, until too sick to move. We lay there during the winter until about the last day of January, after Winchester's surrender; and we buried there about thirty of our men. General Tupper requested permission to fall back to Solomonstown, about sixteen miles, where there was good water, and a healthy situation; but he could not obtain it. It appeared that General Harrison was in hopes soon to move on. His plans were defeated by Winchester's movements, & the difficulty of transporting the supplies for the army.

There was connected with our expedition to the Rapids, a transaction which has been related by Drake in his Tecumseh, and may be found in Mr. Howe's Collections of Ohio, page 302, which I will relate as it was supposed to have occurred, with some preliminary occurrences, not there given. We had some some Spies, sent as expresses, in Winchester's camp at the time. I have already mentioned the fact that Captain Lewis and Captain Logan, with ten of their Indians had joined General Harrison at Franklinton. These twelve Indians, with two Frenchmen from Michigan, General Harrison dispatched to the Rapids, (a day or two before the prisoner, Clark, reached him, with the information of our having marched for that place, &c.) The object was, if possible to take a prisoner. These knew nothing of the arrival of the British and Indians at that place, or of our having been there. They reached the Rapids after we had left there, while the hostile Indians were yet under the influence of our attempted attack on them. Finding there was a large body of hostile Indians there, a discussion arose as to the best means of obtaining a prisoner. Lewis advised lying in concealment until an opportunity offered, of securing one without disturbing the others; Logan, who was more reckless of danger, was for dashing in amongst them by day,—securing one, and fighting their way back, if necessary. Logan's policy prevailed, and they were discovered, and hotly pursued by the enemy, when they separated; Lewis with eight Indians, and the two Frenchmen, retreated through the wilderness, on this side of the river, while Logan, with Captain Jonny and Bright-horn, retreated up the west side of the river, towards Winchester's camp.—Here General Payne of the Kentucky troops, and perhaps others, accused Logan of want of honesty in his professions of friendship towards the Americans; and so wrought on his feelings, that he determined to do something that would prove the truth of his professions. He determined to take the scalp of some of the hostile Indians, or lose his own. The three started back down the river, and when turning the point of a bluff bank, came suddenly upon five hostile Indians, and a son of Colonel Elliot. Three of them were on horses, armed, and three on foot. Logan signed to his companions to be silent, and he accosted them in a friendly, confident manner. They enquired his errand, and was informed he was going to Colonel Proctor, with a message.—He also enquired their business up the river, and received a somewhat similar answer, of business with Winchester. After some conversation, Logan continued on down the river, and the others accompanied him; the three on horseback (including Elliot's son,) in his rear, while the three on foot, kept on his flank; the river being on the other side. After some time, the three on foot, delayed a little, to pick some haws, so that Logan spoke to his companions, and they all turned and fired upon the three on horseback. Elliot's son, and a Potowatomy chief, were killed; the other wounded, and fled: the three on foot immediately hastened up; Captain Johnny ran to scalp the dead chief, and a contest ensued between Logan and Bright-horn on one side, for their lives, their guns being unloaded, and the three Indians, to avenge their fellows. The three fired, and Logan was shot through the body; the other was wounded, but as they did not fall, the three retreated. Captain Johnny having taken the scalp, returned, and finding the two chiefs wounded, caught the horses of the men who were killed, and took the wounded to Winchester's camp, where Logan died. A history of this transaction varying somewhat from this, with a portion of the early history of Logan, will be found in Howe's Historical Collections; head Logan Co. The death of Logan was a subject of much regret in Ohio, and the officers who by their conduct caused the calamity, severely condemned, as deficient in that courage they had called in question in Logan. Mr. Editor,—The following article which is borrowed from "The Wesleyan Methodist Association Magazine," for September last, is submitted to the consideration of your intelligent Readers. S.

SOURCES OF SUPERSTITION.

Human nature always has had a tendency to increase the ordinances of religion; or to pervert them. Will-worship is always busy in devising new rites, and the fears of an ignorant mind, and a guilty conscience, are ever instigating the worshipper to abuse those which have been appointed by God. An unregulated imagination is most prolific of "thick coming fancies," in those whose judgment is weak. Imagination is the handmaid of the passions; and there is none of them she is more ready to obey than fear, especially when its forebodings stretch into the invisible world. She loves to hover in the regions of shadows, and to summon up spirits from the "vasty deep," as with the wand of an enchantress. These phantoms, whatever you may call them, "ghosts, goblins, spirits, or fairies," are apt to fly before the light of knowledge, which gradually gives to judgment, the ascendancy that it ought to have, in the mental economy. It is to her also, that superstition is indebted for her dreams, visions, and occular intimations. This is the divinity which inspired all that was honest in the monkish legends of the dark ages, from which Rome has borrowed so many fooleries in the lives of her saints, and in her breviary. It is to this faculty also, and not to reason or conscience, or true spiritual sensibility, that an appeal is made in the pomp and splendor of worship—and in this, that church has shown a deep knowledge of the human mind, as the heathens formerly did. For she can boast nothing more gorgeous and imposing than what they have set her the pattern of. In the most fascinating parts of her system she is but a copyist. Her gloomy cathedrals, her lighted altars, her splendidly vested priests, her grand processions, her thrilling music, her multiform ceremonies, her unintelligible utterances, her numerous symbols, her many mysteries, her pageantry and penances, were all deviscd before she was born. The long train of superstitions, advancing from her temple gates, in glittering or sombrous array, is formed chiefly of the progeny of fear and imagination, nursed in the bosom of ignorance, and educated by priestcraft.

"The weak soul within itself unblest," turns naturally for relief to the spells of superstition.—Timid, ill-boding, and unhappy, it is ever seeking consolation, where it finds only the food of anxiety. The sensibilities of such an one are easily excited; tears are ready to flow—sighs come unbidden—the heart is a fountain of sorrow. On such a mind it is easy for any spiritual quack to operate. It requires no talent to throw it into a state of hysterical excitement, to startle it with terror, soothe it into comfort, or raise it to short-lived raptures, which, like the dreams of the opium-eater, speedily leave it more miserable than ever. It holds the persons of men in admiration, and is awed with the slightest whisper of authority.

Nearly all men of irreligious lives are superstitious on their death-bed—and the more irreligious they have been, the more will their fears be excited now, and the more reliance they will place on forms and sacraments. Their minds are bewildered. The thought of a neglected God, against whom their whole life has been an almost uninterrupted course of rebellion, fills them with horror. They send for the priest, and implore to have the rites of the church. They are soon taught (if not very poor) that the church does not give her sacraments for nothing. But she does not say so openly. She tells the perishing sinner, by consecrating his property to the church and the poor, constituting the clergy (of course) his almoners he can make atonement for his iniquities, and purchace the favor of God. Death-bed repentance may not have done much to people heaven, but it has done more than any thing else to enrich the church with splendid endowments, and to adorn it with costly buildings. The dying spendthrift or miser,—true to the intense selfishness which guided him through life,—cares not for relatives or friends, provided he can escape the damnation which he dreads, and as they can promise him no passport to pleasure in the world in which he is forced to enter, he gives his property to those who make such promises without scruple. In the profligate and superstitious ages, (for the most superstitious ages have been the most profligate,) which preceded the Reformation, the church extorted so many legacies from the fears of the dying, that she would soon have possessed all the estates in England, if the legislature had not interfered by the statute of Mortmain, which rendered such alienation of landed property null and void, without the royal license.

Credulity has always fostered superstition.—The sceptical and credulous are often influenced by a common feeling, in neglecting the truth, and that is passive indolence. They will not take the trouble to inquire, to examine, and judge for themselves; and the result is, that they depart from the truth in different directions. Credulity is fond of the marvellous,—swallows every absurdity,—believes every idle story of miracles and prodigies. This disposition is contagious, spreading rapidly from mind to mind, staggering even the judicious, and bearing away all the weak minded and indolent in its progress. This is a sadly prevailing evil in the Roman Church.—Witness the Estatica and Addolorata of the Earl of Shrewsbury—a narrative which should shame the boasted illumination of the nineteenth century.

The understanding is duped by the heart, and we pursuade ourselves that a thing is so, because we wish it. As even a heathen said, "The people will be deceived," and they are deceived, for they are most pleased with those teachers who are successful in deceiving them. If the creed of a prejudiced man happens to be right, it is only so by accident of his birth or education.—Had he been born or brought up in Turkey, he would be as zealous for its religion, as he is for that of the Pope. The truth which is held by prejudice, is not truth to the mind where it is found in this degrading connection. The man who knows the truth, has made it the subject of thought. He has examined, doubted, been convinced, by carefully weighing the evidence on both sides. He digs for it as for gold, separates it from alloy, and keeps, the precious, purified metal as his best treasure. Then it is his own treasure which he values above all rubies.—Those who glory in their churches, without considering candidly what has been said against them, may laud them as loudly as they please; but I defy them to shout more loud and long than did those who cried for the space of two hours—"Great is Diana of the Ephesians." In boasting of the exclusive authority and excellence of the Church of Rome, as Romanists are, from the pulpits and presses, north and south, what are they doing but following the stupid example of these idolaters! They attempt to put down the Protestant world, by boasting of their antiquity and numbers! Why, the imperial religion of China, which is embraced by one-third of the human race, had flourished in its present forms,—at least a thousand years before they laid the foundations of the Papal metropolis! Compared with theirs, Catholicism is a mere mushroom beside an oak.

The vain-glorious and ambitious often practice and foster superstition to get themselves a name. They must make themselves notorious, and become the objects of admiration in some way or other; and being neither Solons nor Solomons, having nothing truly good or great to make them eminent, they are determined to attain destruction in the way of the Pharisees. They fast, make long prayers, utter devout exclamations, exhibit the whites of their eyes! and ostentatiously practice all the singularities of superstition. The conqueror of the world exclaimed,—"If I were not Alexander, I would be Diogenes." In that same spirit, Simon Stylites mounted his filthy pillar, and innumerable savage saints drew their stupid admirers after them into the desert, where instead of laboring to be useful among their fellow-men, they cultivated the habits of wild beasts.

These sources of superstition, are found in human nature, and to them Protestants as well as Catholics are more or less exposed. The difference is, that the former generally condemn and resist them, while by the latter, they are generally sanctioned and fostered. In every church, indeed, worldliness, will try to make compensation for its want of goodness, by a punctilious formality, by an anxious scrupulosity about ceremonies, and by zeal in supporting an established system. But it is only in the Church of Rome, and by her mimics at Oxford, that these things are particularly enjoined as meritorious and expiatory. Hers is a religion peculiarly suitable for worldlings, because it is not merely a round of bodily exercises and mechanical observances, but it is pre-eminently, what above all things, worldly men like; a system which enables them to be religious by Proxy.

From the Missionary Herald.

Wesleyan Mission in the Feejee Islands.

The subjoined extracts from letters written by several of the missionaries stationed in that field, and published in the Wesleyan Missionary Notices, will give some idea of their labors, Rev. Mr. Watsford in a communication dated Ono, Oct. 6, 1846, writes as follows:

We do not, and we cannot tell you what we know of Feejeean cruelty and crime. You have heard much; but, after all, you have not been told one half. Every day we hear of murder and bloodshed, and every fresh act seems to rise above the last. There have been some great monsters in Feejee. A chief at Rakeraki had a box, in which he kept human flesh. Legs and arms were salted for him, and preserved in this box. If he say any one of his friends who was fatter than the rest, he had him or her killed at once, and part roasted and part preserved. The people saw that he eats human flesh every day. At Bau, the people keep human flesh and chew it as some do tobacco. They carry it about with them in their clothes, and use it in the same way as tobacco. I heard of an instance of cruelty the other day, from one of our teachers, that surpassed every thing I have heard of the kind. A canoe was wrecked near Natawar, and many of the people swam to the shore. They were taken by the Natawar people, and ovens were at once prepared in which to cook them. The poor wretches were bound ready for the ovens, and their enemies were anxiously waiting to devour them. They did not club them, lest any blood should be lost. Some could not wait until the ovens were heated, but pulled their ears off the wretched beings, and ate them raw. When the ovens were ready, they cut them up very carefully, placing dishes under every part to catch the blood; and if a drop fell, they licked it up off the ground with the greatest greediness. While the poor wretches were being cut in pieces, they pleaded hard for life; but all was of no avail; all were devoured by the cruel cannibals. But time would fail to tell a part of what we could relate; but the worst will yet remain concealed. Enough is known to make every heart feel and deeply mourn.

Amid all the darkness, the cruelty, the cannibalism, by which we are surrounded, our hearts are cheered by the conversion of some to the Lord; and it is a pleasing and cheering fact that those who formerly were the worst Feejeeans, have been among the first to embrace the gospel of Christ, and many of these have been converted to God. I allude to the people of Viwa. The chief, Elijah, is a good man. He is one of the best men I have met with in these Islands. He was formerly a cruel cannibal; but the lion has become a lamb, and a little child may lead him. He has suffered the loss of all things for Christ. He has literally given up all, and he seems willing to do anything or suffer anything for Jesus Christ. What has been done encourages us in our work. Jesus shall reign.

Rev. Thomas J. Jaggar, writing from Viwa, Oct. 7, 1846, employs the following language:

Since I last wrote, the Lord has continued to visit us, and give us repeated evidences of his love. The public services are very refreshing seasons to our souls. Much hallowed feeling characterizes our waiting upon God; many of our people hear instruction to profit, and are growing in good things. Over some of them we can with confidence rejoice.

Our numbers are continually increasing. A Sabbath seldom passes away without some bowing the knee to Jehovah, and thus becoming professing Christians; for however long the Feejeeans may hear instruction, they do not renounce their false gods until they bow themselves in a religious act before the Lord. They thus publicly are initiated, and from such time regularly attend the ordinances of worship and are reckoned as lotu. They directly make application for a spelling book and take their place in the school.

Since my last letter to you the Queen of Rawa and three of her children, and Tendreketi's mother, renounced heathenism. They were joined by one of Qaranigio's wives and child, who were residing at Bau, having been taken prisoners in the war, and by several of their attendants, and one or two other ladies from Rawa.

Another missionary, Rev. Richard B. Lyth, in a letter dated Viwa, November 2, 1846, speaks as follows:

There has been a gracious outpouring of the Spirit at the towns of Wathewathe and Waitambu. Mary Jane, the wife of Zephaniah Lua, chief of Wathwathe, and daughter of the King has been soundly converted. Immediately after the blessed change she went to the King and besought him with filial importunity at once to embrace religion, stating that she had just now found its reality. About forty persons, mostly members have obtained good in this revival; and several of them (I cannot speak particularly) know that they are now the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus. This is cause for heartfelt gratitude; and particularly so, as it occurred at the time when the papists were making great exertions, and had received an accesion of from twelve to twenty proselytes.

Some of the people of Nayau and Thethea, two heathen island have renounced heathenism, and desire teachers to be sent to instruct them in Christianity. Those of Nayau were induced to turn by witnessing the good conduct of some Tongese and Samoan Christians, whose canoe, having drifted to Feejee, touched at their island. The Committee will rejoice to hear that Benjamin, our head teacher at Samoe, with his party, were the persons whose regard for the Sabbath and general good conduct had won the hearts of Nayans. They were drifted when on their way to the Tonga group from Samoa.

A letter from Mr. Hunt, dated Viwa, November 6, 1846, contains some additional intelligence:

At Viwa we have had much of the presence of God in our meetings of late. The spirit of prayer has been poured upon us, which we know is a token for good. As muny appeared to be concerned for salvation, we determined last week to commence a penitent meeting on a Saturdy night, and to invite all those who felt a desire for salvation. The time of meeting arrived, and a good congregation assembled. After singing and prayer, the object of the meeting was stated, and the people were exhorted to pray without being called upon by name, and to pray short and to the point. One of our oldest and calmest members commenced, and prayed with great feeling; another followed with increased feeling; and the sacred influence increased in the meeting proceeded; so that long before its close nearly all the people were praying together. As they had never seen anything of the kind before, there could be no deception in the case. It was evident that the hand of the Lord was among them. Many were pricked to the heart, and cried in agonies for mercy; and some were enabled to believe in the Lord Jesus Christ, and were made happy in the consciousness of their ecceptance with God thro' him. Then they prayed for others with amazing fervor; and thus the holy fire spread. The meeting was not long; but the sacred influence remained with the people, untill most of them were converted.

To describe what followed is impossible. Some of the worst cannibals in Feejee were suddenly seized with the most powerful conviction, and a sight of their state and danger threw them into the most awful agonies of sorrow. They wept and wailed most piteously; some were so agitated, as to require several men to prevent them doing themselves and others bodily harm. Yet there was nothing foolish in what they said. They bewailed their sins, and prayed for mercy in a manner which astonished us.

Some of them had but very lately abandoned heathenism; yet their knowledge of the gospel, and the propriety with which they expressed themselves in prayer, have done credit to a person who had been born and educated in a Christian country. Were they not taught of God? What some of them had long heard without much apparent effect, was now of the greatest use. Converson to God is the only proper means for making theological knowledge practically useful. I never saw this truth so clearly illustrated as in the case of some of the older members of our society in Viwa. We had long mourned over their apparent inability to understand the plan of salvation by simple faith in Jesus. Their class-meeting statements showed a defective experience; they were, in fact, servants, not sons, of God. Now the difficulty was removed by the faith-inspiring Spirit. His inspiration made all easy, and his testimony to the fact of their acceptance, made all clear and satisfatory. At the end of five or six days we visited the whole of the people, for the purpose of learning their state; and we found upwards of seventy who had found peace with God. Some of our people visited the out-stations in this circuit on business, and took the sacred fire with them; so that when we paid our regular visits to them, we found them fully prepared, not merely for the ordinances of baptism and the Lord's supper, which we went to administer among them, but for the salvation of which these are but the signs and symbols. We had, indeed a blessed spiritual visit. Many times, when administering the Lord's supper, the people were so overwhelmed with the power of God, that they could scarcely receive the elements.

During part of the revival the Bau chiefs threatened the Viwa Christians with every thing fearful; and, indeed they appeared determined to root out Christianity from every place where they had any influence. Our teacher was sent away from Ovalau; and other persons who had embraced Christianity in places connected with Bau were oblige to leave their homes, and come to reside at Viwa. A Bau chief who was favorable to Christianity, was sent to Viwa, where he became a Christian, and is now meeting in class. The storm appeared to be gathering, but it burst in blessings on our head. We were delivered by our God; and now the persecution appears to have ceased, and the word of the Lord continues to grow.

It will not be imagined that now the greater part of the people of Viwa, and some other places, are truly converted, our work is accomplished. No; they require all the attention of children. They know but little more than children on many subjects; and they are but babes in Christ. Again; but few, comparatively, even of our professing Christians, are clear in their experience. Perhaps four hundred during the year have obtained remission of sins in various parts of the group. Many more have professed; but even if all are truly saved who profess to be, a great many remain who are not. We want a perpetual revival, and one which will reach the heathen. For this we entreat your prayers, and the prayers of the church of God.

MUSKINGUM DISTRICT.

Tiffin, O., Dec. 30, 1847.

Rev. A. H. Bassett—Dear Sir: For the information of Br. G. Clancy, the executive of the district, and as many others as feel an interest for the cause of Christ, which we are engaged in promoting; I wish to occupy a short space in your columns, with a brief account of the religious condition of Sandusky Circuit.

Two years and three months, I have labored with this kind people, in word and doctrine, without an unpleasant occurrence to mar our peace, or (so far as I know) to alienate our mutual affections. In all our meetings, whether of an official, or devotional character, peace and harmony have prevailed. At sundry times, during the two former Conference years, God has poured upon us the heathful, and reviving influences of his Holy Spirit; renewing believers in the spirit of their minds, and reproving unbelievers, of sin, of righteousness, and of judgment; and a number of sinners, were induced to yield, to be saved by grace, through faith, in our Lord Jesus Christ; the most of whom, yet profess to be following the Saviour in the way.

Thus far in the present Conference year, we have had no special displays of God's powers, in the conversion of souls; yet we have reason to believe, that our labor, has not been altogether in vain, in the Lord. Members of the church, are holding on whereunto they have attained, and some seriousness, is occasionally manifest among sinners, from which we infer, that God yet waits to be gracious unto us, and our hopes are somewhat flattered, that our Redeemer will, ere long come unto us, as the former, and the latter rain cometh upon the earth. Br. T. Potter commenced a series of evening meetings, in this place, on the 12th inst, and continued them until the 19th. His subjects were well chosen for the occasion; and zealously, and forcibly, applied, both to formal professors, and hardened sinners, and would have been productive of greater good, I have no doubt, under more favorable circumstances; but a severe snow storm, which set in about the commencement of the meeting, and continued for more than a week; rendered it almost impassable for the friends to get in from the country, and but very few of the citizens of the town, could be induced to turn out, thro' the inclement season, to promote the interests of the meeting. The few that were present however, found it good to wait on the Lord.

At our first Quarterly Meeting, for this Conference year, we received a minister, Br. James Freese, who applied for admission into our Church; on unquestionable testimonials, from a sister Church; and he has since been employed, to travel and preach as assistant on this circuit. Br. Clancy, is hereby notified of the above arrangement, to which his sanction is requested, at his own convenience.

ISRAEL THRAP.

Delaware Circuit, Dec. 25, 1847.

Br. Bassett: For the encouragement of our brethren I wish to state a few things, not of that which is to come, but of that which has already past. I resumed my labors soon after the rise of the Annual Conference, and I can say, if possible with renewed energy, not sparing my lungs or throat, I have endeavored to do all I could, to do good and to promote the cause of Christ. And the best of all is that my labors have not been in vain in the Lord. For the Great God has powerfully revived his work, in pulling down the strong hold of wickedness, and building up his Kingdom. Our first quarterly meeting commenced on the 4th day of November last, and we made a final close of it about the first of December. We had a most glorious time, of which I have not time to give it in details, but will say, many were made very happy in the love of God, and adopted into his family, and 12 gave us their names, & I have no doubt gave God their hearts, & are bidding fair for heaven. We also held a protracted meeting in a new place called Sheets's School House, it commenced on last Saturday and closed on Tuesday night, and altho' we had no help, yet the Lord was there, and that to bless. Yea verily, he took the work into his own hands and worked like a wonder working God, to the destruction of sin, for I can tell you as far as I am able to judge, Satan's kingdom suffered loss: for at both these meetings infidels of all grades, from Universalist to the heaven darling Atheist were made to acknowledge the power of God, and some were brought to bow at the anxious seat. O how it did me good to hear one who had contended against the truth of the bible and religion, shout aloud for joy and say, I know now that God has power on earth to forgive sin. Who would not rejoice to see Satan so completely beaten and his kingdom come tumbling down? Altho' devils may mourn, yet Angels in heaven, and good men on earth shout for joy. And who has a better right? Rejoice all ye servants of the Most High, for God is at work. At the meeting we organized a new class of eleven all from nature's forest, and as good timber as I ever saw framed into a class. My prayer to God is, that they may do well. You will hear further from us. Yours in love,

WM. HATFIELD, Jr.

OHIO DISTRICT.

Greenville Mission, Dec. 27, 1847.

Br. Bassett: I wish to inform the President, Brother Young, that his meeting for Greenville Mission on the 11th and 12th of February, will be held at Brother Richard Agan's, ten miles south east from Greenville, on the road to Milton, and as the friends of our Zion no doubt would be anxious to know how we are getting along, I will just say that we have nothing very flattering to write; however a few have given their names to the Church since Conference. It is a general time of peace on the Mission. We have intimations for good in some places, but no special revival, but we are looking forward for better times. May the good Lord speedily send relief to his people, and prosperity to his own cause. Pray for us. J. C. HUNT, Superintendent.

PITTSBURGH DISTRICT.

Kanawha Mission, Va., Dec. 29, 1847.

Br. Bassett: After saying to our brethren that I would have written sooner but for bad luck about getting your paper owing to bad management of the post master at Point P. I wish to inform them that I have been on this Mission since soon after the rise of Conference, and have been laboring for the cause of the Savior, and have endeavored as far as I thought practicable, to make known the principles of our church. A part of the time I labored under embarrassing circumstances, as I was on expense. I have large attentive congregations which inspires me with hope of better times. I have found one old Brother and lady who belonged to the M. P. Church at Graham's Station; I have made a regular appointment in their neighborhood where there is but a small society and that Presbyterian; there are a few Lutheran brethren but they have no Pastor, but both denominations receive me with warm reception, and take an interest in our meetings. Here we have a crowded house, (schoolhouse) mostly of unconverted people, I held one protracted meeting at this place, labored hard (being disappointed in getting help) Saturday, Sabbath and Monday, only found one Brother (an old side) to pray once during the time, we had omens of good, a seriousness was manifested by a number. Had we been blest with ministerial help, and a few active zealous members, I believe we might have had a melting time. I held two other protracted meetings where there was some feeling, but no mourners or conversions. I would say in conclusion that I believe our principles will take here after a little, but we must wait with patience. The greatest difficulty will be to get the people converted. I trust the brethren will pray for this Mission and the Missionary, that sinners may be saved, the Kingdom of the Redeemer advanced and God's name glorified. Amen.

WESTERN REGORDER.

PUTNAM, OHIO, THURSDAY, JAN. 13, 1848.

☞ Rev. Thomas Potter, Conference Missionary of the Muskingum Conference, will preach on next Sabbath morning at 11 o'clock, and also at candlelight, in the Methodist Prot. Church Zanesville.

Acknowledgments.—Our thanks are due to our Representative in Congress, Nathan Evans, Esq., Gen. Goddard, Speaker of the Ohio State Senate, & A. S. Randall, Esq. of the House of Representatives, for interesting public documents sent us. And we trust we have received but a beginning of their favors. Much obliged, gentlemen.

☞ The obituary of our lamented sister Sewell of Allegheny city, is sent us by Br. Reeves, cut from a Pittsburgh paper.

Congressional Globe and Appendix.—We have been regularly receiving this work for several past sessions of Congress, and have to say that we would not do without it for more than its price. It is issued in quarto form, very neatly executed, and contains a full and faithful record of the proceedings of Congress, with all the public documents, and is free from party influences. Blair & Rives publishers, Washington City. We regret that No. 1. of the Globe, and No. 1. of the Appendix were reduced to a pulp in a drowned mail during the inundation last month, by which we are seriously deprived. The obliging publishers will if they please, favor us with another copy.

The American Tract Society.—This organization has become, in the hands of God, one of the most important and efficient agents of usefulness. Besides its extensive publication of tracts and books, it has of late years entered upon the noble scheme of Colportage. In this enterprise, we believe nearly 150 pious men are employed in nearly all the States, distributing religious publications, holding religious conversation with families and individuals, and also holding public meetings. These have already been instrumental in effecting immense good, especially amongst foreign emigrants. The association should be sustained in these noble enterprises. Those who have means, and wish to glorify God and promote the conversion of the world, could not make a better investment of any amount, of from one dollar to a thousand, than by handing it over to the American Tract Society. If any of our friends wish to do so, who have not an agent at hand, if they will remit to us, we will cheerfully and faithfully transmit what they see fit to send, and, by the grace of God, it shall not go without our own contribution.

Henry Clay arrived in Baltimore, on the 6th inst. on his way to Washington City.

Rev. Edw. Smith.—We find in the last number of the True Wesleyan a communication from this brother, in the form of a Report of the Canada Mission, to which, it seems, he is paying a visit. The report is considerably interesting in its details of the condition of the settlements of self-emancipated fugitives from slavery in the States.

Brother Smith states that from the best estimate he could make, there are from twenty to twenty-five thousand fugitives from slavery in the province of Upper Canada. He says there is difficulty to ascertain the precise number, as the laws make no distinction as to color; and in taking the census, they are not separately numbered, as with us. The last season, he observes, surpassed any previous one for the arrival of fugitives. He was informed of about one thousand coming from Kentucky alone, besides many from other States. The facilities for their escape are said to be greatly increased. He represents the soil of Upper Canada as very good, and the climate much milder than would be supposed. He rejoices that the victims of oppression have there an excellent country, where they can soon become proprietors of lands, for sale by the government at from $1 to $2 per acre, and be free from apprehension of capture.

On the Canar river, are 6000 acres of good land for sale by the government, allowing purchasers ten equal annual payments. Here the colored people are making an extensive settlement. Brother Smith has in view the worthy project to raise means to erect a school house and meeting house for the new settlers, as they will not be able to do this at present of themselves. Success to it.

In reading the paper of Brother Smith, no one can fail to discover that the writer is an important man. The first person singular occurs so very frequently, that if the article had been twice as long as it is, we apprehend that Brother Lee's printer would have found his capital I's run very short, if not exhausted.

Emigrants from Holland.—A Colportuer out west, gives, in the American Messenger, an account of a large body of emigrants from Holland which have settled in Iowa. He says they have purchased three townships, and already number 1,500, whilst still more are expected the coming year. In visiting them, he found them all Protestants, and many of them pious. He says they were sadly persecuted at home for opinion's sake: one of them, an estimable clergyman was fined $500 for preaching his farewell sermon! Surely, our beloved country is an asylum for the oppressed;—i. e, provided they by white folks.

Pittsburgh Gazette.—This we have long esteemed one of the best newspapers on our exchange list. We see that it has commenced the new year with new type, whilst its heretofore ample pages, have been yet again enlarged. We are pleased to learn that the publication enjoys prosperity. Erastus Brooks, Esq., is Editor of the Gazette. Weekly paper, $2 in advance. We meet with something in the last number, so good that we will not refrain from here giving it to our readers. Mr. Brooks declines to disgrace his sheet by inserting an advertisement sent him by some soul catcher, for certain fugitive slaves. The following are his words.

"Am I my brother's keeper."—The Gazette must decline the publication of an advertisement, headed $100,00 Reward. We are not aware that such a paltry sum would tempt a reader of the Gazette to catch a boy about "ten years old, rather spare and delicately made, with black eyes, hair straight, though somewhat inclined to curl." Nor would any proposition of that amount induce them to harm a woman twenty-six years old, who is said to be "very respectful and pleasant when spoken to." No one would harm her when we say she is the mother of the "delicately made" boy, and of two other children also with her.

It is to be hoped that no one who reads the Gazette is so poor that he can be tempted to gain his bread by money thus earned. Famine alone in its most horrible form could tempt a man to sell his manhood, by turning an informer. No man who has read the Gazette, could eat bread which would be literally soaked in the bitter tears of a mother and her little ones, who with their hopes of freedom blighted, would be by his act, given once more to the hands of their taskmasters. If this family, is now within the limits of free Pennsylvania, we hope for the honor of the press, the State and of humanity that no trace of them will be found through the medium of "the press." We are sure the advertisement has been sent us for one who does not read the Gazette, for no one who does could thus insult its conductors and readers.

The Ocean Steamers.—Our readers will be interested with the following announcement from a foreign journal, of the arrangements of the British and North American Royal Mail Steam Ship Company, for the arrival and departure of their vessels.

After which the departures become weekly from England to America, and from America to England. For the execution of this gigantic contract, this enterprising Com. have nearly completed four new ships of greater tonnage and steam power than their celebrated steamers, which will make a fleet of nine vessels, viz., the Brittannia, Acadia, Caledonia, Hibernia, Cambria, America, Canada, Niagara, and the Europa, and, without exception, the fastest, and finest Steam Ships in the world.—We believe that this new and increased means of rapid intercourse between the two greatest maratime countries in the world will be hailed with delight by the enterprising & active men of commercial England and commercial America.

American Messenger.—This is a monthly publication of the American Tract Society, in the newspaper form. It has commenced its 6th volume with the number for the present month. We consider it one of the most useful publications in the country. Each number is equal to a small volume of good and interesting reading matter. And yet it is furnished at the following low rates; 6 copies for a year, to one address, for $1; forty copies for $5. The reason it can be afforded so low, is, that the enterprise is sustained by contributions of the benevolent, and its object is not speculation but usefulness by a extensive distribution. We rejoice to learn that its circulation has reached 100,000 copies. The same publication is also issued in the German language, at the same rates, from 4 to 5000 copies per month. Address, American Messenger, N. York.

Declined.—A Lodge of I. O. O. F. lately invited Rev. T. F. Norris, Editor of the Boston Olive Branch to attend a ball. He respectfully declined, giving as his reason, a want of confidence in the beneficial effects resulting from such amusements.

Arrival.—The Steamer Caledonia reached Boston on the 4th inst. bringing dates form Liverpool to the 18th ult. But little change in breadstuffs is reported, and the cotton market, it is said, continues languid. The British Islands have been visited with a succession of tremendous gales, causing extensive losses of lives and property, along the coast. Father Mathew is to proceed to America in April.

Only look.—Of 120 convicts in the Michigan State Prison, 90 came there in consequence of intemperance! Every fourth one has been a rumseller!! Every eighth one has been a distiller, or connected with a distillery!!! Does this prove any thing? So says John S. Knap in the Star of Temperance.

Evangelical Preacher.—We have received a prospectus of a new monthy work with the above title, which is to be immediately commenced at Zanesville, edited by Rev. Norman N. Wood, Baptist clergyman of that place. Its style is to be similar to that of the National Preacher, published in New York, each number to contain 24 pages, neatly stitched in colored covers. We see that quite a number of able and eminent clergymen of various denominations, and of various parts of the Union, have been enlisted as contributors. Terms of the work, $1 in advance. A sixth copy gratis to such as become responsible for five subscribers. We have no doubt that Br. Wood will turn out a neat, interesting and useful publication. We wish him success. The following statement, is from the prospectus.

Each number will contain two Original Sermons by eminent living Ministers, furnished expressly for this work. It is designed to enlist contributors as equally as possible from all parts of our whole country, so that the work will be one not of mere local character and interest, but such as shall commend it to all portions of our country alike. The work will be entirely free from every thing of a polemic or sectarian character, but, as its name imports, it is designed to be such as shall be read with interest and profit by all denominations of Evangelical Christians.

The utility of such a work, it is thought, cannot be questioned. It is designed, in the first place, to exhibit a proper idea of the "Spirit" of the American Pulpit, and hence will be of interest to every man of letters. As it will contain a discussion of leading topics of Religious and Theological interest, it will be highly instructive in a suggestive sense, to Ministerial as well as private readers—serving also to illustrate incidentally, yet by no means uselessly, the fundamental principles of correct Sermonizing. It is designed, in short, to be a work suited to every family and fireside circle, and such as will be of permanent value as a Book for every private library. It is also hoped that it will be highly serviceable in developing and encouraging the talent of our younger ministry, especially in the West, in the department of correct and able writing.

☞ In our statement several weeks ago, respecting the reception of General Taylor at N. Orleans, &c., by a typographical error, it was said that he left that city on Saturday morning, whereas Sunday morning was intended. We meet with many notices of the circumstance referred to, of which the following is one.

From the New Orleans Presbyterian.

General Taylor in New Orleans.

General Taylor was the guest of our city the past week. He received all the attention which a grateful, patriotic and generous people could bestow. Our citizens delighted to do him honor, as one who had successfully led our armies to battle and victory. An immense multitude gathered to welcome him again to his home and friends and country, and amid the roar of cannon and the shouts of the people was he received as the city's guest. These demonstrations passed, I regretted much to see the honored veteran depart from our city and hospitalities on the Sabbath. It seemed to me much like receiving honor from men, and casting dishonor upon God. The noble example of a regard for the Sabbath by one of our great men now dead, is worthy of being followed by all who are in authority, or who stand prominently before the people. Gen. Jackson visited New Orleans, the theatre of his military glory, after an absence of several years. On his arrival he was received with demonstrations of joy by the people at large, and with especial regard by those who had participated with him in the dangers of the field and the glories of the victory. Extensive preparations were made for a grand military parade in honor of the battle and the man, and the corner stone of a monument was to have been laid on the Sabbath.—General Jackson was invited to be present. He politely declined the honor, and the matter was postponed. On that day he was seen an humble worshipper in the house of God. If all our great men would take such a stand against the desecration of the Sabbath, our city would soon cease to be a reproach and a by-word in the land.

A PROTESTANT.

Reasonable Request.—A petition has been presented to the Legislature of Alabama, that Charles Frederick Kollessinsti Von Poniatowski la Pogeat de Ferrassee de la Poquellairie nommene Pavillion de Tommywhackerhidumoffleschaup, may be permitted to change his name to Francis Duncan.

Biographical.

MRS. LUCINDA SEWELL,

Died yesterday about 12 o'clock (Sunday January 2d, 1848) at her residence in Allegheny City. Mrs. Sewell's maiden name was Johnson. She was born in Hartford County, Maryland, in 1795, and came to Pittsburgh about thirty years ago. She has left a mother and six children to mourn her irreparable loss.

The death of her noble son, Samuel D. Sewell, who fell like a gallant soldier at the sortie of Puebla, struck into her widowed bosom a deep and unquenchable anguish which a mother alone can realize, and which was in all probability the proximate cause of her dissolution.

Weakened by a long protracted anxiety for his welfare, and agitated by every rumor of his danger, the manner of the death of her darling son in bloody conflict with an overwhelming force of relentless lancers was more than her feeble frame and shattered nerves could well endure, and she sank under the affliction.

It is not too much to say of Mrs. Sewell, that she was the loveliest of her sex, in every sense of the expression. Guiltless, sincere, and gentle in all she said and did, she exhibited in her intercourse with society a soft courtesy of manner and sweetness of temper, which were the charm and admiration of all who enjoyed the pleasure of her acquaintance. To her family and her friends, she was affectionate to a fault, and her placid spirit ever beamed mildly and cheerfully from every feature of her lovely and intelligent countenance upon all around her.

This dear kind lady fell a victim to her own tender hearted and sensitive affections which made her so estimable as a wife, a mother a friend and a neighbor.

She was a member of the Methodist Protestant Church from its commencement, and enjoyed, especially during her last illness, in a lively and happy degree the consolations of religion, which was the solace of her life, and comfort and support of her hours of disolution & woe.

Sweet charming woman! may the green turf lie lightly on thy gentle bosom, and may thy meek, patient, unrepining, and charitable spirit diffuse its soft influence over those who are left to mourn the departure, whilst thy memory will be embalmed by the tears and sighs of thy family and thy friends.

News of the Week.

Calamitous Fire in Philadelphia.

We have had occasion within the last few weeks to advert repeatedly to the consequences of the spirit of incendiarism in the county, and now it becomes our duty to give a recital of its results in the heart of the city, as exhibited in the ruins of the fire on Wednesday morning, near the corner of Market and Tenth streets. The incendiary, fatally bent upon the mischievous and criminal intent to produce a terrible conflagration, could not have selected a spot more favorable to the gratification of his fiendish desire to witness the wholesale destruction of the property of his fellow man.

The fire to which we refer was observed at first between twelve and one o'clock, Wednesday morning, at the rear of the Farmer's Inn, kept by Mr. Abraham Dalbey, Market street above Tenth street, and originated on the second floor of a three story brick building, fronting on Hunter street, the whole of the under part of which was occupied by a stable, used by the proprietor of the Hotel as a lodgment for the horses of his guests from the country, who weekly visit the city with their produce. The upper part of these premises was rented by Messrs. Covert and Homer, who carried on an extensive turning business.

The heat became so destructive as to set on fire the weather boarding of the surrounding dwellings, and to cause the mortar between the bricks of the walls enclosing the burning mass to crumble away, leaving them in an insecure and dangerous situation. The premises next to Market street were occupied by Messrs. Lewis Dalbey, Daniel Yeager, Lewis Lacy and Benjamin Hess, carpenters, and Mr. Edward Green, cabinetmaker. All of these persons are losers to a considerable amount in the entire destruction of their tools and work. Nothing whatever was saved.—It was estimated that there was not less than $300 worth of good work on the premises of each of the above persons. Mr. Lewis Dalbey had in progress of construction the entire wood work of two dwellings, which he was to have ready to put up in a short time hence. Mr. Lewis Green lost all his clothing, except that in immediate use, besides $70 in money. The whole of the earthly wealth of these unfortunate persons was upon the premises and is nearly a total loss, as the insurance upon the property was very slight. The contents of Messrs. Covert and Homer's apartments were valuable from the extent and variety of the work and the costly character of the tools, but we are glad to learn that they will be indemnified by an insurance to the amount of $1200.

The length of the stabling establishment attached to the Hotel was about one hundred feet; at the time of the commencement of the fire there were about thirty horses in the stalls. The most vigorous efforts were made on the part of their owners, as well as the firemen, to rescue them from the impending danger, but as may well be imagined the removal of so great a number, particularly under such appalling circumstances, was attended with considerable delay. The passage through the proper entrance into Hunter street being cut off by the devouring elements, there was no alternative left but to lead the affrighted animals through the narrow entry of the Hotel into Market street. The scene which these movements presented was most exciting in itself, but was heightened by the neighing and prancing of the beasts as they struggled for liberty in the tight grasp of their rescuers, and the unearthly groans and screams of the ill-fated animals who were left behind from dire necessity, withering in the agonies attendant upon being literally roasted alive. Twenty of the horses were thus saved from the fire, and, as far as could be accurately ascertained, nine met with the dreadful death which we have mentioned.

Mr. Lewis Hansell, of Delaware county, lost two horses; Messrs. Stille & Kunckle, of Chester county, lost two; Mr. John Morris lost two, and Mr. Thomas Long lost one. To whom the others belonged was not ascertained. Mr. David McKnight, of Chester county, was active in getting out the horses, and while engaged in this laudable work, he was thrown against one of the stalls, and had his arm broken.

The walls of the buildings being undermined by the heat, fell to the ground, and a portion of the southerly one crushed the roof of the long, low, back building of Mr. Buzby's forwarding depot. But little farther damage was done to this establishment. The Hotel on Market street escaped injury, but for a time was in the greatest imaginable danger. The real estate which was destroyed, was worth several thousand dollars.—It belonged to Mr. Thomas Shewell, who, we learn, is fully insured. The aggregate loss of personal property is between $8,000 & $10,000. —Dol. News.

Steamboat Explosion.

Br. Elliott: I take up my pen to communicate painful intelligence. Early this morning we received intelligence that the steamer A. N. Johnson had exploded some eleven miles above. This intelligence was soon confirmed by floating fragments of the wreck and some passengers, who had escaped and made their way to the city.—The boat had just landed a passenger, and as she was pushing out her boilers burst, and were carried several hundred yards into a corn-field. The loss of life among the men was dreadful: somewhere between fifty and a hundred have undoubtedly been killed, and about thirty more are in a most dreadful situation. The female passengers all escaped without injury from the boat; but the explosion taking place in the night they lost their clothes, and remained almost in a state of nudity until clothing could be obtained from the neighboring families. As soon as I heard of the disaster, I resolved to visit the scene of distress. The steamer Daniel Boone had been chartered by the Mayor of the city to carry relief to the sufferers; but as she could not start for some time, I mounted my horse, and started in haste. About eleven o'clock I arrived at the tragic spot; and tragic, indeed, was the scene. Such a one I hope I may never witness again. I have read descriptions of steamboat disasters which appeared to be highly colored; but I am now satisfied that the most graphic pen cannot begin to give a true idea of the reality. The first thing that arrested my attention was the dead body of the first clerk. It was lying on a board in the corn-field. Next I saw a company of sufferers, partly naked, shivering around a fire which had been kindled for them. Next I saw a sma'l waste-house literally filled with dead, dying, and most terribly wounded. The physicians had just commenced dressing their wounds. Then arose from that house a wail of woe sufficient to sicken any human heart. One was calling most piteously for his mother, "Mother, O mother, mother!" But his mother was far away, and unconscious of the sufferings of her son. As I passed on down to the wreck, the dead and dying were strewed along, some on blankets and mattresses, and some on the naked earth. The boat, after the explosion, had taken fire and was burned down to the water's edge. They were still fishing for the bodies of the dead out of the wreck. I conversed with those of the sufferers who appeared to be in a situation to attend to spiritual things—found some of them cheered with the consolations of grace, and others destitute of its comforts. And while the physicians, with a company of our citizens, and a large number of the neighbors, were doing all they could for their bodies, I recommended them to apply to the great Physician to cure the malady of their souls.—The Council of the city, through the Mayor, made provision for the sufferers; and about dusk in the evening, the Boone landed them at the wharf, whence they were conducted to the apartments provided. Since they landed, two others have died, and several others are expected to die shortly. They are receiving all the attention which the Sons of Temperance, Odd Fellows, Masons, and members of the Churches generally can afford. Brother Smith and myself are doing what we can for their spiritual wants. The disaster has spread a general seriousness over this community; and it is the devout prayer of many a pious heart, that it may be sanctified to the lasting good of those who suffer by the accident, and all who read the melancholy story. We are now in the midst of a protracted meeting, and some of the sufferers have asked an interest in our prayers. We are hoping for a gracious time.—Last night twelve penitents were at the altar of prayer, several of whom professed to find peace in believing.—Some eight or ten have joined. I write in great haste.

Your brother in Christ,
W. F. STEWART.

Maysville, Ky., Dec. 29, 1847.

Further Particulars of the Explosion of the A. N. Johnson.

From a gentleman who visited the scene of the disaster of the A. N. Johnson, we learn further particulars of that heart-rending scene. The explosion blew away the boilers, leaving the furnaces and fire partly exposed, & much of the cabin fell in. Passengers when they opened their state room doors and rushed to where the cabin had been sunk amidst the flames, which had seized on the fallen timbers of the cabin. Mr. S. S. Sanders, of this city, who was, on account of the crowded state of the cabin, lying on the floor of the social hall, at the time of the explosion, fell with the cabin on the deck, and in the fall the timbers of the cabin fell on his legs, which prevented him from rising or doing any thing. The boat took fire, which was momentarily approaching him and while lying in this condition, he saw several perish in the flames, their hands extended for aid and shrieking with agony and despair; but there was none to help them. As the fire approached the horses, tied on the fore-castle, they became wild with affright and commenced kicking rearing and plunging. In this wild excitement, the timbers which held Mr. Sanders, were so removed as to liberate him, when he rose and approached the side of the boat next to the stream, & seeing the river full of ice, he caught up a wet blanket, threw it around himself and rushed through the flames to the opposite side and made his escape to the shore, which was overlooked by a high and perpendicular bank. After walking some distance along shore he reached a place where he gained the summit, and seeing a house he proceeded to it. When he got in he was going to throw himself on the bed, but was prevented by the woman of the house. Immediately Dr. Gillespie came in & attempted to throw himself on the bed, but was prevented also—he sunk on the floor almost lifeless, and expired soon after being taken to Maysville.—We will here state that the frightful appearance of Mr. Sanders, and Dr. Gillespie so alarmed the woman that she hardly knew what she was doing, and there were two children in the bed. As soon as her senses rallied she removed the children—made up a good fire and contributed to the extent of her power to the relief of the sufferers brought there. The scene of heart-rending agony on board the boat was indescribable. There were the dead and dying. The flames bursting from every part of the boat—the shrieks of men as they sank into the flames to rise no more—the wild fright of the horses, all conspired to render the scene beyond the power of language to depict; but the agony of those who perished instantly by the explosion, sunk into the flames and were thrown into the water to rise no more, were short and their fate we could almost say preferable to some who survived—their flesh burnt to a coal and pealing from the bones. In the midst of suffering, the most acute that the human frame can endure, men in the depth of their agony were begging to be shot—calling for axes and other instruments by which they might end their sufferings. On the shore and in the adjacent corn-field, were to be seen the most frightful spectacles. Heads, trunks, limbs and every part of the human frame, torn from the other parts and in fragments scattered around. This horrible accident is attributed to different causes, no person was in fault. The engineer when dying said there was plenty of water in the boilers; whilst engineers who were on the boat at the time say there was not. It is alleged that the iron of which the boilers were constructed, was bad—that they were mended in this city and pronounced so by the workmen; and doubts were entertained that they would not stand the trip. Our informant says that Mr. Brown, when he and his negro girl were landed, heard the third engineer ask the second engineer if the boilers were safe. "No," said the second engineer, "they are not, and you know it." That there was a cause for this explosion all will admit, and we think the cause should be investigated. —Cincinnati Commercial.

Steamboat Disaster.

Louisville, Dec. 30th—4 P. M.

The Belle of Illinois, bound for New Orleans, struck a snag on the 15th inst., in the Mississippi river, and sunk immediately. Boat and 80 bales of Cotton are a total loss.

The steamer Westwood, belonging to the Gulf Railway Company, burst her three boilers below N. Orleans, killing twelve of the crew, and seriously injuring Captain Swiler. No passengers on board.—Cin. Com.

Loss of two Flat-Boats.

Captain Martin, of the steamer E. W. Stephens, which boat arrived last evening, informs us that on Sunday last, at about 2 p. m., below Paducah, he came upon the wrecks of two flat-boats, with the crews clinging to them, and nearly frozen. The boats, one loaded with 1,200 barrels of flour, the other with flour and pork, were sunken in a gale. They belonged to Ripley in this State, and were in charge of Mr. Thompson, of that place. We understand there was no insurance on the freight.—Cincinnati Commercial.

Hog Slaughtering.—We ascertained last evening, from a reliable source, the number of hogs that have been slaughtered in this city up to the evening of the 25th inst.—viz: 267,415!—a number equal to that of any entire previous year. [Cincinnati Com. 31st ult.

A Valuable Mine.—A rich mine of plumbago, black lead, has been opened in Jaffrey, N. H., at the foot of the Monadnock mountain. Six tons were brought down from Fitzwilliam on the Cheshire railroad last week. It brings about $75 per ton. The mine was purchased for $50.

Gone to Hayti.—George B. Vashon, a young colored man, left Pittsburgh on Wednesday last for Hayti. He studied law with Hon. Walter Forward, and has already received the appointment of Secretary of the Republic, at a very comfortable salary.

The Plattsburgh (N. Y.) Republican says that the foundery and saw-mill buildings, located within the yard of the Clinton prison, were destroyed by fire on the night of the 21st ultimo. The loss, including buildings, patterns and flasks in the iron and brass foundery, is said to amount to between $6,000 and $8,000.

FATHER LAKIN.

Br. Elliott: Father Lakin has been a member of the Ohio Conference from its first organization, and was a member of the North-Western Conference when it included all this western country. He is yet preaching among us with great acceptability. I was with him last Saturday and Sabbath. He related to me his travels on Monday previous, as follows:

On the 13th of December, I arose in the morning at the widow Lakins, in Point Pleasant, where I make my home, and found the house surrounded with water. After prayers and breakfast, my horse was procured for me, (for the stable was also surrounded with water,) and I started to make my way to John Lakins on the hill. I undertook to cross Dry run. High enough up, I thought to avoid all danger from backed water; but the first step he took, he went entirely under water. I fell off, my horse went out, and left me floating on my back in the water. I then saw my saddle-bags some little distance from me still floating on the water. I pulled them to me with my cane; then caught my hat, and put it on my head; all this time in deep water, drifting along on my back, with my over-coat, over-shoes, and wrappers on. I had no thought of being drowned. I was perfectly calm. I then gave a few kicks with my feet, & I floated to the shore. The bank was steep. With the assistance of my cane, I got up, and started after my horse, which I soon obtained by the help of some friends. I then went back, got my saddle-bags, rode a mile, supposing my Bible & Testament were ruined; but when I emptied my saddle-bags, I found every thing completely wet but them; and strange as it may appear, there was not the stain of water on my Bible or Testament, though they lay exposed and loose in my saddle-bags. When I saw this, I was forcibly struck with the thought, the Lord can and will take of his own word. And whenever I shall read this book, I will remember this scene and God's promise to take care of them that put their trust in him.

W. ROWE.

Bethel, Clermont co., Ohio.

Accident at Louisville.—Patrick Higgins, who kept the Repeal Coffee House in Louisville, fell into a hole made by taking up one of the gas posts. He was found soon after the accident, but life was extinct. There were several inches water in the hole, and from his position he was believed to have been suffocated without being able in any way to relieve himself.

Terrible and Fatal Accident.—A dreadful casualty occurred on Tuesday last, at the rolling mill of Robbins & Verree, in Penn street, Kensington, by which James Rible, came to his death in a most sudden and shocking manner. The deceased was employed in that establishment, and while drawing some water in a cup from a conduit pipe which stands at the side of the range of rollers, he was drawn over, and into what is called the "coupling," and crushed to death in an instant, within a space at one point less than three inches wide, and the other not over twelve inches in width.

The machinery was moving at the rate of 70 revolutions per minute, and it is supposed that his body was dragged through and around the bot and but, forming the material parts of the coupling, seven or eight times or more, before the engine could be stopped. That he was killed in an instant there can be no doubt, for every bone in his body was broken, and from head to foot he presented the most horribly mutilated remains of a human being ever beheld by mortal eyes.

The deceased was about forty-five or fifty years of age, and has several children living in the county. He was not a housekeeper, but boarded in Maiden street, above Penn.—Dollar Newspaper.

Another Narrow Escape.—On Tuesday night of last week, a man and his wife, recently married, living at Port Richmond, very narrowly escaped the fatal effects of inhaling gas from burning anthracite. They had in their bed-chamber a stove, the pipe of which becoming disconnected during the night, the room was filled with gas from the burning coal, and the next morning they were found upon the floor, where it is supposed they had fallen while attempting to pass from the bed to the door. Within a short time past, several cases of this kind have taken place, and they ought to serve as cautions to persons, not to put themselves into the danger of dying from suffocation in this way.—Dol. News.

An Example of the Growth of the West.—Ten years ago, at the mouth of a little river in Wisconsin, on the border of Lake Michigan, a solitary cabin stood amid the wide-spread forests, the residence of an individual who united in his person the characters of farmer and hunter. For ten miles on every side no trace of another civilized human being could be found, and the Indian traced the deer through the woods, unmolested by the white man, and unobstructed by fences and grain-fields. At the present day, the occupant of that cabin, who was also the owner of at least a square mile of ground, is the Mayor of a city which has grown up in the short space of ten years on the limits of what was once his own property, a city containing over 13,000 inhabitants, with a commerce which promises to make it one of the most flourishing Lake-ports of the West, and the seat of wealth, intelligence and industry. We mean Milwaukee.

Seamen's Church.—The Protestant Episcopal Mission for Seamen, in the city of New Orleans, is about to erect a church, at the cost of $10,000. Attached to it is to be a library for the use of Seamen.

The Pasha of Egypt.—Alexandria, Oct. 22.—Mehemet Ali in his old age is becoming quite sociable and civilized. His highness seems to relish the society of Europeans, and to feel that their conversation is more entertaining than that of his courtiers and the bigoted Turks about him. On the 12th inst. he gave a grand dinner to the European consuls in Alexandria, to meet the Russian consul, who has only recently come to Egypt. The gentlemen were not invited alone, but those having families were asked to bring their wives and daughters with them. A most sumptuous repast of thirty covers was spread out in elegant European fashion in the Palace at Rasselsteen, and the table presented a very animated appearance, having the Viceroy at the head, seated between two European ladies, to whom he showed the greatest attention. There was a sprinkling of gray-bearded Turks amongst the Pasha's guests, and the whole feast went off with great satisfaction to all parties. After dinner, pipes were handed round to all the guests, without omitting the ladies, to whom those most richly mounted were offered. Some of the ladies only pretended to smoke—to refuse the pipe would have been an unpardonable offence—but other ladies seemed to enjoy inhaling the fumes of the Viceroy's excellent tobacco.—Paris Paper.

Bank Failures.—Since our last, the New Hope Delaware Bridge Company, Susquehanna County Bank, Atlas Bank, Clymer, N. Y., and James Bank, Jamesville N. Y., have failed. We also have reports that the following have suspended:—Bank of New Rochelle, White plains Bank, Merchants' Bank, Ellery. N. Y., but are inclined to doubt the correctness of the rumor, with regard to the latter Institutions.—Bicknell's Reporter.

Dreadful Death.—We learn from the Petersburg Intelligencer that a man by the name of Murphy met with a horrible death on the Petersburg Railroad on Tuesday, near the depot.—The unfortunate individual, in attempting to get from the car he was in into another, while the train was in motion, fell between the two, the wheels of which passed over his head, mangling it dreadfully, causing instant death.

More Enterprise.

It gives us pleasure to state that arrangements are nearly completed, by an enterprising company, for the establishment of a Rolling Mill, &c., in Zanesville. The necessary real estate has been purchased already. It is situated at the upper end of Hamline's meadow, in the northern part of the town, and on the west side of the road, being near and enclosing, we believe, a part of the brick kiln property. Of course no time will be lost by the projectors, who are gentlemen of experience, practically versed in all that concerns the business, in putting up their buildings and fixtures, and getting into operation. They expect to work up about from 10 to 15 tons of metal per day, and will, thus, in conjunction with our numerous founderies, afford a convenient and steady market for the products of our furnaces.

Take it all together, we feel very much encouraged about the future of our town. A spirit of enterprise is abroad which must develop, more and more, as a commencement is already made, the unrivalled resources which nature has lavished upon this part of the valley of the Muskingum. We find that Zanesville presents, day after day, an increasing business and growing strength, and that new branches of manufacture are constantly entered on. These things can but end in multiplying themselves, and in adding population and wealth, as there no less necessary results. With the worst days behind, a prosperous future is clearly to be seen.—Zanesville Courier.

From the Sandwich Islands and Oregon.—The New York Sun has received files of the Polynesian and Sandwich Island News to the 22d of May. The news from Oregon is to the 2d of May, per ship Toulon at Honolulu. The Legislature of Oregon had passed an act "to prevent desertion and for the recovery of deserting or absconding seamen." Mr. J. C. Reeves has been commissioned to pilot ships over the bar of the Columbia river. From the outside to Astoria constitutes one branch. The charge is five dollars per foot from the bar to Vancouver or Portland. The last winter in Oregon had been one of unusual severity. Much snow had fallen, and in consequence of the scarcity of food and bad weather, 6,000 cattle had perished—a severe loss to the settlers. Flour was eight dollars per bbl., by wholesale, when the ship Toulon left; and at twelve dollars by retail. The statements of California papers relative to starvation of emigrants and their eating human flesh in the mountains, were greatly exaggerated. But one instance of cannibalism occurred, which we have before noticed. The Legislature of the Sandwich Islands was in session. The annual reports of the ministers show a steady decrease in population. Numbers of the inhabitants were emigrating to California. One vessel had twenty-four passengers.

The large cotton factory, owned by Mr. Fitch, of Fitchville, Ct., was destroyed by fire on Thursday morning, together with all its new and very valuable machinery. It was also burnt two years ago. The loss is very heavy.

River of Grog.—On Sunday morning last, Mr. Tamall H. Post, deputy sheriff of Illinois district, having learned that a small boat load of whisky was on its way from Fort Smith to Fort Gibson, and intended for the Indian trade, went in pursuit of it, and, having found it, knocked in the heads of twelve barrels, and poured the contents into the Arkansas. The boat was a small ferry-boat, commanded by Captain Lively, a white man and manned by several Creek Indians, and is said, with her cargo, to have belonged to certain Cherokee whisky-dealers about Fort Gibson, who were probably making ready for a "merry Christmas."—Cherokee Advocate.

Misstatement Corrected,

To the Editor of the Watchman of the Valley:—The Catholic Telegraph of this city, some weeks ago, stated that one of the ladies who came out to the West as a teacher, under the patronage of the Society of which Gov. Slade is General Agent, had joined the Catholic church and was about to take the veil. This report has been extensively copied into other papers, and used to the disadvantage of the society.

I wish, therefore, to say through your paper, that the statement of the Telegraph is entirely false. None of the ladies who have come out West under the care of that society, have joined the Catholic Church, or manifested any inclination to do so.

C. E. STOWE.

Cincinnati, Dec. 28, 1847.

A Bit of Humor.—We do not relish truth says the Methodist Protestant, the less for being occasionally spiced with a little humor. The following extract from the report of a committee on Hogs, read before an Agricultural Society "down east," contains some excellent hits:—

Again: Some folks accuse pigs of being filthy in their habits, and negligent in their personal appearance. But whether food is best eaten off the ground or from China plates, is, it seems to me, merely a matter of taste and convenience, about which pigs and men may honestly differ. They ought, then, to be judged charitably. At any rate, pigs are not filthy enough to chew tobacco, nor to poison their breath by drinking whiskey. And as to their personal appearance, you don't catch a pig playing the dandy, nor the females among them picking their way up this muddy village, after a rain, in kid slippers.

Notwithstanding their heterodox notions, hogs have some excellent traits of character. If one chances to wallow a little deeper in some mire hole than his fellows, and so carries off and comes in possession of more of this earth than his brethren, he never assumes an extra importance on that account; neither are his brethren stupid enough to worship him for it. Their only question seems to be, is he still a hog? If he is, they treat him as such.

And when a hog has no merit of his own, he never puts on aristocratic airs, or claims any particular respect on account of his family connections; and yet some Hogs have descended from very ancient families. They undertand full well the common sense maxim, "every tub must stand upon its own bottom."

Punctuality.—"I give it," said the late Dr. Fisk, "as my deliberate and solemn conviction that the individual who is habitually tardy in meeting an appointment, will never be respected, or successful in life." There is some severity in the remark; but we endorse it as a truth sustained and corroborated by all the observation, which, in a short life, we have been able to make and which the experience of none can possibly invalidate.

Cowhiding.—Two rich men at New Orleans, named Genois and Avegno, have been mulcted in $2,000 damages for whipping a negro woman. The case was aggravated by the fact that the woman turned out to be free. Several other persons would be willing to be whipped for the same money.

New England Celebration.

The two hundred and twenty-seventh anniversary of the landing of the Pilgrims, was celebrated by the New England Society in this city (Cincinnati) on Wednesday, the 22nd. An overflowing house was assembled in the Protestant Methodist Church on Sixth street, to listen to an address from the Rev. Mr. Boynton. It was a much larger assembly than we have before seen on a like occasion, attracted, probably, both by the fame of the speaker and the charm of the Alleghenians, who sung for the occasion.—Watchman of the Valley.

The Law of Newspapers.

1. Subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, are considered wishing to continue their subscriptions.

2. If the subscribers order the discontinuance of their papers, the publishers may continue to send them till all cash charges are paid.

3. If subscribers neglect or refuse to take their papers from the offices to which they are directed, they are held responsible until they have settled their bill, and order their paper discontinued.

4. If subscribers remove to other places without informing the publishers, and the paper is sent to the former direction, they are held responsible.

5. The Courts have decided that refusing to take a paper or periodical from the office, or removing and leaving it uncalled for, is "prima facie" evidence of intentional fraud.

Liabilities of those who take Periodicals.

Thes law declare that any person, to whom a periodical is sent, is responsible for payment, if he receives the paper, or makes use of it, even if he has never subscribed for it, or has ordered it to be stopped. His duty in such a case is not to take the paper from the office or persons with whom the paper is left, but to notify the publisher that he does not wish for it.

If papers are sent to a Post Office, Store, or any other place of deposite,, and are not taken by the person to whom they are sent, the Postmaster, Storekeeper, &c., are responsible for the payment, until he returns the paper, or informs the publisher that they are lying dead in the office.

JEREMIAH ELDER, P. M.

☞If the sick wish a diseased stomach restored and impure blood cleansed without endangering the constitution, go to J. Deen, Grocer and Shoemaker, Putnam, and obtain a box of Dr. Le Roy's Sarsaparilla and Wild Cherry Pills which is the best family medicine now in use. So says Mr. O'Neil the Agent.

DR. LE ROY'S

Wild Cherry, and Sarsaparilla PILLS.

Dr. Le Roy has most happily succeeded in combining Wild Cherry and Sarsaparilla with other vegetable ingredients, so as to produce a medicine at once tonic, and purgative, the only perfect discovery of the kind ever made. Their great peculiar excellence, and that which distinguishes them from all other purnatives is, that their operation is followed by no re-action. Their unrivalled purifying and purgative properties, for which they are indebted to the essence of Sarsaparilla, and other ingredients, being controlled by their highly tonic virtues, derived from the extract of Wild Cherry, they do not strain the digestive organs into action, as is the mode of operation with other cathartics, but on the contrary strengthen them into action. Thus all other purgative medicines produce more or less subsequent costiveness, and sluggishness of the gastric juice, while Dr. Le Roy's Pills leave all the machinery of the system full of life and activity, and the bowels open and natural. "Hence," writes Dr. Cheeseman, "they are the only active purgative which I can recommend with confidence, and without alarm; for they remove nothing but what ought to be removed—neither rack, nor strain—occasion no apathy or debilitation—and leave the bowels free, open, and vigorous." But the great virtue of Dr. Le Roy's Pills—the virtue which has spread their fame over the two hemispheres with a rapidity almost miraculous—lies in their purification of the blood. Here they not only stand altogether unrivalled, but fill up the measure of desire. They at once arrest the formation of bad blood, by removing all impurities from the chyle, of which the blood is formed; and moreover keep it clean, by toning and strengthing the digestive organs, so as to be able to exclude from it all matter of an innutricious nature; and then they purify the blood already in circulation; and never cease operation until it is entirely free from every noxious particle, & full of health, life, and vigor. THE OHIO CULTIVATOR FOR 1848.

Published at Columbus, Ohio, on the 1st and 15th of each month, M. B. Bateham, Editor and Proprietor. Terms, $1 per year—four copies for $3—payment invariably in advance.

THE fourth volume of the Ohio Cultivator will commence Jan. 1st. 1848. This paper has now become so well known that it is scarcely necessary to speak of its character, or to allude to the commendations it has received from the Public Press and other sources. The editor is determined to spare no pains on his part to sustain the reputation of the work, and make each succeeding volume more useful than the preceding one. Our motto is "upward and onward;" and the object of the "Cultivator" is not only to collect and disseminate valuable facts and information relating to practical agriculture, but to inspire 'Farmers' with more just conceptions of the dignity of their profession; to induce them to cultivate the 'Mind' as well as the 'soil,' and thus eleavate themselves to that position which it is their duty and privilege to occupy as 'American Agriculturists,' in this age of Progress and Improvement.

With its very large list of contributors, numbering over "two hundred," most of them practical farmers in the West, the pages of the "Cultivator" will contain the results of "Experience," as well as the teachings of "Science;" and being written or selected with special reference to the climate, productions and farming of Ohio, this paper will be found more valuable than any other for the farmers of this and the adjoining States. It will contain the latest intelligence of the "Markets" of this country and England; notices of the weather and the crops; descriptions (with engravings,) of improved implements, machines, &c.; instructions in gardening and fruit culture; rearing and management of domestic animals; construction of farm buildings, fences, &c.; and a "Ladies' Department" devoted to household affairs, useful receipts, &c.

The friends of Improvement in Ohio and adjoining States are requested to obtain and forward subscribers for the Ohio Cultivator. Remember that the price is only "seventy-five cents" each, when four or more names are sent by one person. All subscriptions must commence with the first number of the volume; complete index is furnished at the end of the year. Specimen numbers and a prospectus will be forwarded to all who desire them.

☞"Now is the time to subscribe!" Letters with remittances may be sent by mail at the risk and expense of the publisher. Address,

POET'S CORNER.

THE ICE PLANT.

BY MISS M. H. ACTON.

'Twas an ice-plant, all so lonely
In a winter garden grew,
Never sunbeams on it resting,
E'en a passing brightness threw;
Coldly sombre 'neath the gushing
Of the golden noonday light,
Dark and gloomy when 'twas shaded
By the coming hues of night.

Crocus bright, and polyanthus,
From its presence shrank with dread,
As amid their dewy blossoms
High it reared its chilling head;
And the leaves that decked the border
Turned their graceful stems with fear
From the frosty breath and bearing
Of the icy stranger near.

But it chanc'd, one bitter morning,
When the drifting snow fell fast,
And each bud crouch'd low for shelter
From the keen and cutting blast,
That a pale and tender snow-drop,
Newly risen from its birth,
Bowed its head beneath the whirlwind
To the hard and frozen earth.

From the storm that swept the garden
Naught could shield the fragile flower;
When the ice-plant, downward bending,
Lent its succor in that hour:
Neath its leaves the snow-drop rested,
Safely sheltered on the ground
From the winds that raged with fury,
And the snow that fell around.

And the ice-plant, nestled o'er it
Through the weary winter's day,
Till the sky was bright and glowing,
And the storm had passed away.
There are some in Life's wide garden,
Who, with chilling look and tone,
'Mid the sweets that bloom around them
Seem to wander on 'alone.'

Pause, O, mortals, ere ye judge them,
For ye know not but may dwell
Kindly thought and noble feeling
Deep within their bosom's cell.
Like the ice-plant, 'neath their coldness,
There may lurk a vein of gold,
Which when sought by helpless sorrow,
Priceless treasure shall unfold.

Itinerancy,---The Restrictive Rule.

NO. I.

MR. EDITOR:—If the gospel ministry is of divine appointment, it is the duty of man to carry it into effect. If it is of vast importance, to mankind, it ought to receive the most efficient direction. That the same direction will at all times be the most efficient, may not be true. Different times, and different countries, may afford a field for a variety of methods. Therefore, the church, in this particular, may be left to be governed by circumstances. The great plan of ministerial labor prescribed by the Saviour was briefly told to his disciples thus: "go ye therefore and teach all nations." Endeavoring to follow out this direction of our Lord, the modern churches have adopted various methods by which to give success to the ministry in this great work. What method is the best adapted to this end, should be a matter of constant enquiry until discovered, and then be at once adopted. If an itinerant ministry, it should be adopted. If a settled pastorate, it should be adapted. If an itinerancy, untrammeled, and narrowed not down by restrictive rules, but left free to move on according to the openings of divine providence, it should be adopted. Whether the itinerancy, in its present form, in the Methodist P. Church, is the best direction which can be given to the ministry, is becoming a question. It should be a question with every Methodist Protestant. It is a question which is gaining ground. But a few years since one Brother in the west dared to entertain the opinion that the restrictive rule was not for the best, and ventured such a resolution in the General Conference, and for so doing met with the opposition of the whole church, with here and there a silent exception. Ten years have passed, and an Annual Conference has in effect abolished the rule, and half the church generally would be willing to have it abolished. This subject is also talked of in the Methodist Episcopal Church. In a conversation with an influential minister of that church upon this subject, I was told that their itinerancy must eventually be given up for a settled pastorate. It may not be out of place to give this subject a public examination. If our present itinerancy is the best that we can do, a contrary and growing spirit which now exists in the church, ought to be checked, or it is destined to work a change, —a change for which many are devoutly praying. If a better plan can be adopted it ought to be considered and done. While we live to act we should act by the best rule.

The itinerancy is a creature of circumstances; and the circumstances which introduced it have now ceased, and it is evident that the plan has had its day of greatest usefulness. Circumstances in this country now call for something different. Mr. Wesley, being deprived the privilege of preaching in the churches, and feeling constrained to preach the truths of religion as he discovered them, adopted the practice of preaching in the fields and wherever persons could be found to hear. When the work was enlarged, as a matter of greater convenience in directing the labors of his lay preachers, he laid off the country into large circuits, and usually changed the preachers in these every year; but for what reason it become a law that no minister should remain in the same field of labor for a longer period than one or two years, I have not yet learned. I doubt, very much, whether it was for any sufficient reason that this novel plan was adopted for giving direction to the gospel ministry. I say novel, because the like was never heard of in Christendom until introduced by Methodists. No one before ever dreamed that a minister ought to enter upon a field of labor under a law that would separate him from it at the expiration of a definite period, no matter how useful he might be, no matter how much his usefulness was increasing as he extended his acquaintance and influence, or how wide a field of usefulness Providence was opening before him, in no case must he stay longer than the expiration of the given period. I say such a thing was never heard of in Christendom, until introduced by Methodists. And why this arrangement was introduced in the Methodist Church in this country, I cannot state. It appears to me to be the most strange and unaccountable of all ecclesiastical rules. Such a blind, arbitrary rule, cannot look into the future, and determine that there will be no instances in which circumstances will require the continuance of the same minister in the same field of labor more than two or three years successively. I see no reason whatever, why the Conference, the minister, and the people whom he serves, would not be competent judges of the length of time that he should continue in the service of that people. And who can say that they would not be, with all of the circumstances of each case under their observation? And who will say that these competent judges would not do what they believed to be for the best? Under the restrictive rule, a minister may be removed when his usefulness is greater than at any former period, and when there is ten-fold more reason why he should stay a fourth year, than there was that he should be sent there the first year. What reason, then, can there be in his removal? What reason is there in such a rule? If there is any one yet in favor of its continuance, I hope he will speak out. Let us hear your REASONS. give us the ARGUMENTS. If we are in error, in opposing this rule, we wish to be convinced of the error. We are honest in our opposition, and are open to conviction. Discussion, too, properly conducted, brings truth to light. If, then, there are reasons sufficint to allay the opposition which is every where arising to this rule, now is the time to present them. We do not wish to act against reason. Another General Conference is rolling on, and the opposers of this rule are disposed to act; but let us not act without consideration.

Seven Years in the Itinerancy.

NO. I.

REV. A. H. BASSETT,—Should the following sketches of history of my Itinerancy, be thought worthy of a place in your valuable paper—they are at your disposal. In 1841, I was recommended bp the Quarterly Conference of D——— circuit, as a suitable person to be employed in the travelling connection, and at the same time requesting the President to appoint me to their circuit as the assistant preacher the balance of the Conference year. In a few days I received my commission signed by the President of the P———District.

All things being arranged, I went in debt for a horse, saddle and bridle commenced travelling the circuit filling the Sabbath appointments—teaching school during the week—once in four weeks I had to ride twenty five miles home after preaching in the afternoon or night in order to be at home on Monday morning to commence school. (This was during the winter season.)

In March I closed my school—commenced the work in good earnest—and during my stay upon the earth. The year soon passed—the 4th quarterly meeting come on,—the business of the year wound up. My kind superintendant, and I bid each other good-by. I received about sixty dollars for what labor I did this year.

Away we went to Conference which was to be held in the beautiful town of Mt. V———. After riding one day we came to the pleasant town of C———, where the brethren upon the circuit were holding their last quarterly meeting—here we fell in company with about forty ministers and delegates on their way to Conference, to meet about twice as many more. One brother remarked on the road, that he would be glad if a certain old lady was there with whom he once called. The story is this. About 1830, he was travelling thro' the state of Ohio, while in the neighborhood of Z———. Calling at a house for dinner, during his stay, he inquired of an old lady who resided there what religious denominations there were in her neighborhood, the good old lady named several, what church said he to the old lady, do you belong to? She replied, the M. E. Church—is there no M. P. Church, in this region, I do not understand you, I never heard of such a church. Said I they sometimes call them Reformers—the old lady studied a while, I never heard of such a people as Reformers; again said I, perhaps you would know them if I were to call them Radicals, she replied, O, yes, I understand you now, I did hear that there was a few such poor people away up CHEAT NECK in Virginia, but there is not one in all this state that I know off. Thought I to myself, what has the space of ten short years done? To-morrow there will be perhaps one hundred and fifty ministers and delegates meet in An. Conference in the centre of the state.

The Conference to me, was a very interesting occasion. Had a fine lodging place—this was the first Annual Conference which I had ever attended. Wednesday morning the Conference convened in a beautiful little Church, but the number of members was so great the Church would not hold them. The Pastor of the B——— Church being present, tendered the Conference the use of their house,—the members thankfully accepted—adjourned to meet in the afternoon at the B——— Church.

Conference progressed with business very pleasantly. My name was called for reception into the Conference. A number of interrogatives now put to me by different members of Conference, some of which I thought very proper,—others I thought quite out of place. Brother Mc.———inquired of me—do you believe slavery to be a moral evil?—yes,—will you do all you can to oppose it? yes. Up, gets Bro. S———, and do you believe mulishness to be an evil?—yes: will you do all you can to oppose it? yes. However all appeared to pass off in good humor.—The vote was taken, and the brethren thought me worthy of a place among them. The next inquiry which arose in my mind, was, what will the Conference do with me? where am I going to travel, will they give me an appointment near home, or will they send me two or three hundred miles from home?

The last evening of the Couference came on —the appointments, were read—re-committed,—read again,—confirmed by the Conference. I was appointed to the M——— circuit or rather mission. I made some inquiry of the brethren relative to my field of labor, but could obtain but little information, Conference adjourned about midnight.

I started home early next morning,—on Friday evening reached home after an absence of twelve days—found all well—thank the Lord.

Sabbath morning I looked out, here came Father A———, where is your horse, father? "I have no horse," said he. How did you get to Conference? "I walked there." Where did you start from? I live in S———, and shall have walked to and from Conferenc, when I reach home about 250 miles, my heart ached thus to see an old minister of the Gospel trudging his way from an Annual Conference with his saddlebags upon his back. However he was just from the old country, and I suppose he did not think it hard.

The M——— circuit will come next.

THE DRUNKARD.

I saw him, 'twas at dawn of day,
Before an ale-house door:
His eyes were sunk, his lips were parch'd,
I viewed him o'er and o'er.
His infant boy clung to his side,
And lisping to him, said,
"Come, father, mother's sick at home,
And sister cries for bread."

He trembling rose and stagger'd in,
As oft he'd done before,
And to the landlord faultering said,
"Come, give us one glass more."
The host complies—his purple lips
Now press the venom'd bowl;
He drinks, whilst wife and children starve,
To ruin sends his soul.

A year elaps'd—I pass'd that way—
A crowd stood at the door—
I ask'd the cause, when one replied,
"Ned Hawkins is no more."
I saw his fun'ral move along,
No wife nor child was there—
They, too, had join'd their mother earth,
And left this world of care.

Reflect ye votaries of the bowl—
Know ye 'tis Heaven's decree,
"Ye ne'er shall taste eternal life,
Lest from the bowl you flee."
Reflect! ere wife and children mourn;
Fly from the ale-house, fly!
Or you'll, like Ned, neglected live,
Like him, neglected die.

DEATH AND THE GRAVE.

'I am hungry,' said the Grave—'give me some food.'

'I will send forth a minister of destruction,' replied Death, 'and you shall be satisfied.'

'And what minister will you send forth?'

'I will send forth Intemperance, and he shall carry Alcohol for a weapon.'

'It is well,' said the Grave; 'but how know you the people will fall into the snare?'

'I will demand the assistance of the tempter,' replied Death, 'and he shall disguise the snare under various seducing forms, such as food, and medicine, and pleasure, and hospitality, and benevolence. The people will then drink and die.'

'I am content,' said the Grave; 'so, I perceive that your scheme is skillful, and will succeed.'

The bells began to toll, and the mourners to walk through the streets, and the sexton to ply his mattock and spade; for the minister of destruction had gone forth; and once more Death and the Grave met together to exult over the success of their schemes.

'And who is this they are bringing?' asked the Grave.

'This is an old man, who fancied that wine was necessary to recruit his wasted strength,—he began with but a little at first, but gradually increased the quantity, and finally drank to excess and died.'

'And who is this?'

'This is a young man who was fond of company, and thought liquor was necessary to convivial meetings. He contracted the habit of drinking, and is now a corpse.'

'And who are they bringing, followed by a train of weeping children?'

'This is a broken-hearted woman, whose husband became a confirmed drunkard, and who left her children to pine in want, whilst he spent his time and money in the tavern. And now they are bringing the corpse of the husband himself, who has lost his life in a drunken brawl.'

'Hush,' said the Grave; 'I hear a loud wail, and the sobs of grief that will not be silenced.—What is the meaning of this?'

'Ah!' said Death, 'they are bringing the dead body of a little infant, whose drunken father, aiming the blow at his wife, destroyed it at the breast; and the mother, like Rachel, 'refuseth to be comforted, because her child is not.''

'And who are these?'

'These are the bodies of a female profligate and her still-born offspring. She was once fair and innocent; but liquor inflamed her seducer, and deprived her of caution. She was soon, however, deserted, and after pursuing a short career of crime, died.'

'And these?'

'These are the bodies of a murderer and his victim; they were once bosom friends; but wine snapped the bonds of friendship: they quarrelled over their cups, and one having died by the hands of his companion, the other suffered a felon's death. But here is the crowning incident of our scheme. Behold the corpse of a suicide!—This man drank until his property was dissipated and his mind deranged, and so in his distraction, he laid violent hands upon his own life.'

Long did these dark associates thus converse, and loud was the cry that ascended to Heaven from injured parents and children, and brethren and friends, until at last Mercy was sent down to see what could be done to check the mischief. And Mercy instantly sent her healing minister, and she called it Total Abstinence; 'for,' said she, 'they cannot touch the evil without contamination. Like the poison of Upas tree, its very smell is deadly, and no one is safe that comes within the reach of its influence.'

The church bells were but seldom heard, and but few mournings were seen in the streets.—The wailings of the widow and the orphan were succeeded by hymns of praise and thanksgivings; for Death and the Grave were despoiled of all their prey.

Scientific.

THE SOLAR SYSTEM.

Poised in the centre hangs the glorious SUN,
Round which the rapid MERCURY doth run;
Next, in due order, VENUS wheels her flight,
And then the EARTH, and MOON, her satellite;
Next fiery MARS pursues his round career;
Beyond, the circling ASTEROIDS appear;
The belted JUPITER remoter flies,
With his four moons attendant thro' the skies;
The belt-ringed SATURN roams more distant still,
With seven swift moons he doth his circuit fill;
While with six satellites, that round him roll,
URANUS slowly circumvolves the whole.
But far beyond, unscanned by moral eye,
In widening spheres, bright suns and systems lie,
Circling in measureless infinity!
Pause o'er the mighty scenes, O man! and raise
Your feeble voice to the CREATOR'S praise!

[YOUNG PEOPLE'S MIRROR.

The Unmusical Ear.

A curious case, which recently occurred in Germany, has excited a considerable degree of interest among men of science who direct attention to the theory of sounds. It may also tend to afford some explanation of that peculiar structure of the organ of hearing on which depends the capability of enjoying music. The facts of the case are as follows:—

Baron Groll, a wealthy landed proprietor of Nuremberg, was remarkable for the dislike of music. His antipathy to that delightful art was such as to render him a sort of phenomenon in harmonious Germany. This peculiarity in the taste of the Baron was the more singular, inasmuch as his lady was a most accomplished musician. The Baroness and her friends sought by every possible argument to overcome the Baron's inconceivable antipathy; but their efforts were useless, he continued deaf alike to their reasoning and to the charms of harmony.

The Baron and Baroness Groll lived in splendid affluence, and their house in Nuremberg was the frequent resort of a vast circle of elegant company. At the numerous parties which they were accustomed to give, the Baron did the honors with delightful amenity. His conversation was animated and witty, and he was always the gayest of the gay until the first note of music was heard. A feeling of uneasiness then took possession of him, a convulsive movement was observable on his countenance, and he was often obliged to withdraw from the presence of the company to conceal feelings which he could not control.

This strange peculiarity proved a source of considerable annoyane to Baron Groll, and not a little puzzled the Doctors of Nuremberg. One of the medical professors of that city, Doctor Schrœder, at length succeeded in ascertaining its cause. In the first place, he had observed that one of the Baron's ears was somewhat longer than the other. This circumstance suggested to the Docter the possibility of both ears not being at the same diapason, and that thus might each be differently affected by the vibrations of sonorous bodies. There might consequently be transmitted to the brain merely a confused, obscure sensation, similar to that which would be caused by two instruments playing on two different keys. Every melody, every harmony, produced on the Baron the same impression. All appeared a jumble of discord. Was it to be wondered at that he disliked music?

A very simple experiment served to confirm the accuracy of Dr. Schraeder's obsevations and opinion. He requested the Baron to stop one of his ears, then going to the piana, he played in C major the graceful allegro from the overture to Freischutz. "How do you like that?" said he; "do you find it discordant?"—"Oh no," replied the Baron, "it is delightful; pray continue." "Now stop your other ear," said the Doctor, again playing the allegro from the Freischutz, and still in the C major. "What do you think of that?"—"It is exquisite," replied the Baron.—"Was it the same piece as that which I first played?"—"It appeared to me to be the same piece, only played on a different key. You are playing it higher now." And the Baron began to hum the subject in D major.

Thus was solved the mystery of Baron Groll's profound dislike of music. How could he possibly derive pleasure from any performance, vocal or instrumental, which had, to him, the effect of being sung or played in two different keys simultaneously.

Fortunately Doctor Schrœder's experiment, whilst it developed the case of the phenomenon, at the same time pointed out the remedy for the evil. Baron Groll is now an enthusiastic lover of music. In order to enjoy it, he has only to take the precaution of putting a little cotton into one of his ears.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Character of the Gentleman.

Dr. Lieber, of the College of South Carolina, in a recent address before the students of that Institution made the 'Character of the Gentleman' the subject of an excellent address. If space permitted the address should exhibit its good points by abundant extracts. In the absence, however, of larger quotations, we give the following:

"I have stated already that the forbearing use of power is a sure attribute of the true gentleman; indeed, we may say that power, physical, moral, purely social, or political, is one of the touchstones of genuine gentlemanship. The power which the husband has over the wife, in which we must include the impunity with which he may be unkind to her; the father over his children; the teacher over his pupils; the old over the young, and the young over the aged; the strong over the weak; the officer over his men; the master of a vessel over his hands; the magistrate over the citizens; the employer over the employed; the rich over the poor; the educated over the unlettered; the experienced over the confiding; the keeper of a secret over him whom it touches; the gifted over the ordinary man; even the clever over the silly—the forbearing and inoffensive use of all this power or authority, or a total abstinence from it, where the case admits, will show the gentleman in a plain, unostentatious manner. Every traveller knows whether a gentlemanly or rude officer is seeking his trunks. But the use of power does not only form a touchstone; even the manner in which an individual enjoys certain advantages over others is a test. No gentleman can boast of the delights of superior health in presence of a languid patient, or speak of great good luck when in hearing of a man bent by habitual misfortune. Let a man who happily enjoys the blessings of a pure and honest life, speak of it to a fallen criminal fellow-being, and you will soon see whether he be, in addition to his honesty, a gentleman or not. The gentleman does not needlessly and unceasingly remind an offender of a wrong he may have committed against him. He cannot only forgive; he can forget, and he strives for that nobleness of soul, and manliness of character which impart sufficient strength to let the past be past. He will never use the power which the knowledge of an offence, a false step, or an unfortunate exposure of weakness give him, merely to enjoy the power of humiliating his neighbor. A true man of honor feels humbled himself, when he cannot help humbling others."

Education in the West.

In all the new States, a square mile in the central part of each township is set apart for the support of common schools, making one thirty-sixth part of the public lands. Congress has also, from time to time, made special grants of large and valuable tracts for State Academies, Colleges, &c. The grants to several of the States are about as follows;—

Colleges and Academies.		Common Schools.
Ohio,	70,000 acres.	700,000	acres.
Indiana,	46,000 "	350,000	"
Illinois,	46,000 "	900,000	"
Michigan,	46,000 "	1,100,000	"
Iowa,	46,000 "	1,400,000	"
Missouri,	46,000 "	1,100,000	"

Besides these grants, three per cent, of all proceeds of sales of public lands is paid over ver to the several States in which they lie, to be used for the encouragement of learning, especially in the establishment of institutions of a higher class than common schools. Added to all these is the U. S. deposit fund, which was distributed among the States, and in several instances appropriated by them to the cause of education.

Just One Thought Respecting the War.

We go against all offensive war, no matter whether originating and prosecuted by the influence and votes of democrats or whigs. Our voice is for peace, and we think it both a shame and a crime for christian nations, whether republics or monarchies, to wage war against each other. The shame and crime are enormously aggravated by the light enjoyed in the present century, and the progress which has been made in knowledge, refinement and benevolent operation. If our soil be clearly invaded by a threatning enemy and our liberties are imperilled, we may and should defend ourselves, and drive back the menacing foe to an extent adequate to render ourselves secure. What is beyond this we consider not only sinful and unjustifiable, but absolutely and seriously dangerous to ourselves and our own institutions. Now, in entertaining and trying to vindicate, and even disseminate this view, we flatter ourselves that we are not less a patriot and a true and judicious friend of freedom and liberal institutions than the most open-mouthed and noisy advocate of armies, navies, artillery, butchery, blood, devastation and human destruction. We believe we love our country as ardently and can appreciate our liberties as highly as most of our readers, while at the same time we disagree most pointedly and positively with both whigs and democrats who advocate the invasion of foreign territory whether it be for conquest, or to exhibit our martial prowess and show the world how thoroughly we can flog a weak and distracted people, and how easily we can capture their towns and cities, and annihilate their armies, and thus elevate, as we vainly suppose, our national character.

Are we wrong in this view?—if we are, we are at least honest, and can truly say that we have not made up our minds over-hastily nor on slight grounds. And while we bear patiently with those who differ with us, we think they are bound to exercise like forbearance towards us.

But, says one, religious papers are not the proper vehicle through which to express such opinions. If this be so then we are at a loss to conceive, what is a legitimate subject for religious papers. If we may not speak of war in regard to its moral and religious,—or rather immoral and irreligious bearings, then indeed are we shut up within limits vastly more contracted than we were ever aware of. Politically, we say nothing about it; we abhor from the deepest depths of our soul the twistings and windings, the intrigue and chicanery of politicians of both parties. If one party had a more direct agency than the other in bringing on the war; the other is no less deeply involved in "voting for men and money," instead of employing all their constitutional power to prevent or arrest it. It is not for us to say which party is the most to blame; let the enlightened and humane judge for themselves.—But we, as stated, go against all aggressive war, in its progress no less than at its threshhold;—we cannot think or act otherwise; God help us; amen!

We must be permitted to add, while on this subject, that the doctrine involved in the popular outcry, "Our country, right or wrong," is, in our judgment, one of the most outrageous and dangerous ever broached. It is a clear infraction of the teachings of God's Holy Bible, and of the plainest lessons of common justice. Nothing but the captivating lure which it so artfully throws out, or the putative patriotism which is made to gleam forth from beneath its adroit and hidden sophistry, could ever have reconciled an intelligent and honest mind to its adoption. If this monstrous motto were founded in truth, then our patriot fathers had never wrested this country from the iron yoke of British tyranny, we should still be the abject vassals of a foreign potentate;—then Luther had never come forth to preach and pray and labor against the fearful abuses of church and state in the days of the glorious reformation;—then the people and the state were right and deserved to be sustained when they condemned the Son of God to the ignominious death of the cross;—then there is an end of all progress in political economy, the nations of Europe are bound most loyally to support all the excesses and despotic usurpations of their respective governments, no matter whether or not they are thereby ground to powder and dust.—But enough.

If adherence to this sophism is to be regarded as a test of patriotism, we can lay no claim to such patriotism. Our motto is, "let God be true and every man a liar;" and hence we can only justify our government and our country, so far as they go with God and the teachings of his word;—not an inch farther. But in pursuing this course we feel assured, that we are a beetter and truer friend to the country, than he who is prepared to vindicate and support the decisions of the masses when wrong, no less than when they are right. This, at least for the present, is one of the articles of our political creed, and until convinced that we are in error we must adhere to it, even if our adherence should subject us to the loss of every subscriber we have. No consideration under heaven if we know ourselves, even if it were sure to crowd our list with subscribers and fill our coffers with gold, could tempt us to violate the manifest dictations of concience. —Lutheran Observer.

"A farmer cut down a tree which stood so near the boundary line of his farm, that it was doubtful whether it belonged to him or to his neigbor. The neighbor, however, claimed the tree, and prosecuted the man who cut it for damages. The case continuend from court to court. Time was wasted, temper soured, and temper lost—but the case finally gained by the prosecutor. The last my friend knew of the transaction was, the man who "gained the case" came to the lawyer's office to execute a deed of his whole farm, which he had been compelled to sell to pay the cost! Then houseless, and homeless, he could thrust his hand into his pocket and triumphantly exclaim—"I've beat him!"

The Chinese call going to law—"losing a cow to win a cat." Excellent.

BY "PHILOM."

LINES DESIGNED AS AN INTRODUCTION TO AN ALBUM.

Beauty sat tracing with sportive finger,
Names on the ocean sands one day;
Watching how long each wave would linger,
Ere it had washed the print away.

First, hope she sketched—the wave just kiss'd it
Then sank to ocean's depths again,
As half regretful to have miss'd it—
And with the maid let hope remain.

Next, friendship's name, so fond yet fleeting,
The maiden on the sand enshrined;
The wave flowed on—but soon retreating—
No trace of friendship left behind.

Love's then she wrote—'twas deeply graven
On that frail page, by Beauty's hand;
The wave returned—ah! silly maiden,
Love's vows are too oft writ in sand!

When one by one each name had perished,
Beauty grew wearied of her play;
Finding that all most prized and cherished,
Some passing wave will wash away!

HISTORICAL REMINISCENCES OF THE WAR OF 1812.

NO. V.

Mr. Editor: After the return of Gen. Tupper's Brigade to their camp on the Scioto, near Fort McArthur, they were engaged much, in keeping open and repairing the roads, for forwarding provisions to the depot at that place. The roads had become so bad, that a team loading with corn at McPhersons' Blockhouse, a distance of 22 miles, would not have feed, to last him through; but after the cold became sufficient to make the roads solid, they brought large quantities of corn, and flour. Several times during the winter, thaws were succeeded by rain, and the rain by snow, covering the ground from 12 to 20 inches deep; it would then be impassable for wagons, or sleds, until broken; which we did in this way, as far as the Rapids, (after Winchester arrived there.) A few men were sent first, who kept the road, in file; then a small drove of hogs would endeavor to keep the track of the men; after these, followed half a dozen jumper sleds with two horses, and two barrels of flour each; this would make the roads so, that it froze solid enough to bear the wagons or sleds with heavy loads. As far as we could, the men were also engaged, when off duty, in making sleds, for future use; but our axes were so deficient, we could spare but few, from the ordinary business of cutting fuel, for this purpose; nor were we ever supplied with a sufficient quantity of axes.

Early in January, Winchester moved down to the Rapids to protect the stores to be forwarded, on our route, as that route was the principal one for the droves of hogs, and fat cattle, collected in the interior of the State, for the supply of all the army; and a large amount was driven out, and slaughtered there. General Harrison had moved his head-quarters to Upper Sandusky, and had collected quite a large number of troops there, ready to move on, when a sufficient supply of provisions should be in depot. General Perkin's Brigade of Ohio Militia;—the Virginia Brigade, under General Leftwich;—and the Petersburgh volunteers;—with the Pennsylvania Regiment, under Colonel Feree, were of the troops gathered there. Artillery was being prepared under United States officers, (Captain Gratiot and Captain Wood,) and every arrangement necessary for the expedition, when about the 20th of January, General Harrison was surprised to hear that General Winchester had pushed forward a part of his forces to the River Raisin. Aware of the extreme peril of that part of the army, he immediately ordered General Perkin's Brigade to march for the Rapids, to prevent if possible, the consequences of this false step of Winchester. He himself proceeded there; and when they arrived, one Battalion, under the command of Major Cotgrove, of the Western Reserve Militia, were pushed ahead on the ice without stopping to draw provisions; while another Regiment delayed only to draw their rations.—Cotgrove had a field piece with him, and had arrived within about four miles of Frenchtown, on River Raisin, when he met those who had escaped from Winchester's command. One and a half hours, would have brought Cotgrove to the assistance of the Kentucky troops. These facts show how much Harrison appreciated the danger of Winchester; and the event proved he did not over-rate it. I have no doubt that Winchester felt stimulated to this enterprise by the consciousness of the injustice he had done to General Tupper, and the recollection that General Tupper had made a serious effort to defeat these Indians, while he had refused to do what he might then safely have attempted, from malice to one who had never injured him. For when any of our Spies were sent to his camp as expresses, he invariably had some observation to make about our troops, in disparagement of their character; and when he left the Rapids, Captain Wood, of our Spies, was there with his men, and applied to be employed, but was refused. General Harrison retreated with what troops he had brought from Upper Sandusky, and the remnant of Winchester's command, about 16 miles, to Portage river, where Hull had an encampment on his route out. He sent Captain Wood with his company, to the mouth of the river, to see whether the British and Indians were advancing towards him; with orders to burn the stores left at Winchester's camp, on his return. Captain Wood saw no enemy; but the next night lodged in Winchester's deserted camp, and in the morning, set fire to, and destroyed the buildings, with all their contents. No doubt General Harrison was hasty in this measure, as Captain Wood assured me there was no apparent immediate necessity for so extreme a measure,—but General Harrison's troops were few in number, and a long way from his resources. General Harrison remained at Portage river until joined by the Va. and Pa. troops, with the artillery, when he again advanced to the foot of the Rapids, and fortified his camp, on the scite of Fort Meigs. He had sent an express to General Tupper, to move to the Rapids as soon as possible. Our baggage waggons were back, bringing up stores, and a rain that flooded much of the country, also forbid our immediate advance. A large number of pack-horse men, and men engaged in driving cattle and hogs, to the Rapids were turned back, and filled our camp to overflowing. Also a Potowatomie, who had been taken at the battle at Frenchtown by Colonel Lewis. He was kept under guard. Captain Lewis the Shawnee chief, with four of his warriors, with another chief, Black-hoof,* an old and much respected chief from Wakapokenetta, or that vicinity, had come to offer their services to General Tupper, and were quartered in General Tupper's shanty. They expressed a desire to talk with the Potowatomie; and he was brought to our quarters. A number of the officers were crowded into the shanty, and a considerable part of the evening was spent in the examination.—Most of the officers were sitting on the puncheon floor. After the prisoner was removed, Blackhoof took a seat on the bench he had occupied, to smoke his pipe; Major Gregory and myself sat on the floor immediately behind him when some one placing the muzzle of a pistol between two of the logs, forming the chimney, shot Black-hoof in the face. The ball entered on the left side, just under the cheek bone; broke the jaw near the back side; knocking out two teeth; and lodged in the skin back of the neck. He fell forward as if dead; I sprang over him for the door, but it was snowing fast, and I could not see a yard off; when I procured a light, and found the track of the assassin, I followed it until in front of the line of camps, it was obliterated, by the great number, who at once sprang out, at the report of the pistol. A court martial was the next day organized, who called every man, not in the quarters of the General at the time, and in camp, before them; and made them prove where they were at the time of the report of the pistol. A nephew of Captain Lewis, who understood English, attended; but the court could not ascertain the person. The character of the dastardly act is not changed, whether we suppose he intended to kill the prisoner, or the friendly chief. None but a coward would have done either; and such you will always find, emulous of the reputation of having killed an Indian. Such no doubt was the motive. He missed his object; for the chief recovered.

As soon as the waters subsided, and as fast as baggage waggons could be had, our troops marched for the Rapids, and on arriving at the Black Swamp, we found the artillery from Upper Sandusky had passed the day before. It had frozen very hard while the waters were high, and the ice in the swamp was about 9 inches thick, but had been broken in one place, the day before, by the artillery: and the ammunition waggon of the Pittsburgh Company was fast in the hole. The next day was warm, and our people cut a new road, and passed about 60 sleds with flour safely over, but the first wagon broke through, and every other continued to add to the breach. It took twelve horses to a waggon, and as many men as could lift at it, to drag them through that day, less than a quarter of a mile. That night we bivouacked in the camp Harrison had left at Portage river; and the next day about the first of February, we joined his camp.

We found with General Harrison, General Perkin's Brigade, of Ohio; General Leftwich's Brigade, of Virginia; the Regiment of Pennsylvania Militia, under Colonel Ferree; the Petersburg Volunteers; a remnant of Kentucky troops, left of Winchester's command; and a Company of United States Troops under Captain Langham; raised at Chillicothe and Zanesville, these had been detained at the Rapids for the want of clothing, having joined General Winchester in August, with summer clothes, and had not at the time we joined General Harrison, yet received any winter clothes. They had hardly enough in the company, (exclusive of the officers' clothes,) sufficient to cover the men who provided wood for their fires. The administration, seem to have had but little idea of what was wanted to supply an army, so that the efficiency of the troops was, in many instances, entirely destroyed, for the want of the necessary supplies. Our own Brigade went out in August, far from their homes, and received neither pay nor clothes until January; so that some of our men, otherwise able to do duty, were prevented, for the want of clothing, shoes, stockings, &c. Of 100 axes sent us stamped U. S. not one would stand to chop down one tree, until they were new-laid with steel.

MILWAUKIE.

The rapidity of the growth of this city is one of the wonders of the West. A correspondent of ours, who at the time of the Chicago Convention christened it Cincinnati, junior, was not far out of the way. Every body who passed up the chain of the North-western Lakes ten years ago, and persons also who were then in the habit of looking into the Cleveland, Detroit and Chicago newspapers, remember often seeing or reading of the pleasant little village of Milwaukie, on the West bank of Lake Michigan. We recollect very well that about that period the tide of emigration was beginning to set pretty strongly towards Southern Wisconsin, and predictions were quite rife that in the course of fifteen or twenty years Milwaukie would be a handsome little city of some 8,000 or 10,000 inhabitants. But all such predictions have been already nearly doubly fulfilled. The census of the town has recently been taken, and the population of Milwaukie in December, 1847, is shown to be 14,061. In 1846 (June) it was 9,508. Increase in eighteen months, 4,553. In the same period of time the county of Milwaukie has gained 6,822—increasing from 15,925 in June, 1846, to 22,747 in Dec. 1847.

Milwaukie is the natural outlet of one of the finest regions for cereal grains in the U. States. And this region is fast coming into extensive cultivation. No better proof of this need be asked, than is afforded by a table of imports and exports at Milwaukie, published in a late number of the Sentinel and Gazette. The shipments of Flour and Wheat, for three years, compare as follows:

	Wheat.	Flour.
1845.	95,500 bu.	7,500 brls.
1846.	213,448 bu.	15,756 brls.
1847.	598,011 bu.	34,840 brls.

A few additional figures will show the extent and increase of shipments of a few other leading articles for two years.

	1846.	1847.
Hides,—number	5,583	12,961
Ashes, lbs.	16,250	127,435
Lead & Shot, lbs	1,770,650	1,160,649
Wool, lbs.	10,562	43,215

Among the imports this year, to the close of navigation, are 28,811 bbls. Salt, 61,888 lbs., emigrant's luggage, 29,162 lbs., sundries; and 15,231,540 lbs., classed as 'merchandize' also, 8,616,100 feet shingles, and 18,111,352 feet of other lumber.

The Sentinel states that during the past season two large Flouring mills have been erected in Milwaukie, one propelled by steam and one by water power, and expresses the belief that two more will be erected and put in motion next year. —Cin. Gazette.

EPITAPH ON THE TOMB OF TWO INFANTS.

Bold infidelity turn pale and die!
Beneath this stone two infant ashes lie;
Say—are they lost or saved?
If death's by sin—they sinned because they're here;
If heaven's by works, in heaven they can't appear;
Ah! Reason, how depraved!
Revere the sacred page, the knot's untied;
They died, for Adam sinned; they live, for Jesus died!

VALUABLE THOUGHT.

We give no evidence that our religious profession is a matter of choice and the effect of an internal principle, until we arrive at that point beyond which the world will not unite with us. If from thence we proceed with a mild but intrepid singularity, assigning as a reason for our conduct that we are influenced by the fear of God, we afford a satisfactory proof that our piety is real—that we are Christians indeed.—Doctor Styles.

RIGHTEOUS OVERMUCH.

This is properly to be righteous overmuch, when we pretend to correct God's law, and add supplements of our own to His rule.

SATAN.

Against whom doth Satan multiply his malicious assaults?—Against those in whom God hath multiplied his grace. Satan is too crafty a pirate to attack an empty vessel: he seeks to rob those vessels only which are deeply laden.

WHITEFIELD AND WESLEY.

Whitefield was soul, and Wesley was system. Whitefield was a summer-cloud which burst at morning or noon in fragrant exhiliration over an ample tract, and took the rest of the day to gather again; Wesley was the polished conduit in the midst of the garden, through which the living water glided in pearly brightness and perennial music; the same vivid stream from day to day. After a preaching paroxysm Whitefield lay panting on his couch, spent, breathless, and deathlike; after his morning sermon in the Foundry, Wesley would mount his pony, and trot and chat, and gather simptes, till he reached some country hamlet, where he could bait his charger, and talk through a little sermon with the villagers, and remount his pony and trot away again. In his aerial poise, Whitefield's eagle eye drank lustre from the source of light, and loved to look down on men in assembled myriads; Wesley's falcon glace did not reach so far, but it searched more keenly and marked more minutely where it pierced. A master of assemblies, Whitefield was no match for the isolated man; seldom coping with the multitude, but strong in astute sagacity and personal ascendency, Wesley could conquer any number one by one. All force and impetus,—Whitefield was the powder-blast in the quarry, and by one explosive sermon would shake a district and detach materials for other men's long work; deft, neat, and painstaking, Wesley loved to split and trim each fragment into uniform plinths and polished stones. Or, taken otherwise, Whitefield was the bargeman or the wagoner who brought the timber of the house, and Wesley was the architect which set it up.—Whitefield had no patience for ecclesiastical polity, no aptitude for pastoral details; with a beaver-like propensity for building, Wesley was always constructing societies, and with a king-like craft of ruling was most at home when presiding over a class or conference.—North British Review.

SOUTH AFRICA.

LETTER FROM MR. L. GROUT, APRIL 16, 1847.

Journey to Umvoti.—African Travelling.

[In the following letter Mr. Grout describes his journey from Umlazi to Umvoti, the station of Mr. Alden Grout; and his account of this expedition will give the reader a very good idea of the ordinary means of travelling in Southern Africa.]

A day or two previous to our leaving the Umlazi for this place, I engaged an ox-wagon, the best and indeed the only means of conveyance for a family in this country. When about to travel here, we have no inquiry to make concerning the arrival or departure of the cars, stage-coaches or steamboats. Nor have we any question to ask about hotels or boarding-houses by the way. Every traveller in this country must provide himself with a team and apparatus, which usually consists of twelve oxen and a large covered wagon; a bed for lodging at night; together with food and a few cooking utensils and dishes for use by the way. Supplying ourselves with these, we "packed up" and set off, in true African style, on the morning of Tuesday, March 23, for our present temporary abode.

Our first driver carried us to Natal Bay, a distance of twelve miles. On our way thither we passed many women and girls, each with a large pumpkin or two, or a basket of fowls, or half a bushel, more or less, of corn on their heads.—They usually go "single file," in companies varying from five to twenty-five or thirty, each company being attended with one man, the husband and father, to do the trading. Some of these large companies I have seen going thus to market from a distance of fifteen or twenty miles.

[Soon after Mr. Grout left Natal Bay, it began to rain. He determined, therefore, to spend the night where he was; the usual preparation was soon made for the accommodation of the party.]

In selecting a place for "out-spanning," we seek contiguity to some stream or fountain of water; grass and wood generally being found at almost any place on the road which we took, without difficulty. Every travelling establishment in Africa must have a driver and a leader for the oxen; and it needs also another native for various other purposes. As soon as we stop, and the oxen are unyoked, one sets off for wood; another for water; while a third puts the cooking apparatus in order, and prepares to strike up a fire. We soon get a cup of hot tea or coffee, which with our bread and butter, and perhaps a little dried beef, makes a very good repast.

The Journey continued.—Various Incidents.

[Though the next morning was unpromising, Mr. Grout "spanned in," as it is termed, and proceeded to Umgeni river.]

This river was high, but on sending our driver forward, we found it fordable. In the course of a few hours it began to rain again, and we out spanned for the night, near the Umhlangana.—With difficulty a fire was kindled, and tea prepared; after which we shut up our wagon, and prepared to spend the night, not in the crowded city, nor in a country town, but in a broad, green and fertile valley, ever and anon all shining with the lightning's flash, and trembling with the roar of the thunder. But we both laid ourselves down, and slept, and awoke, because the Lord sustained us.

The morning was wet and cloudy. But after breakfast we started and went slowly on our journey till noon. After dinner it commenced raining again, and continued till night. Our fire, being extinguished, was not rekindled for tea. We sent our oxen to a distant kraal for safe keeping, and our native attendants to lodge in a native hut. The rain fell in torrents much of the night; our wagon leaked, but we managed to keep quite comfortable.

The next day was fair and beautiful. The sun rose in splendor; the atmosphere was clear; the breeze gentle and sweet; the meadows like the meadows of New England in the month of July, covered with grass and grain, especially Indian corn. At the base of the surrounding hills was a fence, made of wood by the natives, to keep the cattle from their cultivated fields.—The sides and summits of the hills round about, as far as the eye could reach, were covered variously with groves, green grass, and herds of cattle; while the air was every where filled with the fragrance of flowers and the song of the feathered choir. The chief of the people residing in that region, learning that we were in the neighborhood, came early with one of his men, to bring us green corn and milk, and to ask a present.

Our journey for the day was through a section of country rich and beautifully romantic. We saw several old paths made by elephants and buffaloes; saw several old stations of hunters;—and spent the night on a spot where an ox had been recently killed by a lion.

[On arriving at the Umfloti, Mr. Grout found it quite high; and some inconvenience was experienced in crossing it.]

About four o'clock in the afternoon, we arrived at the Umtongati, which was so deep as to be impassible. We remained there until the next day, when we succeeded in getting across the river, the oxen swimming, and the wagon being nearly filled with water. In about four hours we came to the Umhlali, which was still more swollen; it abounding also in alligators, one of which was lying on the sand as we came up.

We now found it difficult to decide what to do. It was Saturday afternoon. We were within two or three hours' drive of the Umvoti; our provisions were nearly exhausted, the journey having been much longer than we expected; and the river was deeper than any which we had passed. But, taking some refreshment, we determined to proceed, if possible. Accordingly I put my trunks upon the top of the wagon body, and put our bed upon the trunks. Mrs. Grout took her place upon the latter. Appointing two leaders instead of one, as they would be obliged to swim, and putting all in readiness, we were about to start, when the increased weight upon the bedstead broke it down. This being elevated again, and blocked up, we started, and were entering the river, when the forward pair of oxen, pulling away from their leaders, returned to the shore.—Putting all right once more, we enter the river, the leaders and oxen swim, the water comes over the top of the wagon body, and fills it to the depth of about two feet; but the river is narrow, and soon we ascend the opposite bank in safety, saying, "Hitherto hath the Lord helped us;" and remembering that he had declared, "When thou passest through the waters, I will be with thee;—and through the rivers, they shall not overflow thee." In about two hours more, as the silent shades of Saturday evening were stealing down the mountains, we arrived at the missionary station of Rev. A. Grout, in the quiet and beautiful valley of the Umvoti.

Appearance of the Country—Soil—Climate.

[The next topic embraced in Mr. Grout's letter is the physical appearance and condition of the country. Some of the statements which follow are particularly valuable.]

The country, so far as I have seen it, is preeminent for the beauty of its landscapes, the fertility of its soil, and the healthines of its climate. My delight in looking at the scenery of South Africa commenced with my first sight of it from the sea; and it has been increasing from that time until the present. The mountains, not large, are rather tabular than conical in shape; and when viewed from the sea, they rise, table above table, as they recede in the distance, having the summit and the sides, with the intervening plains, covered with verdent groves, or thick shrubbery, or large fields of green grass. Add to this, that the whole picture is diversified, with here and there a river, or a dark and deep ravine, with fields of Indian corn, or gardens of indigenous grain and fruit; and you will agree that it may well excite the most pleasing emotions in the admirer of nature, and inspire the Christian's heart with the prayer that a new and moral creation may be effected among the inhabitants, with which, for beauty and glory, even "the former shall not be remembered nor come into mind."

As I have travelled over the country, I have been struck with the fertility of the soil and the luxuriance of the vegetation. The grass is usually of an excellent quality, set thick at the bottom, and of good growth. I have seen some fields, not fed by the cattle, where it was four or five feet high. Two crops of corn may be raised in a year; though the summer is better than the winter for this purpose. The trees in this part of the colony are not generally large or good for timber; though they are numerous, and valued for shade or fuel. Doubtless their growth and value may have been injured by a custom of the natives, in accordance with which they burn off the grass of the country in the autumn. At a distance from the coast the timber is said to be larger and better, and the soil well fitted to produce wheat.

Along the coast the principal productions are Indian and Caffre corn, sweet potatoes, pumpkins, peas, beans, beets, carrots, cabbages, onions, oranges, lemons, bananas and pomegranates, together with a variety of indigenous plants and fruits. Indigo is beginning to be made from the plant, which grows here in great variety and abundance. But the staple production upon the sea coast promises to be cotton, which grows luxuriantly, and is said to be of a superior quality.—This may afford a useful and suitable employment for the natives, should they become so far enlightened and elevated as to desire to pursue it. One of them is already cultivating a few patches, with the hope of being able to purchase a wagon on which, with the oxen he may raise, can be made very serviceable to him in agricultural and other pursuits. And that individual, a young man, is beginning to live in other respects more after the manner of enlightened and Christian society; and there is, I think, some ground to hope that he is not far from the kingdom of heaven, if his heart has not already been changed.

The climate of this country, so far as I have either experienced myself or learned from others, is one of the most salubrious and agreeable in the world. In the summer it is of course warm. When I arrived, the middle of February, the last month of summer, the thermometer stood at noon, for one or two days, at eighty-seven degrees Fahrenheit. In the winter it is occasionally nearly or quite cool enough to make a fire agreeable. But for most of the year the climate is such that one could harldly wish it otherwise. So it has been since I have been here.

The Inhabitants—Characteristics.

[But the missionary is more especially interested in the people among whom his lot is cast. On this point Mr. Grout has dwelt at considerable length.]

The natives within this colony, already estimated by some at eighty thousand, and by others at one hundred thousand, are rapidly increasing in number, both from the ordinary increase of families, and by immigration from neighboring tribes under despotic and cruel governments. By those who have come from abroad, and by some of the natives who have always resided here, I sometimes hear this colony now called "the happy country."

The coporeal and phrenological appearance of the natives is, in many respects, highly interesting. The degraded condition and the employments of the women are, indeed, unfavorable to their reaching and preserving a proper stature and form. Still, many of these, as well as the men, are very regular in their features, symmetrical in form, of a full chest and commanding stature. The men stand, walk or run very erect, and they have for the most part high forehead, and an intelligent and expressive countenance. There seem to be but few aged people among them. I have scarcely seen half a dozen. Perhaps this comes in part from the devastating wars that have been waged here in years gone by, and in part from the fact that few or none of the aged have immigrated to this colony.

[Passing to the moral condition of the people around him, Mr. Grout has drawn a picture which is fitted to excite the deepest commiseration.]

The degradation of the natives is the more striking, as they seem fitted for high and noble ends. Had all the diligence and ability which they have employed in overreaching, debasing and destroying one another, been spent in efforts to cultivate the arts and sciences, and to devise and promote the means of moral and religious improvement, instead of literally herding, as they now do, with the brutes that perish, they might have ranked with the intelligent and Christian nations of Europe and America. But now all their powers and faculties are unsanctified; and most of their skill and enterprise are employed in works of unrighteousness. And for how many generations this branch of the human family has been living here in immortality and sin; for how many ages they have been wandering from God and the road to heaven, with none to tell them their folly or point them to the Lamb of God, it is impossible now to determine. But true it is that in shutting out from their minds all thoughts of God and eternity; in disregarding all moral obligation to their Maker or to one another; and in excluding from their customs all forms of religious worship, and from their language all terms properly significant of religious thought and feeling, few, if any tribes of the human family have succeeded better than this people. Many of their practices are such as forbid enumeration.

Dress—Dwellings.

[To illustrate the degraded condition of society as it falls under his eye, Mr. Grout makes the following statement in regard to the dress of the natives.]

A few feathers upon the head; a profusion of beads upon the neck and arms, and sometimes upon other parts of the body; a small piece of the skin of some animal about the loins; and, perhaps, a brass ring upon the wrist and a strap covered with hair about the ankles, constitute much wearing apparel as most of the natives are in the habit of using. Some who are under the more immediate influence of the missionaries, have procured blankets; and a few dress somewhat in the style of civilized people.—But for one person properly clad, hundreds and thousands go destitute, even of the beads and skins of animals to which I have referred.

Their houses are simple, small and rude; hemispherical in shape, having a diameter at the base of some eight or ten feet; being in height, at the centre and apex, only four or five feet; having but one aperture, and that at the base, about two feet high, and made to answer for doors, windows and chimney. When they need a fire, they build it in the centre, and sit around it upon their usual seat, the earth.

Their huts are made of wattles and covered with thatch. A mat woven of reeds for a bed, a low wooden stool for a pillow, calabashes and baskets for containing water and food, a spear which is used also as a knife, and perhaps a wooden spoon, constitute their chief articles of furniture. Five or ten of these huts, arranged at about equal distances between two concentric circles made of stakes and bushes, eight or ten feet high, the outer circle having a diameter of four or five rods, and the inner one a diameter of three or four rods, and inclosing a yard for the cattle by night, constitute a kraal. Every kraal is owned by one or two men, who have each a hut to themseives, while their several wives occupy another hut by themselves.

The men make baskets and mats, prepare the ground for digging and planting, store the grain when harvested, take care of their cattle, hunt, visit, and go out to war, if called. The women dig, plant and weed the field, harvest the crops, bring wood and water, cook the food, and take care of their children, that is, their infants, for their larger children have no care taken of them, have no government, no education, little food, and no clothes.—The women carry all burdens, which are to be transported, and make floors of earth for their huts. It is not an uncommon thing to see a poor wife and mother going to the field, early in the morning, to plant or harvest, with a basket on her head, a pick or hoe on her shoulder, and an infant suspended in a sort of sack upon her back. And after six or eight hour's labor, she will return with perhaps the additional burden of the grain which she is harvesting, or of a bundle of wood which she has gathered in the field, or sought in the bush. Oh, how small the number of Christian wives and mothers who know the extreme degredation of those holding the same office and relation in other parts of the world! And when, oh when, shall the time come, that all those who know these things, shall consecrate their labors and prayers, yea, and their own sons and daughters, freely for the redemption and elevation of their sex, on shores where, as yet, the proper dignity and province of woman are utterly disregarded, and all the higher and holier enjoyments of social and domestic life, and of the Christian religion, are unknown!

Respect for Religion—Education.

A kind of regard is paid to the Sabbath, at least so far, in most cases, as to abstain from the ordinary occupations of the week. And the attendance upon divine worship is very full, and constant, both at Umlazi and this place. And these large congregations are usually as orderly and attentivo as most congregations in New England. Many of those who attend, come from a great distance, some of the women six or eight miles, and some of the men ten or twelve. Not long since a company of men came a days' journey from a remote part of this location, arriving just at night, to attend meeting and hear the gospel preached. They wish to have a missionary go and labor among them.

THE INFUENZA.—Throughout the length and breadth of the English Isles, has this epidemic been raging, as well as in most parts of the continent of Europe. In London nearly one half the persons employed in public and private establishments have been laid up. On one day, there were 180 clerks and others absent from the post-office, and 1200 of the police force were off duty. In the country, all classes have suffered from it; and whilst business is impeded pleasure has been almost destroyed. The rate of mortality is frightfully on the increase. Ten thousand persons are said to be laid up with the influenza at Lille, but no case has terminated fatally. At Toulouse there are, it is said, 15,000 persons in a population of 55,000 suffering from that malady.

WHAT THE TEMPERANCE SOCIETIES HAVE DONE.—There are now, says the Albany Spectator, more than 1,500,000 people in the United States who abstain from the use of ardent spirit, and from furnishing it to others; more than 5,000 Temperance Societies, embracing more than 600,000 members. More than 2,000 distilleries have been stopped; more than 5,000 merhants have ceased from the traffic. It is estimated that 30,000 persons are now sober, who had it not been for Temperance Societies, would have been sots; and that at least 20,000 families are now in ease and comfort, who would otherwise have been in poverty and disgraced by drunken inmates.

Religious Intelligence.

OHIO DISTRICT.

Bellbrook, O., (Xenia Ct.,) Jan. 12, 1847.

Dear Br Bassett: As it is made my duty, by the Annual Conference, to report through the "Western Recorder," the condition of my field of labor; I embrace this opportunity of recording the manifold mercies we have recently experinced, as a Church, in this village. During the first year of my appointment on this circuit, I felt that Providence was preparing the way for a gracious revival; upon my return after Conference, we determined to make a protracted effort commencing on Christmas Day, and continuing as long as we should see intimations of good.—My faith was strengthened, by seeing an increased attention to the preaching of the word—an agonizing spirit of prayer for the out-pouring of the Holy Spirit, among those who mourned over the "desolations of Zion," for truly, it has been a time of general declension and coldness among all the churches in this section of country.

On Friday night, December 24, our meeting commenced, and though but few were out, and the prospect by no means flattering, yet we were encouraged by the arrival of that long-tried and zealous minister of Christ, Brother Wm. B. Evans, who came promptly to our aid. Our meeting continued to increase in number and interest. On Monday morning, we commenced our social meetings, which we continued through our protracted effort. On that morning we had a melting season in the house of God, and 3 persons came forward and united with the church.

On Monday night, Brother O. Warrington, of the Lebanon Mission, came to our assistance, and labored with us during the meeting. Nearly every night during the week, persons came forward to the altar of prayer, with "broken and contrite hearts," seeking deliverance in the blood of Christ. At night our brethren preached to weeping and deeply attentive congregations, and in the morning the church would be well filled with persons rejoicing in a Saviour's love—ready to declare his goodness—mourners seeking rest in pardoning love—and others, convinced that they ought to become Christians. Such manifestations of Divine power, I never before witnessed during my ministry, as we enjoyed in our social meetings. One lady, who had been a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church for some time, came forward as a seeker of religion, and soon found the "pearl of great price." Others with heavy hearts left the altar of prayer, but would return in the morning to testify that they had found peace. One man, who had lived forty-nine years without hope, and without God in the world, took his wife by the hand and came forward and united with the church—before the meeting closed their daughter came also. Soon another gentleman took his wife by the hand, and said—"we will go with you."

This work has embraced many of the children of our members. Parents and children have wept, prayed and rejoiced together, commencing the new year 1848, with zeal in the service of God. O! may it be a year of continued prosperity! On Friday, the 8th day after our meeting commenced, Brother Evans was obliged to go back to Lebanon to hold a watch-night and preach on the Sabbath; he returned again on Monday, having received four members into the Church at Lebanon while absent. He and Brother Warrington labored with me until Friday. January 7th, when the meeting closed. Brother McGuire and Hardesty were with us during the last two days. On Friday morning Brother Evans preached an appropriate closing sermon—1 came forward and joined—during the meeting we received 37 members, 1 by certificate from the Baptist Church, and 1 by certificate from the M. E. Church.

Several are still under deep awakenings, who we hope will yet submit to the influence of grace. On Sabbath we had one of the most interesting class meetings I have ever attended. Our church embraces within its fold some of the most promising young men, and women in this community all zealous in the cause of Christ.

On last night at our weekly prayer meeting, another young lady united with the church making 33 members as the result of this meeting.—Others I think will yet unite. If faithful as a Church, Bellbrook is destined to be one of the strong holds of the M. P. Church.

Yours, in Christ,

J. WHITE.

Twin-Creek Ct., Jan. 6, 1848.

Br. Bassett: As revival intelligence is always welcomed by the readers of your paper, and encouraging to the friends of Christ; I rejoice to gladden their hearts; and am happy to have it to record, that the Lord has once more visited us, at West Alexandria, and Liberty.

We have just closed a meeting at those two places, which came off with more than usual interest, especially at West Alexandria. The prospects were rather gloomy, the church being in quite a backsliding state, at the commencement. But, blessed be God, the Holy Spirit came down among us, in an extraordinary manner, and the meeting increased in interest at every appointment. We had some several most powerful conversions, while the entire membership were quickened and made alive. The Lord have all the praise. I will here mention two very extraordinary circumstances, that occurred during the meeting at West Alexandria. The one was the case of a worthy brother, that had been a member of the church for some three years, on probation; but yet without religion; refusing to be taken into full connection, and being opposed to anything like excitement, and especially to the mourner's seat: prompted by the enemy, made a violent attempt to take his companion from the altar of prayer! But to the astonishment of all, on the last morning (the 8th,) of the meeting, he was the first to come forward declaring he had been 20 years trying to seek religion in his own way, but all in vain; then fell down begging us to pray for him, saying, "this day is to decide my eternal fate." And like a prevailing Israel, he soon gained the victory and rose shouting the praises of a sin-pardoning God. The next was the case of a lady, who had a dream some three weeks before our meeting, which had considerable weight on her mind; yet she had made no pretensions to religion. On Wednesday morning she rose up in our social meeting, told her dream and feelings, and without any solicitation came forward and gave her hand, at the same time asking the church to receive her.—This surpassed anything of the kind I ever witnessed.

Brother Young was with us at West Alexandria, and labored with his usual zeal and acceptability. Brother Hunt was with us part of the time at both meetings and labored faithfully.—We have received 13 members in all since Conference. May the Lord carry on his work until sin, that dreadful monster, shall be driven to his native abode. Amen.

Yours in Christ,

J. NUTTY.

Washington Ct., Jan. 7, 1848.

Br. Young: I feel it to be my duty as well as [illegible] to address you, and as many of our friends would like to hear from Washington Circuit, by your permission, Brother Bassett, I shall say a few things in regard to matters in this field of labor. I am not disposed to complain as long as the grace of God is my support. But Brethren, there is a dark cloud hanging over this Circuit, and I am sorry to see the state of things that exists here at present. This Circuit has been reduced very low (from 16 to 6 appointments.) Brother Bassett I wish to correct an error in the Report of the Number of Members, 250: there is not 200 members on this Circuit, probationers included. I am still plodding along through the mud in this level country.

Our first quarterly meeting was held at Bethel meeting-house. We were favored with the labors of Fathers Dobbins and Ryan, Brothers Webster, Jacks and Huzzey. We had some of our souls blessed. We continued until Monday morning. Two united by certificate. Next we commenced a Christmas meeting at White Oak Grove, Friday, and continued until Wednesday evening. The church was blessed abundantly. Here we were favored with the able labors of Father Dobbins, though now in his 80th year.—He preaches with as much energy as is common for young men. Father D. has been a professor about 60 years, and has been preaching something like 50 years. Bless the Lord for Fathers in Israel. Next we commenced a protracted meeting at Brother Creamer's, on New Year's day. Here we had a good time. Brothers Dobbins and Ryan laboured with their usual zeal and greatly to profit. Our prospects in general are good. Pray for us.

WESTERN RECORDER.

PUTNAM, OHIO, THURSDAY, JAN. 20, 1848.

Not too Long.—The account of South Africa in our Department of Missionary Intelligence, will be found very interesting. Don't fail to read it.

News.—It is confidently stated that General Scott is to be recalled, and that General Butler is to take his place. It is also confidently stated that the Asiatic Cholera has reached the city of London, and commenced its ravages in Golden Lane.

Weather—Waters, &c.—Heavy rains last week carried off the snow with which the earth was overspread. This has again produced high waters in the Muskingum Valley. The principal obstruction to navigation is at Beverly, a breach having been made in the Improvement by the great flood. Boats run from Marietta to Beverly from below, and from Zanesville to Beverly from above. If the river remains open for a few days, those who have goods on the way, expect to receive them, by paying some extra expense for storage and portage for a short distance. We are of the number.

We have cooler weather again, and the river is declining.

Too Poor!—A Brother minister in the Pittsburgh District who is very friendly to the interests of our paper, writes us as follows: "Some of our members are 'too poor' to subscribe for the Recorder, and yet they can with the utmost sang froid 'chaw' tobacco with a vengeance!"

That poverty, perhaps, is partly explained.

U. S. CONGRESS.

Tuesday, January 4, Senate.—The special order of the day was taken up, viz; Mr. Calhoun's resolutions on the conquest of Mexico.—Mr. Calhoun addressed the Senate at great length in support of his resolutions, after which they were on motion, laid on the table.

House.—Mr. Giddings moved to refer so much of the President's Message as recommended indemnity to the claimants of the Amistad captures to a select committee, and addressed the House at some length in support of his motion, but it did not prevail. The portion referred to, goes to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. A resolution was adopted allowing each member for stationery and other articles, the sum of $35 for the long, and $25 for the short session of each Congress.

Thursday 6, Senate.—Mr. Allen presented resolutions of Ohio Legislature in favor of placing the name of Henry Johnson on the pension list. A bill was passed "To promote the filling up of vacancies in the regiments and companies of volunteers now in the service of the United States." The Ten Regiment bill was resumed. Mr. Hale addressed the Senate at great length in opposition to the bill, showing the grounds of his opinion that the origin of the war, was a purpose to extend slavery.

The House occupied the most of three days upon instructions to the Post Master General, in reference to the great Southern Mail.

Both houses adjourned over to the 10th inst.

Monday 10, Senate.—A bill was introduced and twice read, to establish a territorial government in Oregon.

Ohio Legislature.

Wed. Jan. 5. House—A resolution was unanimously adopted recommending Congress so to modify the postage law as to permit newspapers to be sent in the mails free of postage within 30 miles.

Thurs. 5. Senate.—A bill was passed to establish the Commercial Court of the city of Cincinnati.

Fri. 7.—The two houses jointly proceeded to certain elections, which resulted as follows:

Geo. Collings, President Judge of the 10th Judicial District.

Alpheus M'Intyre, Associate Judge, of Sandusky county,

N. Wade and C. K. Smith, Associate Judges of Butler co.

T. J. Anderson, Associate Judge for Miami county.

John Merrill, Associate Judge for Marion county.

Maine U. S. Senator.—W. B. S. Moor, of Bangor, Maine, has been appointed by the Governor, United States senator, in place of Mr. Fairfield, deceased, until the Legislature shall elect.

Ohio Penitentiary.—We have before us the Annual Report of the Directors and Warden of the Ohio Penitentiary, for the year 1847.

The Directors speak of the stone quarry enterprise for the employment of a portion of the prisoners as successful and profitable to the State.

They consider the internal condition and police of the Institution, superior to what it has ever been before. They think this is especially the case in a moral and religious point of view. They speak highly of the zeal and industry of Rev. J. B. Finley, the Moral Instructor, and they think he has been signally successful. They speak also of Mr. L. Dewey, the Warden, as a gentleman of humane and kindly feelings towards the unfortunate inmates, and well qualified to promote their reform.

The Warden, in his report, speaks very sensibly of the advantages of kind treatment towards the prisoners. He observes that the instances are rare, where the stubborn will of the most hardened offender, may not be made to melt before the influence of sympathy and kindness. He says that the convict, tho' degraded and criminal, should be recognized as a man. The number of punishments the past, has been less than in any former year, and yet there has been the most perfect subordination, and general diligence in labor, on the part of the convicts. He gives the following remarkable case.

A test of their subordination and submission to the rules of the prison, and their praiseworthy anxiety to preserve the property of the State and of the contractors, was exhibited at the fire in May last, before alluded to. The fire commenced about three o'clock in the afternoon of the 10th of May, and was not subdued until about seven o'clock in the same evening, covering a period of four hours. The weather had been extremely dry for a long time, and the flames spread with unusual and alarming rapidity, and in a moment of time almost, as it seemed, the whole block, two hundred and thirty feet long, appeared enveloped in flames. At that instant of time, the destruction of the whole Institution seemed almost inevitable. The citizens and firemen, in great numbers, and with great alacrity, rushed to our aid, and the prisoners were in all parts of the yard, mingling with the citizens and firemen, obeying every order, and discharging, in many instances, the most hazardous duties. After a severe & protracted fatigue in a scene so exciting, when the usual signal was given, every prisoner immediately found his way from out the crowd of citizens and firemen, took his place in his respective company, and marched to his cell without the least disorder. All this occurred without the loss of a single prisoner.

The prison library, thro' the exertions of the Moral Instructor, and the liberality of citizens, has increased to over 4000 volumes. Each convict is permitted to draw a book every Saturday morning. The Sabbath School is continued with increasing interest, and is attended with gratifying results. Many have made great improvement, and many who could not read when they entered the school, now read the bible with facility.—Many of the prisoners afford gratifying evidence of moral renovation. The general health in the prison has been better the past year than formerly. Only 6 cases of mortality have occurred the past year.

The number of convicts now in the Penitentiary is 445, a small diminution of the number of the previous year. There are nine females, two of whom are colored persons. The females are under the care of a Matron. Their labor is rendered productive in making up clothing for the convicts.

The earnings of the past year amount to $44,082; of which, $36,058 has been received in cash. The disbursements have been, $28,678; showing that the earnings of the past year over and above the expenses have been $15,404.

The number of convicts sent to the penitentiary within the last year, has been 91, from thirty-seven counties.

The Life of Bunyan, Author of the Pilgrim's Progress, compiled from his own writings, and other Authentic sources. By Irah Chase, D. D. L. Colby, & Co., N. York, 1847.

This is the title of a small volume of 166 pages, an unbound copy of which has been forwarded us by the publishers. We have been pleased in the main with the perusal of the work. A sketch of the Life and religious experience of that extraordinary person, with an account of his imprisonment for opinion's sake, given principally in his own language, cannot fail to prove interesting. It gives the reader a glance at the times in which he lived, a period memorable in English history, as he was born in the early part of the reign of Charles I. The names of several of his distinguished cotemporaries are given, likewise the substance of two books, "The practice of Piety," and "The Plain Man's Pathway to Heaven," which were the first religious books read by Mr. Bunyan. They came to him with his wife after their marriage, when otherwise he states they were so poor as not to have 'so much as a dish and spoon between them, of household stuff.' Yet how rich in faith, and how eminent in piety did he afterwards become. The perusal of those two books, was the chief means of his awakening and conversion. That immortal work of Bunyan "The Pilgrim's Progress," evidences a thorough acquaintance with experimental religion, and "the narrow way that leadeth unto life." This book, which has proved a blessing to so many thousands, was written by him chiefly whilst suffering imprisonment for preaching as a non-conformist. Who that has read the work would not be anxious to read also the life of its author. The biographical account prepared by Dr. Chase, makes a neat and cheap little volume, and we doubt not will be extensively patronised.

The Family Quarto.—This is now the title of that neat little publication of our neighbor, Rev. S. Brown of Zanesville, heretofore called 'The Colporteur.' The 'Quarto' becomes more and more interesting, as we trust its patronage is being the more extended. Its industrious editor we apprehend will make its publication a successful as well as useful experiment. Success to a religious paper in Zanesville.

The Western Weekly.—We have received the first number of a large and handsome sheet bearing this name, which hails from Pittsburgh, Pa. It promises to be a literary publication in which the Ladies' Department, conducted by a lady, is to have a full share. The Editors, Messrs. Shiras & Kinsloe, think that the west has ample resources of its own, without being beholden to the East for literature, and their watchword is Progress. They say

There are men still living who saw, as it came wet from the press, the first number of the first newspaper ever printed west of the Allegheny mountains. While we think of this fact, let us look to the future, and ask what changes will be witnessed by those who are children now. Fifty years ago the literature of America was a bye-word. To-day our authors are read and quoted with respect in every civilized land. The west must and will have a share in this progress. And there can be no more efficient agent in the development of the talent which is among us, than a literary newspaper.

The only objection we thus far make to the "Weekly," is the same we have to nearly all the eastern Weeklies, viz. that too large a space is devoted to fiction, to the exclusion, we apprehend, of matter more instructive and useful. The Editors however promise an "especial watchfulness in regard to the moral tendency of each article." Moreover, as our taste is a chastened one, we know, that that to which we object, is precisely calculated to procure popular favor. The Western Weekly will be furnished at $2 per annum in advance; three copies for $5. We put it down on our list of exchanges, and wish it success and usefulness.

Conference Proceedings.

From the Methodist Protestant.

Florida Conference.

The Florida Annual Conference, assembled on the 10th of December, 1847, at Mount Zion, Leon, county, Florida.

The Conference was opened, with appropriate religious services, by the President, Dr. Miles Nash.

The Conference proceeded to the election of President and Secretary. Bro. M. Whit Smith was elected President, but respectfully declined to accept; bro. Thomas O. Adair was elected Secretary. Dr. G. W. Holland, Conference Steward.

The Conference again proceeded to the election of President, and upon the first ballotting, Dr. Miles Nash was re-elected.

The Stationing Committee reported; Dr. Miles Nash, President. Decatur Circuit, T. O. Adair, H. Saxon and W. H. Cassels, Sup. Assistants. Tallahassee to be supplied. Madison Circuit, M. Whit Smith. Black Creek Mission, H. R. Alford. Hillsborough Mission, to be supplied.—Home Missionaries, Dennis Hankins and James J. Joyce: left in the hands of the President, Nathan Lindsey: unstationed preachers, Samuel Knight, Joshua Platt and Wm. McDaniel

The reports of numbers show an increase of 110.

The following minute was unanimously adopted: Resolved by this Conference, that we view with deep regret the increasing dispotism, in communities, embracing members of our Church to conform to the maxims of the world; and we declare it, as our conviction, that to patronize dancing schools, or fashionable balls, is wholly inconsistent with a Christian profession and with the precepts of the Gospel. Titus II. 2, 3, 4, 5, 6:—Those who cherish fashionable amusements, can have but little communion with the Holy Ghost. We therefore affectionately admonish our beloved membership to stand aloof from the above mentioned, and all similar practices.

Next Conference will be held at the First Methodist Protestant Church in the city of Tallahassee, commencing on Thursday preceding the first Sabbath in December, 1848.

Bro. M. Whit Smith was appointed a Delegate to attend the next session of the Georgia Conference, for purposes of fraternal correspondence, &c.

The Conference closed its session at about 6 o'clock P. M. on Saturday, the 12th Dec., 1847. The members, however, remained in the neighborhood, and all attended Church on Sabbath, when the Lord most graciously met with his people; and it was a time of refreshing from His presence. Our prospects are truly encouraging. To God be all the glory!

Biographical.

Written for the Western Recorder.

Br. Bassett: We are again called upon to record some of death's doings in the family of our beloved Brother and Sister, Daniel and Elizabeth Frazier, who were formerly residents of Salt-Creek Township, Muskingum county, Ohio—who have been recently called to follow five of their beloved children (all within a few weeks) to the house appointed for all living. The grim monster accomplished his work of desolation by that fatal disease, Low Typhoid, commencing with the eldest son.

Br. Lewellen Frazier,

Like many others, spent the early years of his life in the pleasures of earth and sense, until near two years ago, when in attendance at a meeting where Brother Thomas Potter preached, when the word came with power and reached his heart. But he concealed it for a time, until near the time of the sitting of the Annual Conference one year ago last fall, when he attended a protracted meeting that was held at Mt. Pisgah, by Brothers J. Ady, J. McCann, and Wm. Sears. When he with his father, one brother and one sister, (Geo. and Keziah,) united with the Mt. Pisgah class, Methodist Prot. Church, Pennville circuit.—But he did not experience a change of heart until the spring following, when he obtained pardon thro' the redeeming merits of Christ. He continued to give evidence of the power of a living faith to the last.

On the 3d of August last, he was seized with his last illness, and lingered until the 30th inst., during which time he bore his afflictions with much patience and resignation, testifying to all that he had a home high up in heaven. He died in the 34th year of his age.

Dr. Amos Frazier,

Who had never made a profession of religion, but who had received very serious and deep impressions in relation to his future state, at the 3d quarterly meeting of the Pennville circuit, held at the Mt. Pisgah meeting house, in May last.—Being a practicing physician, he was called away before the meeting closed, no one knowing his feelings or intentions. He said but little about it until his brother Lewellen was taken sick when he was called upon for medical aid, when no doubt but those impressions were again revived, which continued with him until the 15th of August, when he was seized with his last illness. He seemed to have some very strong presentiments of his rapidly approaching dissolution, when he commenced seeking salvation in earnest, and shortly after he obtained pardon in the merits of the Savior. On the 3d of September last, he departed in peace in the 31st year of his age, leaving a wife and two infant daughters with a large circle of relatives to mourn his loss, but they do not mourn as those who have no hope.

Geo. L. Frazier,

Who was by the same fell destroyer thrown upon a death bed before the death of his brother Lewellen, and such was the violence of the attack that he was not able to attend the funeral of either of the two former, but he was not long estranged from them, for on the 12th of September, he bid adieu to a troublesome world, in great peace and triumph.

A little before he departed, when asked by his father if he was sensible that he was dying, he replied, he was, and then broke out in the following strains of praise—Glory, glory! up to heaven, up to heaven! and then repeated the 24th Psalm, and then breated his last. He died in the 25th year of his age.

Keziah Frazier,

Who was violently attacked on the first day of September, with the same malignant disease, and with much patience and christian fortitude, she endured her afflictions until the 3d of October last, when she exchanged this troublesome world for a seat at her Saviour's right hand, leaving to all the most clear evidence that the religion of Christ which she professed, and which sustained her in life, also sustained her in death. She died in her 20th year, in great peace, perfectly sensible and composed to the last. She died as she lived—an exception to all who knew her. "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord."

Lydia Frazier,

The youngest and last of five of the same family, all of whom fell victims to death by the same disease. She lingered for some length of time. But at length sunk in death, on the 11th of October last. Being very young she had never professed religion, yet in death she gave satisfactory evidence that she was going to join with her brothers and sister a happier state above. She died in the 12th year of her age.

Thus our beloved Brother and Sister Frazier have been called to part with five of their beloved offspring, but they sorrow not as these who have no hope, for they are living in anticipation of a happier meeting above. May the Lord guide them in life, sustain them in death, and introduce them into the joys of heaven, with those dear departed ones, to go no more out for ever and ever. Amen.

Written for the Western Recorder.

DR. DAVID PIERCE.

To record the decease of respected and endeared christian friends, is a painfully pleasing duty. How often has such a record to be made? How many of our dear friends rest with the slumbering dead? We have lost a true friend, in the death of Dr. D. Pierce, who expired on the 2d inst. at his residence in Cross Creek township, Washington co. Pennsylvania, in the 49th year of his age. The affliction of our departed brother, commenced with hemorrhage of the lungs, but assumed the fatal and distinct type of Chronic Bronchitis. For six months did he struggle with disease, before he yielded the contest, and sunk into the repose of death.

In his eighteenth year, he saw himself to be a sinner, and fled for refuge to Jesus, the Saviour of sinners. He then united with the M. E. Church, and continued in her fellowship until the organization of the M. P. Church; when, as a friend of mutual rights, he became one of that noble and fearless band of christians. His affection for the church of his choice was sincere, ardent, and constant. He loved Zion, and sought her prosperity. As a Class-leader, Steward, Trustee, and Delegate did he serve the church.—When filling these several offices, he was faithful to his trust. It was his delight to meet his varied responsibilities, seeking thus to contribute to the strength and prosperity of the church. A portion of his means was always ready when the church would call, while he lived; and now that he is dead, the circuit to which he belonged, will receive an annual legacy from his estate, for many years to come.

He loved and highly prized the means of grace. He loved them, because Jesus had instituted them; he prized them, as their use afforded strength, and peace, and consolation to his soul. Though, as a Practitioner of medicine, he had an extensive and laborious practice, and from weariness and exhaustion, might have excused himself from a punctual attendance on the services of the sanctuary; yet his soul loved the solemnities of Zion, and with almost unequaled constancy, would he go with those that kept holy day. In him, and for him, the grace of God had accomplished much. Love, joy, peace, long suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance, patience, existed in him, in a good degree, as the fruits of the Spirit. And in these fruits did he seek to abound, yet more, and more. O with what distinctness and impressiveness, did they shed their holy lustre, thro' his protracted illness. He murmured not; he repined not; but with christian submission, did he suffer the whole will of God. When in health, he often anticipated the death struggle, with fears and painful apprehensions. His faith in God would not falter; but his flesh would shrink at the thought of dying. But when the struggle came, his lively sense of the Saviour's sufficiency, banished his fears, and made him joyful and triumphant. On the evening before his death, he said, "the fears which have often trobled my mind, when thinking of the hour and article of death are all gone. All is well. The victory is won. I feel nothing but love; love to God, and love to all mankind." In this strain, he continued to indulge, to the comfort of his family, and the joy of his friends. As the last hour drew near, he was much inclined to sleep; but at intervals, he would say with a clear and distinct voice, "Jesus can make a dying bed, feel soft as downy pillows are; while on His breast I lean my head, and breathe my life out sweetly there." The hour came, and he slept away in death, without a struggle, or a groan. He left a wife and five children all of whom he committed to the keeping of a gracious God.

His body sleeps beside the mouldering bodies of his two infant sons; but his spirit is with Christ, chanting the chorus of the skies. Farewell to thee my Brother! I lament thy loss on earth; but to meet thee in Heaven, shall be the aim and effort of thy PASTOR.

News of the Week.

The Pope and the Jews.—One of the present Pope's most praiseworthy reformations has been in behalf of this opressed part of the population of Rome. They number about 8,000 and have hitherto been obliged to reside in an enclosed place, called the Ghetto, on the north side of the Tiber, entirely insufficient, and therefore miserably crowded and unwholesome. The gates of this inclosure were shut at sunset, and a Jew found outside after this time was imprisoned.—They were, however, allowed the privilege of depositing goods for merchandise in buildings without the enclosure. Another prohibition was from the practice of any of the liberal or artistical professions. The Pope has commenced examining into these and their other grievances, and has appointed a Commission to propose improvements. As a consequence, the confinement of the Jews to the Ghetto is already abolished and other ameliorations are about to follow. Cardinal Ferretti has avowed himself the patron and protector of the Israelites. The Roman populace have shown themselves worthy of liberty, by the cordiality with which they have welcomed the accession of this hitherto despised race to some of their own privileges. Dinners have been given to them, and bodies of artisans have visited the Ghetto to offer their congratulations. The Jews themselves are full of the most enthusiastic gratitude toward their benefactor, and have sent a deputation to the Pope, headed by their Rabbi, begging to be permitted to enrol themselves as a National Guard, armed at their own expense, to join in the defence of the Papal States. Some of their most learned Rabbis have also pronounced the present Pope the Messiah.—Scott's Weekly Paper.

Singular Arrest of a Rogue.—The Newark N. J., Advertiser of the 28th ult., says:—We mentioned, yesterday, that a lady of this city had been robbed of a gold watch and trinkets, by a forged note handed to her by a little boy, purporting to come from a friend asking the loan of them. On inquiry it appeared that the unsuspecting little fellow was accosted in the street by a man with his face muffled, and solicited to take the note. On returning to him with the watch the villain gave the boy a two shilling piece and left. The husband of the lady robbed, S. S. Morris, Esq., on being informed of the circumstance, suspected a fraud, and a slight circumstance pointed to a young man in New York, whither he went in company with an officer, Southward, taking along the lad, only about ten years of age in pursuit of him. While passing up Broadway with a New York officer, they met a stranger whom the lad identified as the villain who had deceived him. The fellow was soon brough to a confession by the address of the officer, the watch and its appendages were restored, and he taken in custody, to answer for his crime. The arrest certainly a remarkable case.

Destructive Fire.—Two steamboats Burnt.—Last evening about 9 o'clock, an alarm of fire was given, which was found to proceed from the burning of the steamer Wolcott, lying at the lower end of Paterson street. The Wolcott is almost entirely destroyed. She is the property of Mr. Robert Taylor, and had been laid up for the winter. There was no persons on board at the time, nor had there been any fire. She was insured to the amount of $4.000 in the Fireman's office. How the fire originated is a mystery.

Near the Wolcott, the splendid steamer Jewess, of the Norfolk line, lay, taking in passengers and baggage, and making preparations for her departure to Norfolk. She had no steam up, and on account of the ice in the basin, could not be moved from her position. She caught fire from the Wolcott, and was almost destroyed—the after-part almost entirely burnt out. Soon after she caught she was scuttled, and sunk gradually until she came to the bottom. The water however, was not very deep at the wharf, and that part of her upper works which was saved, was only rescued by the untiring exertions of the firemen. We understand there was no insurance upon her.

The steamer Planter was outside of the Jewess. She was hauled off and sustained but little damage.

Two schooners laden with wood, were lying along side of the Wolcott—one of them, the Volunteer, Captain Wright, from Wicomico river but last from Cone river, suffered to the amount of $300 or $400. By extraordinary exertions, they were hauled off and saved. Their safety may be placed to the credit of the members of the Liberty and United Fire Companies, who used their utmost exertions to preserve them. The firemen were all promptly on the ground, and as usual did good service.—Balt. Sun.

An application is before the Legislature for the incorporation of the "Dresden Bridge Company," for the purpose of erecting a toll bridge over the Muskingum river at the village of Dreden.

Dresden is a growing and enterprising place, and affords an excellent market for all kinds of produce, and hence we are not surprised to learn that the farmers in that vicinity, and especially those residing on the opposite side of the town manifest a deep interest in the success of this project.

Should the act pass, of which there can, we suppose be no doubt, the bridge we learn, will, unquestionably, be built at an early day. Success to this, and many more improvements of a similar kind.—O. Statesman.

Another Awful Steamboat Explosion.

Destruction of the Steamboat Blue Ridge—Twenty or Thirty Lives Lost!

The Cincinnati Chronicle is indebted to the accommodating clerk of the steamer Fairmont, A. J. McClure, just arrived from Pittsburgh, for a copy of the Gallipolis Journal Extra of yesterday, from which we gather the following particulars of the explosion and total destruction of the steamer Blue Ridge, on her downward trip to this city. This dreadful casualty occurred on Saturday night, at 1 o'clock, about three miles below Gallipolis, whilst a severe and terrible snow storm was raging with great fury.

She blew up, under way, with a tremendous explosion, reducing to a perfect wreck all of the cabin immediately over her boilers. She commenced sinking almost immediately, and in a few minutes the hull sunk leaving the cabin afloat—to the top of which such of the passengers as were saved retreated for security. As fast as possible, they were conveyed to the shore in the yawl; but before they were all relieved from their perilous situation the cabin had floated some six or eight miles. The passengers were taken to the farm houses in the immediate vicinity, where every possible attention was rendered to the sufferers by the hospitable occupants.

Information of the disaster was immediately sent to town, and a number of our citizens lost no time in repairing to the scene, to render what assistance they could—among whom was Docts. Naret, Morgan, Hibbard and Maxim, who were active wherever their services were required in supplying remedies.

The Captain, Wm. Summers, of this place, was one of the last to leave the wreck, although quite severely wounded by a fracture of the knee. To leave with him was George Beard, bar keeper, and a deck hand, Daniel Smith, both of whom were sadly disabled. Their sufferings must surely have been severe, as the night was cold, with snow.

The owner of the boat, James Paine, Esq., was the last one to leave the floating wreck, and indeed did not leave it until he had it safely moored at Eighteen creek, thus saving most of the baggage which the extent and suddenness of the explosion had compelled the passengers to leave in their state rooms.

Many of the passengers and crew, who had escaped unhurt, were compelled to swim ashore, and then wander in the cold, through the fields in search of shelter.—Some were one and two hours thus exposed.

As to the number lost we have not been able to arrive at any very just conclusion. Say those who know best, not over twenty. We think, from the best information we can gather, there must have been near seventy persons on board. We annex as full a list of the passengers and crew, both lost and saved, as we have been able to gather.

Jas. Ruffner, Kanawha; W. B. Kontz, do; Maj. Early, U. S. A: Wm. F. Whittaker, Ka., clerk; Daniel Goshorn, Ka.: Isaac Barker, Ka., B. F. Nickers and sister, Ka.; Mr. Stewart, wife and three children, Ka.; Mother-in-law, dead; Mr. Overshiner, missing; Mr. Tosso and daughter, Cin.; Joseph Brulon, Cin., missing. B. Gubert, Louisville; Mr. Wright; Samuel Langly, Gallipolis; F. J. Sanns, do., missing; G. Beard, do., scalded, and since dead; Joseph Miller, Va., missing, wife saved; Mr. Duke, Maysville: Mrs. Porter and child, Gallipolis; W. W. Cornafax, Ky., S. A. Paulett, Lynhburg, Va.; Captain Summers, Gallipolis, injured slightly; James Summers, 2d clerk, Gallipolis; Albert Summers, watchman, badly scalded; Captain James Payne, Ka.; P. Wright, Ka., badly hurt; H. Colt, 1st engineer; J. Kontz, 2d do; J. Bayse, slightly scalded and bruised; J Mays, carpenter; Wm. Gardner, deck hand; G. Gardner, do; S. Gardner, do; A Carpenter, do; John Carr, badly scalded; P. Carpenter missing; N. Souverain, Gallipolis, badly scalded, with leg broken; John Mann, fireman, colored; A Bentley, do, do; E. Scott, do, do; F. Scott, fireman, missing; D. Page, colored, badly scalded; A Lynch; Wm. Armsted; Ben. Dans, 1st cook; Gerge Crans; W. Hendricks, 1st clerk; Chambermaid; there were 15 deck passengers, fate not known.

In the above list, are all saved that are not marked dead or missing.

The Leha, lying at Pt. Pleasant, immediately repaired to the scene of the disaster, as soon as she received the information, and on Sunday evening brought to this place all of the wounded and disabled but two.

Along the shore, in the vicinity of the explosion, were found scattered trunks, boxes, hats, caps, coats, pants, &c., together with large portions of the wreck all presenting a most melancholy sight.

Few of the passengers saved anything—having to go ashore in their night clothes. There were six ladies on board, all of whom were saved except one.

Great praise is due Ham Hay, for his exertions in behalf of the sufferers on the wreck, having put off with a skiff to their rescue as soon he heard the explosion. He undoubtedly saved many lives.

The boat caught fire twice, but happily was speedily subdued.

The second pilot, sleeping in his room, was thrown on shore, a distance of about one hundred yards, and escaped with but some slight bruises. The second clerk, James Summers, was thrown into the river, and swam ashore, escaping without the least scratch.

Mr. Langly, although unmured by the explosion, still suffered severely from frozen feet, hands, &c. He swam ashore, having put his life-preserver in requisiton to buoy him up.

There were three horses on board, one of which was found on shore after the explosion. The other two were missing.

The explosion was undoubtedly caused by defective boilers, together with an insufficiency of water. The boilers had been in use nine years last fall.

The A. N. Johnson.

The loss of life on this boat has been, we regret to announce, greatly understimated. It now appears that instead of eighty lives being lost, in all, ONE HUNDRED AND FOURTEEN PERSONS WERE DESTROYED. This is truly terrible, and we hope that no efforts will be spared to trace out the cause of a calamity so horrible.

The Maysville Eagle, after a full investigation of the facts gives, the number above stated as the loss of life thus far ascertained.

Mr. A. Richardson, of Wheeling, and Mr. Robert McGowan, of Zanesville, have died since the accident, of their wounds.

The Eagle says,—'Fragments of several human bodies were found some distance from the boat, in a cornfield. Hardly any other circumstance could furnish so keen an idea of this scene of horror and distress.'

Mr. John Galbraith, of Birmingham, scalded, is at the Lee House, Maysville.

Bernard B. Killen and Joseph S. Nixon, of Pittsburgh, are at the house of Dr. Woods.

Mr. W. H. Dorsey's name appears among the wounded, as badly bruised. He is recovering. He was rated in the newspapers as second pilot—a mistake, he is a thorough pilot, ranking with the first, we believe.—Pittsburgh Journal.

Zanesville Improvements.

We have frequently alluded within the last year to the prospects of improved business in Zanesville, and it affords us pleasure to be able now to name two other enterprizes that are fully determined upon, and will be pushed ahead with all possible energy.

The first is a White Lead Factory, to be undertaken by JESSEE KEEN and HENLY L. CASE, (in which a third partner will probably be interested.) The matter is fully determined upon, but arrangements as to location and other particulars are awaiting further developments. The second is a Rolling Mill and Nail Factory, to be put into operation by a company from Pittsburgh. They have bought the HILLIER property with some adjoining lots on Underwood street near the river, and expect on the breaking up of winter to commence operations with a strong force, so as to get their buildings up by the first of October; when they expect to be ready for operations. They are practical men, having their own capital, and expect to remove here and engage personally in the business. An offer was made, we understand, for an investment of Zanesville capital, but they declined, as their means were sufficient. They expressed themselves highly pleased with the great facilities for coal, &c., and did not hesitate to say that the advantages in every respect, far exceeded their anticipations.

This is an important move and while it must bring quite an accession to the population, it will aid in developing the resources of the place, and its facilities for manufacturing purposes.—Zanes. Gaz.

THE SENATE has confirmed the nomination of the Hon. John W. Davis, late Speaker of the House, as the Commissioner to China, to take the place vacated by the death of the Hon. Alexander H. Everett; also that of Colonel Rowan, to Naples, to take the place of Colonel Polk; also of Dr. Niles, to Sardinia.

A SAD CASE.—We regret to learn, says the Germantown Telegraph, "that Mrs. Sarah Potts, residing in Moreland township, Montgomery county, an elderly lady, and the widow of Jonathan Potts, a soldier of the Revolution, died on the morning of the 19th inst., from the effects of arsenic, which was eaten with a piece of pie—the pie sprinkled with arsenic, having been placed in the cellar for the pupose of destroying rats, whence it was taken by the old lady in mistake. As soon as the fatal error was discovered, a physician was sent for, and everything done that the exigency of the case demanded. Hopes were entertained of her recovery until the Friday following, when a change took place for the worse, and death supervened."

Terrible Explosion of Gunpowder—Steamer Sea Bird Blown to Atoms—No lives Lost!!

LOUISVILLE, Jan. 7, P. M.

The Steamer Sea Bird from New Orleans for St. Louis loaded with one thousand kegs of gunpowder took fire on Wednesday last near Cape Girardeau. The crew and passengers had barely escaped, when the powder in the hold exploded, blowing the boat to atoms. The report was heard at a distance of forty miles.

Another Steamboat Explosion--Several Lives Lost.

ST. LOUIS, 11, 9 P. M.

The steamboat Planter burst both her boilers on Wednesday, 5th instant, at Jones' Ferry, Illinois river. The entire cabin was torn to fragments by the explosion. The wreck took fire, but by timely exertions the flames were extinguished. Five persons were killed, and the Captain, Clerk, and Engineer, and many passengers severely scalded—some fatally.

The steamer Bearstown, an Illinois river packet, came in collision with the Ohio Mail, near Portage, and sunk in five feet water—Ohio Mail unjured.

NEW TERRITORIES.—It is said that the Committee on Territories will, doubtless, propose four New Territorial governments in our present limits, viz: Nebraska, west of Missouri, Itaske, north of Wisconsin; Minesota, west of the same; and another Territory running up to the extreme north-western boundary. Here are four States, with eight Senators, ready in a few years to come into the Union, as non-slave-holding States.—Cin. Commercial.

THE ELEPHANT COLUMBUS AND HIS KEEPER.—A night or two ago we paid a visit to the Menagerie, feeling some curiosity to see and learn something respecting Columbus, since the arrival of his former favorite keeper, Townsend, who was sent for immediately after the recent trouble.—It appears that when Townsend, on his arrival, presented himself before the animal, he instantly recognized him, and gave numerous tokens of pleasure and gratification. The keeper accosted him in these words: "Well, Columbus, so you have been a bad boy, have you, you scoundrel?" The elephant on hearing this, snorted and put out his trunk and embraced him, gently and affectionately. No one, however timid, need be afraid to go and see Columbus now, for he is as docile and tractable as a lamb, under the eye and guidance of Townsend, who had previously been with him about ten years. Such was the intense curiosity of the public on Christmas Day to see the noble beast, that upwards of 7,000 persons visited the Menagerie.—Saturday Gleaner.

One thousand nine hundred and fifty-eight foreign emigrants arrived at New Orleans on the 20th ult. They were mostly from Germany.

FATAL ACCIDENT.—Martin Earhart, from Hamilton, clerk in Riley & Wood's Store, corner of Fifth and Vine streets, was killed in front of Coleman's Marble Factory, yesterday morning, at 12 o'clock, by a large timber, thrown from the upper story of the factory, which struck him on the back of the head. The person who threw the timber, previously looked out to be certain that no one was below. Mr Earhart, (who had gone into the house from more curiosity,) went out just at the moment when the timber was thrown. He died almost instantly. The deceased was about twenty years of age, and was much respected and esteemed.—Cin. Com.

NEW COUNTERFEIT.—A counterfeit ten, on the Lafayette Bank of Cincinnati, has made its appearance. Three of them were presented at Ellis & Morton's yesterday.—They are well executed, and may be passed off on those who are not good judges of money. Be on your guard.—Cin. Com.

APPOINTED.—Among the appointments recently made by the President, we observe the name of Thos. J. Morgan, of Ohio, as Secretary of legation to Brazil, in place of R. Walsh, recalled. And Ebenezer P. Kendrick, of Ohio, Surveyor of Virginia Military District, in Ohio, in place of Wm. M. Anderson, resigned.—Z. Gazette.

FATHER MATTHEW AT THE ANNIVESARIES.—The Journal of the American Temperance Union contains a letter from Father Matthew, which gives the following announcement.

"I shall, please God, leave Ireland for my mission to the United States early in the ensuing spring; and should circumstances permit, I shall, with pleasure and thankfulness, avail myself of the proffered invitation of Messrs. Grinnell, Minturn & Co., to sail under the command of that zealous friend and supporter of our cause, Capt. Knight, of whose acquaintance I feel proud. I hope to reach New York in time for your anniversary meeting."

SAGACITY OF THE ELEPHANT.—The tragical event at the Menagerie, resulting in the death of poor Kelly, has made the elephant the chief lion of Philadelphia, says the City Item. A morning or two after the terrible occurrence, the caring Driesbach took him into the ring for the purpose of dressing his wounds, made by sundry thrusts of pikes, lances and pitchforks, in the efforts to subdue him. The Elephant appeared to be ill at ease, and sought to attract the attention of Driesbach, by gently fondling him with his trunk, and then pointing to his foot, slightly raising it from the ground, and in various ways challenging particular notice. This aroused Driesbach's curiosity, and on inspection he discovered he had run a large splinter of white pine into his foot. Pincers were procured and the piece extracted, at which the joy of the monster knew no bounds and he repeatedly thanked Driesbach in the only way that an Elephant can thank any one. It is curious that he is quite friendly now with Driesbach, although for six years he has sought repeated to kill him.

TRUE, EVERY WORD.—Somebody, who writes more truthfully than poetically, says:—An angel without money is not thought so much of, now-a-days, as a devil with a bag full of guineas."

A BENEVOLENT MAN.—The Boston Journal say:—"John Augustus has, during the past year in our criminal courts, bailed 157 prisoners, most of whom were drunkards and minors. During the past six years, Mr. A has become bail for 635 persons, the whole amount of his bonds being $45,750, and only in a single instance has he been compelled to pay his bonds, and then only for $100.

THE SHIP FEVER.—The ship fever is raging at Quarantine on Staten Island, New York, to a fearful extent.—Nearly a thousand immigrants and seamen are inmates of the institutions, and a large portion of them are down with the fever. It is very fatal—so much so that a large number of the physicians and nurses have died of the disease. Some now are dangerously ill.

☞ THE PENNSYLVANIA CANAL.—A Card has been issued from the Canal Commission's Office, which announces that all the repairs to the main line and railroad between Philadelphia and Pittsburgh will be completed by the middle of February, and that the navigation will be resumed at as early a day in the Spring as the weather will permit the water to be let into the Canal.

On the 21st ult, a fire occurred at Detroit, which destroyed the following business places:—Mr. A. Kibben, grocery store; Schitter, tailor; A. B. Calhoun, grocer; J. B. Sabine, sadler; H. Mamvilla, shoemaker; M. Drongager, watchmaker; H. Kunze, shoemaker; Wm. Welling, shomaker; John Smith, shoemaker; Jacob Reigler, tinsmith; Dr. Brockhouse; E. Chope, blacksmith; Wm. Long, carriage-maker; Moore, livery stable;—$15,000 worth of goods were burned.

"FONETIC."—A student of phonography has come to the conclusion that the science is "2 hard 2 b lurnd, and fit only 2 b laft at."

SOMETHING UNCOMMON.—On Christmas day there was no ice in the North River at Poughkeepsie, a fact which has no precedent in the memory of the 'oldest inhabitant.' But a few years since, heavy laden teams were driven across on the ice about Caristmas time, at that point of the river.

TEACHING A MOTHER.—"With pleasure," says Mr. James Griffin, of Portsea, England, "I communicate to you a fact which came under my notice a short time since, of a boy in my class. This lad I have observed for his attention to his teacher, and general steadiness of behaviour at school. One Sabbath after he had repeated his lesson to me, I asked him if he thought he had received any benefit from attending the school? He hesitated some time, and then answered, with a pleasing modesty, "If I have not, sir, my mother has, for since I have belonged to the Sunday school I have got tickets enough to by a testament, and I took it home & taught my mother her letters, and now she can read any chapter in the Bible."

THE LARGEST CHURCH IN THE UNITED STATES.—The first African Church, (Baptist,) Richmond is the largest body of communcants, in connection with a single congregation, in the Union, being two thousand four hundred and seventy. The other churches of the same denomination in that city, report in addition two hundred and sixty-eight colored members. Total number, 2,728.—Sabbath Recorder.

The Italian Reform.

The European correspondent of the N. York Evangelist says, in reference to this subject: Already a religious or rather an ecclesiastical party is forming. The party of progress reproaches that of resistance with wishing to fatten on the hard earnings of the people in making gain of religion. Take the following words from an Italian journal, addressed to the retardatory class of the clergy:—"Ye are the Scribes and Pharisees of whom Jesus Christ spoke;—with whom to swear by the altar is nothing, but by that upon the altar is everything; ye are the whitened sepulchres, which appear fair without, but within are full of dead men's bones and all uncleanliness. You are those denominated by Jesus Christ serpents, and a generation of vipers. Ministers of the gospel, ye corrupt the gospel and reduce it to a dead letter and barren forms. Ye pretend to be the disciples of Simon Peter, while ye are only the disciples of Simon the magician; for you sell the things of God, and farm the ignorance of superstition. Ye are not the successors of the apostles who traversed the whole world, and endured martyrdom in defence of the truth. Ye are the successors of those Pharisees who persecuted and crucified Christ, because he preached the truth, and of whom he said, 'Woe unto you, Scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites: blind guides, who strain at a gnat, and swallow a camel.'"

DEMAND FOR NEW EFFORT.—The Committee of the American Tract Society say, in a recent appeal, they have commissioned one laborer after another to destitute fields, until the number of Colporteurs is more than 200: including those speaking the German, French, Danish, Spanish, and Welsh languages, and exclusive of 92 theological students, who have closed their labors for vacations. To meet the demand for publications, 170 persons are steadily employed in the printing office, who, with steam presses, produce not far from 3000 books daily, besides other publications. No less than $136,000 worth of books and tracts have been issued in eight months of the past year; and every tendency is to increased efficiency, with a single draw-back.

The Treasury of the Society is empty and embarrassed, and its wide-spread operations must be curtailed, at a time when every motive of benevolence impels to their expansion, unless there is immediate relief.

CENSORSHIP OF THE PRESS.—As an indication of the very marked advance of liberal sentiments at Rome, Rev. Mr. Boassel, the French correspondent of the New York Evangelist, mentions the following extraordinary concession of the Sovereign Pontiff: The Pope in order to avoid the responsibility of a somewhat pithy article in the journal, deposed the Censor, who had suffered it to pass. Immediately the editors of the seven principal papers in Rome declared that their editions would cease to appear until the liberal Censor was restored to his place. The Pope yielded and restored the Censor. It is one step towards the abolition of a preventive Censorship.

POLAND.—Letters from Presburgh say that the news from Gallicia is terrific. Famine and disease are committing such awful ravages among the peasantry, that in almost every village a third part, and even the half of the population is dead. All the misery of Ireland is being reacted in this wretched country.

AWFUL DEATH.—A man, named Hillary Warren, at Whaleysville, in the upper part of Somerset county, Md., was burnt up alive in his own house on Sunday morning, the 26th ult. Endeavoring to save some of his property from his dwelling, which was on fire, he was caught by the fall of a portion of the building, and before assistance could reach him, perished in the flames. His bones were all that were found of him after the rubbish had been removed.

FIRE ENGINE FOR TURKEY.—The barque Santee, which left Boston on Tuesday, for Smyrna, takes out a new fire-engine for the Turkish Government, to form a more efficient fire department for Constantinople.

SOUTHERN TELEGRAPH.—We learn from the Charleston Courier, that the wires between Fayetteville and Raleigh are up, and ready for operation, and that the work is rapidly progressing from these points, both north and south. There is every probability that, before the end of this month, Charleston will be in instant communication with Portland, in the State of Maine. The further progress of annihilating time and space, southward and westward, is rapidly going on.

A NATURAL CURIOSITY.—The late freshet, in washing away a portion of the bank of Claypool's Run, in Greenfield township, has brought to light a relic of antiquity. Mr. Isaac Claypool discovered, a few days after, a large Elk-horn, which is now in our office, subject to the inspection of the curious. It measures about three feet in length, and has on it five prongs. The main prong is broken off—probably two feet of it. As it is, weighs about six pounds.—Lanc. Gaz.

FACTORY BURNT.—The cotton factory at Fitchville, Conn., near Norwich, was destroyed by fire on Thursday morning last, and the greater part of the machinery was involved in the ruin. It was owned by Mr. Asa Fitch, was new, and estimated to have cost about $140,00, and was insured to the amount of $80,000. The sudden alarm occasioned such a shock to the watchman Austin, that he went into successive fits which soon terminated in his death.

A NOVEL PERFORMANCE.—The greatest novelty that has ever been seen, is at present exhibiting at New York, and consists of a number of canary birds, some 20 or more, that have been trained to draw carriages, wear cocked hats and coats a la militaire, fire off small cannons, dance on the tight rope, stand on their heads, and perform various other feats, that display a capacity to learn and be trained, which no one could imagine the feathered race possessed. As might be expected, the performances are witnessed by hundreds of ladies and children daily.

Steamboats Disasters.

The recent steamboat disaster on the Ohio river, an account of which will be found in another column, was of so fatal and horrible a character, that we at first experienced some reluctance in placing the details in our colums. We would indeed prefer to save our readers from the infliction of such a tale of suffering and death—should we not say of murder?—but it is one of those painful duties of the press which cannot be escaped. Would that we could suggest some plan by which such wholesale destruction of human life, under circumstances so sudden and afflicting, could be prevented, or their occurrence even rendered less probable than they are at present, among the travelling community.

Some years ago, there were laws passed, we believe by Congress, the object of which was in some way to give greater security to passengers in steamboats, and especially on our Western waters. The effects of those laws, however, do not appear to have had a very salutary influence in restraining the rashness, and in promoting the vigilance of steamboat owners, commanders and engineers. And, inasmuch as those laws appear to have failed, either in their stringency, or in the neglect or impracticability of their execution, it becomes the duty of Congress to make a further effort to protect the lives of our citizens against the wantoness, ignorance, and heartless cupidity of all concerned in the transportation of passengers either by railroads or steamboats.—Saturday Courier.

The Sandy and Beaver Canal has been completed. It commences at Glasgow, on the Ohio river, distant about forty miles from Pittsburgh, and, passing through the richest agricultural region of the State of Ohio, terminates in the town of Bolivar, on the Ohio canal, seventy-three miles from the beginning.

A Frenchman, while passing, intoxicated, at the time, through a street of Cincinnati which had been overflowed in the late freshet, fell into a cellar filled with water and was drowned. Great efforts to recover his body had proved unsuccessful.

FAIRFIELD MOVING.—The citizens of Fairfield Co. held a large meeting at Lancaster, on the 6th instant, to take into consideation the propriety and importance of a rail-way connection with Newark, Columbus or some point between those towns. A series of pertinent resolutions were adopted, and able addresses were delivered.—Zanes. Courier.

A flagrant insult was offered to a worthy creature, at Pittsburgh, a few days since; a fellow offered a lighted cigar to one of the elephants of a menagerie. The elephant acknowledged his politeness with a wipe over the ribs, which sent him half across the arena, Big as the elephant was he was not great beast enough to smoke in public!—Saturday Courier.

SKELETONS.—In digging on the line of railroad in Sanbornton, N. H., eight skeletons were found in a sitting posture, facing towards the east. It is supposed that the spot was once used by Indians as a burial ground.

A LUCKY PRINTER.—Thomas M. Myers, one of the United States Volunteers, has married a Mexican Senorita, worth $300,000. Mr. Myers is a graduate—not of a college—but of the Village Record Printing Office, published at West Chester in Pa.—N. Y. Sun.

The Law of Newspapers.

1. Subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, are considered wishing to continue their subscriptions.

2. If the subscribers order the discontinuance of their papers, the publishers may continue to send them till all cash charges are paid.

3. If subscribers neglect or refuse to take their papers from the offices to which they are directed, they are held responsible until they have settled their bill, and order their paper discontinued.

4. If subscribers remove to other places without informing the publishers, and the paper is sent to the former direction, they are held responsible.

5. The Courts have decided that refusing to take a paper or periodical from the office, or removing and leaving it uncalled for, is "prima facie" evidence of intentional fraud.

Liabilities of those who take Periodicals.

The law declare that any person, to whom a periodical is sent, is responsible for payment, if he receives the paper, or makes use of it, even if he has never subscribed for it, or has ordered it to be stopped. His duty in such a case is not to take the paper from the office or persons with whom the paper is left, but to notify the publisher that he does not wish for it.

If papers are sent to a Post Office, Store, or any other place of deposite,, and are not taken by the person to whom they are sent, the Postmaster, Storekeeper, &c., are responsible for the payment, until he returns the paper, or informs the publisher that they are lying dead in the office.

THE OHIO CULTIVATOR FOR 1848.

Published at Columbus, Ohio, on the 1st and 15th of each month. M. B. Bateham, Editor and Proprietor. Terms, $1 per year—four copies for $3—payment invariably in advance.

THE fourth volume of the Ohio Cultivator will commence Jan. 1st. 1848. This paper has now become so well known that it is scarcely necessary to speak of its character, or to allude to the commendations it has received from the Public Press and other sources. The editor is determined to spare no pains on his part to sustain the reputation of the work, and make each succeeding volume more useful than the preceding one. Our motto is "upward and onward;" and the object of the "Cultivator" is not only to collect and disseminate valuable facts and information relating to practical agriculture, but to inspire 'Farmers' with more just conceptions of the dignity of their profession; to induce them to cultivate the 'Mind' as well as the 'soil,' and thus elevate themselves to that position which it is their duty and privilege to occupy as 'American Agriculturists," in this age of Progress and Improvement.

With its very large list of contributors, numbering over "two hundred," most of them practical farmers in the West, the pages of the "Cultivator" will contain the results of "Experience," as well as the teachings of "Science;" and being written or selected with special reference to the climate, productions and farming of Ohio, this paper will be found more valuable than any other for the farmers of this and the adjoining States. It will contain the latest intelligence of the "Markets" of this country and England; notices of the weather and the crops; descriptions (with engravings,) of improved implements, machines, &c.; instructions in gardening and fruit culture; rearing and management of domestic animals; construction of farm buildings, fences, &c.; and a "Ladies' Department" devoted to household affairs, useful receipts, &c.

The friends of Improvement in Ohio and adjoining States are requested to obtain and forward subscribers for the Ohio Cultivator. Remember that the price is only "seventy-five cents" each, when four or more names are sent by one person. All subscriptions must commence with the first number of the volume; a complete index is furnished at the end of the year. Specimen numbers and a prospectus will be forwarded to all who desire them.

☞ "Now is the time to subscribe!" Letters with remittances may be sent by mail at the risk and expense of the publisher. Address,

"BEHOLD I STAND AT THE DOOR, AND KNOCK."

BY A. C. COXE.

In the silent midnight watching, list—thy bosom door!
How it knocketh, knocketh, knocketh—knocketh evermore!
Say not 'tis thy pulse's beating;—'tis thy heart of sin!
'Tis thy Savior knocketh—He crieth, "Rise and let me in."

Death comes down, with reckless footstep, to the hall and hut:
Think you death will stand a knocking when the door is shut?
Jesus waiteth, waiteth, waiteth,—but the door is fast!
Grieved, away the Savior goeth:—death breaks in at last.

Then, 'tis thine to stand—entreating Christ to let thee in,
At the gate of heaven beating, wailing for thy sin.
Nay, alas! thou foolish virgin! hast thou then forgot,
Jesus waited long to know thee, but he knows thee not.

THE FARMER.

"The farmer's life's the life for me"—
I love its quiet scenery!
I love its shades, its hills and dales,
I love its cheerful fireside tales,
I love to tend the flocks and herds,
I love to hear the singing birds,
I love the sweet salubrious air,
I love the prospect wide and fair;
I love to plow, I love to sow,
I love to gather, love to mow,
I love the new mown grass to smell,
I love to hear the tinkling bell,
I love to tread the glassy lawn,
Along the brooks, among the corn;
I love—the whole, but can't rehearse,
His pleasures all, in prose or verse.

HOLLOW! HOLLOW!

I stood beneath a hollow tree—
The blast it hollow blew—
I thought upon the hollow world,
And all its hollow crew,
I thought of all their hollow schemes,
The hollow hopes we follow,
Imagination's hollow dreams
All hollow, hollow, hallow!

A crown it is a hollow thing,
And hollow heads oft wear it:
The hollow title of a King,
What hollow hearts oft bear it!
No hollow wiles or honeyed smiles
Of ladies fair, I follow;
For beauty sweet still hides deceit,
'Tis hollow, hollow, hollow!

The hollow Tory but betrays
The hollow dupes who heed him;
The hollow critic vends his praise,
The hollow fools who feed him;
The hollow friend who takes your hand
Is but a summer swallow:
What e'er I see is like this tree,
All hollow, hollow, hollow!

Itinerancy,---The Restrictive Rule.

NO. II.

MR EDITOR,—That the gospel ministry is of divine institution, and that the Saviour designed his church to be thus served, there is no doubt. But that he designed that its ministers should be itinerants, in any way whatever resembling Methodist itinerancy, is not the case. The rule to which I object, is found in Art. 10, Sec. 7 of the Constitution. "No rule shall be passed, to authorize the Annual Conferences to station their ministers and preachers longer than three years successively in the same circuit, and two years successively in the same station." This I find to be contrary to primitive usage. The Apostles were travelling preachers, but not such itinerants as Methodist ministers. No example of ministerial labors, thus restricted and trammeled, existed in the primitive church. The twelve Apostles of our Lord were constituted missionaries for the whole world. There was no church yet in existence. The means for its erection were put into their hands. They were then to go forth teaching, and proving the divinity of their teaching by working miracles; until they had discipled all nations. Accordingly, wherever they went, they not only preached the gospel, and made converts, but they planted churches. Over each of these churches they appointed and ordained ministers to teach and oversee them. These ministers were each placed in his particular church, without any defined limitation of his service therein. Says Eusebius, in his Ecclesiastical History, "that Paul preached to the Gentiles, and established churches from Jerusalem and around as far as Illyricum, is evident both from his own expressions, and from the testimony of Luke in the book of Acts. And in what provinces Peter also proclaimed the doctrine of Christ, the doctrine of the New Covenant, appears from his own writings which he addressed to the Hebrews in the dispersion throughout Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia and Bithynia. But how many, and which, actuated by a genuine zeal, were judged suitable to feed the churches established by the Apostles, it is not easy to say, any further than may be gathered from the writings of Paul. Says Lord King's account of the primitive church, St. Andrew principally preached the gospel in Sythia, St. Bartholomew in India, St. Matthew in Parthia, St. John in the Lesser Asia, and all the rest of the Apostles had their particular provinces allotted them, wherein they went forth preaching the gospel; and as they came to any city, town, or village, they published to the inhabitants thereof the blessed news of life and immortality through Jesus Christ, constituting the first converts of every place through which they passed bishops and deacons of these churches which they there gathered. So saith Clemens Romanus. The Apostles went forth preaching in city and country, appointing the first fruits of their ministry for bishops, and deacons, generally leaving those bishops and deacons to govern and enlarge those particular churches over which they had placed them, whilst they themselves passed forward, planted other churches, and placed governors over them." Mosheim, after speaking of the Apostles and Evangelists, says, "in those early times every christian church consisted of the people, their leaders, and the ministers." And again, "the church was undoubtedly provided from the beginning with inferior ministers." And in speaking of the presbyters or bishops, he says, "let none however confound the bishops of this primitive and golden period with those of whom we read in the following ages; for tho' they were both distinguished by the same name, yet they differed in many respects. A bishop, during the first and second century, was a person who had the care of one christian assembly, which, at that time, was generally speaking small enough to be contained in a private house. In this assembly he acted, not so much with the authority of a master, as with the zeal and diligence of a faithful servant. He instructed the people, performed the several parts of divine worship, attended the sick, and inspected the circumstances and supplies of the poor;" and was thus in every respect their settled pastor. This settled pastor, or bishop, is, in Rev. 2, 3, called the Angel of the church. Says Paul to Titus 1, 5, "for this cause left I thee in Crete, that thou should est set in order the things that are wanting, and ordain elders in every city, as I had appointed thee." Matthew Henry, upon this text says; "to ordain elders in every city; that is ministers who were mostly out of the older and most understanding and experienced christians; or if younger in years, yet such as were grave and sober in their deportment and manners. These presbyters, or elders, were to have the ordinary and stated care and charge of the churches; to feed and govern them, and perform all pastoral work and duty in and toward them. The word is used sometimes more largely for any who bear ecclesiastical functions in the church; and so the Apostles were presbyters or elders; (1 Pet. 5, 1;) but here it is meant of ordinary fixed pastors, who labored in the word and doctrine, and were over the churches in the Lord, such as are described here throughout this chapter." So that in the primitive church there was no thought of limiting the period of ministerial service to any one place but by the work which the minister had in that place to do, and this was left to be determined by the openings of Divine Providence. The Apostles had filled their mission in relation to any place so soon a church was organized and placed under the care of proper ministers who were to be their settled pastors, and in that place they did not think of spending more time unless the church there should require Apostolic assistance, leaving the ministry of the word, and the government of the church in each place to these settled pasters. Lord King says, "the primitive Apostolic bishops," that is those ordained by the Apostles, "constantly resided with their flocks, conscientiously applying themselves with the utmost dilligence and industry to the promotion of the spiritual welfare of those that were committed to their trust; employing themselves in all acts of piety and offices of charity; so leading a laborious mortified life, till either a natural or a violent death removed them from earth to heaven where they were made priests to the Most High, and were infinitely remunerated for all their pains and sorrows; and so leaving their particular flocks on earth to be fed and governed by others who should succeed them in their places;" thus frequently continuing in the same field of labor during their whole life. So the first years of the Christian Church found it provided with extraordinary ministers. These were Apostles, Evangelists, and Prophets; i. e. those who spoke by means of the spirit of inspiration bringing to their minds truths and words of which they otherwise had no knowledge. These only continued during the lives of the Apostles. They left no successors in possession of their gifts The successors which they left were the ordinary ministers of the word whom they ordained in every eity, and these were not ordained for travelling ministers, but to take charge of, or labor in some church, and have their residence among them. The Apostles, then, in organizing the Christian Church, left it, and designed that it should be provided with settled pastors, which were called by them indiscriminately, presbyters, elders, bishops, pastors, or teachers. Now, if they had intended to organize an itinerant ministry, and that itinerancy to consist in removal once in so many years, why did they not say to James tho' first bishop of Jerusalem, and to Euodius the first bishop of Antioch, and to Sinus the first bishop of Rome, and, so to those in every city, ye shall in no wise have the oversight of, or labor among the people of your charge more than two years successively, but shall constantly exchange among yourselves from city to city. Would not the Apostles have looked upon this as trifling with sacred things, and contrvening the order of Divine Providence? But in the primitive church nothing of this kind existed, that the contrary every where existed, is a fact well known to all students of ecclesiastical history,

Another Hard Case,

"The case of W. W. Paul, referred to the next Annual Conference, he not being present."

MR. EDITOR: The above sentence is found in the 4th no. 9th vol. Western Recorder, under the head of "Appointments of the Indiana Conference Methodist Protestant Church, 1847," and over the signatures of "Thomas Shipp, S. Morrison, H. Collings, J. Burton and J. Ewbank, Stationing Committee." Now, sir, to my understanding, this is not exactly the whole truth. It is true that I was not personally present at what is called the Indiana Conference, (although my name is published as such among the "members of Conference,") yet I was present by letter in which I fairly stated my objections to the legality of the then assembling of the members of the Indiana Conference, M. P. Church, and inasmuch as they have withheld that document, they ought not to have published me as being one of their number, and by implication a malefactor at that. For who ever heard of a case before being referred simply for not being personally "present?" No, sir, my "not being present" is hardly the real cause of this indirect thrust at my reputation, and I hereby call upon them to do themselves as well as me the justice to publish my letter. The fact of referring my case is an acknowledgement that they had no right to examine my "case" or assign me an appointment as a member of the Indiana Conference. I ask them, why hold me up to public gaze, by giving me an unheard of appointment? Only look at it: "The case of W. W. Paul referred to the next Annual Conference, he not being present." Who can tell me what the duties of such an appointment are? To me it appears plain that "the Indiana Conference, Methodist Protestant Church," is among the things that have been.

MISCELLANEOUS.

From the American Messengar.

THE POPE.

Pope Pius IX is a remarkable man. He gives promise of becoming as famous as most of his predecessors in the Papal chair have been infamous. At a single stride he has leaped from the position of stereotyped, unyielding resistance to reform, held by the infallible tyrants of the Pontificate, in all past ages, into that of a reformer and champion of civil liberty. By a bold, firm, and yet prudent policy, he has thus far thwarted the cunning intrigues of the Jesuits, and the evil machinations of the nobility, and has set at naught the power of Austria. He has accomplished more in the first year of his reign, for the melioration of the condition of his priest-ridden and oppressed subjects, than all the Popes together have achieved since Pepin received the triple crown.

No wonder that the Italians rally around their sovereign when he proclaims an amnesty which gives liberty to six thousand offenders against the throne; when he surrounds himself with a council of able laymen, with but a single cardinal; when he grants trial by jury, in place of the inquisition; when he invites a free and unceremonious audience on the part of his aggrieved subjects; when he allows his kingdom to be penetrated by railroads, the mortal dread of his predecessors; when, in a word, he knocks off the fetters which have bound the minds and bodies of the people of Italy for twelve centuries. Well may the friends of freedom throughout the world hail these wonderful movements with gratiude and joy. It was a fitting expression of sympathy that was recently given in Broadway Tabernacle, on behalf of the American people, when all parties and all sects united in cheering the Pontiff in his glorious career as a civil reformer.

We would not scan the motives of the Pope in this marvellous change in the policy of Rome. If, perchance, he is a good man, and is sincerely desirous of promoting the happiness of his people, none will rejoice more sincerely than those who regard it as altogether anomalous that a good man should be the incumbant of the papal chair. If he is an ambitious man, he has chosen the only road open to his ambition; for he could not hope to rival in wickedness and oppression most of those who have preceded him. He needed only to declare himself the friend of liberty, and to respect the rights and promote the well-being of his people, to arrest the attention of the world, and to reach the highest goal of fame. He had the shrewdness to see this, and has marked out his course wisely. He may have had the penetration to perceive, that unless he mounted the rising wave of popular liberty, having its source here, and rushing over Europe, he would be overwhelmed by a tide he could not otherwise breast or control Whatever may have been the motive, his conduct is worthy of all honor; and this new convert from the ranks of despotism to civil liberty will give it fresh power and augmented resources in its struggles with its titled foes throughout the earth.

But will papal reforms cease with the restoration of a moiety of civil right? Is this movement a mere "tub to the whale," to divert the attention of the people from other and more serious wrongs which demand redress? Or will a taste of freedom by the masses only arouse those longings which will never be satisfied until the inalienable rights of man are respected, and the fetters which have bound the soul for ages are broken?

Reforms never travel backwards. Pius IX mistakes the spirit of the age, and the spirit of his people, if he thinks he can quiet the storm now raging, until it has swept away the framework of that stupendous system of oppression, under which the world has sighed and groaned for centuries. Papal supremacy and infallibility, though rendered more tolerable by becoming more tolerant—the denial of the Bible to the masses—auricular confession—Jesuitism—priestly power—must yield, one by one, before the majestic strides of liberty—liberty of thought and action—liberty of printing and reading—liberty of conscience. The stagnation of centuries is broken up. The Pope heads the movement for reform in state affairs; the people will yet take the reform in church affairs into their own hands, unless the Pope should have sagacity enough to lead him to timely and consistent action in behalf of religious liberty.

The duty of the Protestant world, in this new state of things in the papal world, is obvious. In so far as the Pope ceases to be a despot, and becomes a reformer, let us give him our sympathy and praise. Let us pray for him, that he may be led to "do justly, and love mercy," that every projected reform may be achieved, and that new plans for the benefit of his people may be formed & executed. Let us strike for religious liberty throughout the world. The people of Rome will ere long, join us in asserting the right of every man to an open Bible and a free conscienc. Rome has begun to yield to popular opinion. Let that opinion be concentrated on the single point of the popular right to the Bible, and Rome is vanquished. To secure such a result, it is due to Roman Catholics in this and other lands, that we who have the Bible, and a free Gospel, should impart it to them, man by man, family by family with pains-taking, love and prayer. There was never a more hopeful time for influencing for good the individual followers of Rome. The inspirations of liberty, which now swell the breasts of millions, can be made to contribute to their deliverance from spiritual thraldom. Give American Catholics Bibles, good books, words of love, and humble prayer; send them colporteurs to point them to a crucified Jesus and a spiritual faith; and a reform more glorious than that projected by the Pope will move on among the masses here, that will contribute to the emancipation of the world from civil and spiritual despotism,

AMERICAN APPLES IN ENGLAND.—The London Sun says: "The arrivals of apples from the United States of America, are beyond precedent in extent, and the quality is remarably fine. In several instances vessels arriving from New York have brought as many as nearly one thousand packages of fruit, of the excellent description known as the American New town pippin."

Advantage of not Having a Quarter of a Dollar.

On Saturday at one of the way-stations on the railroad between this city and Worcester, a coarsely-dressed wayfaring man stepped into one of the second-class cars in the hope of getting trusted for his fare by the Conductor. But he found he had reckoned without his host. The Conductor, on learning that he could not pay him a quarter of a dollar, the required amount, ordered him to get out of the car. The poor man thought it a very hard case, that because he had on a homespun coat, he could have no credit.—He was fatigued, and in a hurry to reach Boston. But the Conductor was more inexorable than Charon on the subject of fares; and the way-faring man was compelled, much to his chagrin, to leave the train and trudge along on foot.

He cast a wishful eye after it as it whirled along, with the snorting and screaming engine at its head. Wistfully and angrily he looked, as turning a curve in the track, it was snatched from his sight. Harsh thoughts rose in his mind—harsh tho'ts of Providence and of his fellow-men. Why, when so many were comfortably provided for, was he to be held at arm's length by poverty? And, when drooping with weariness, why should he be obliged to drag himself along from station to station on foot, while others, on their cushioned seats, were borne at almost lightning speed over the ground to their luxuriant homes? And then he thought of the Conductor, who had peremptorily thrust him from the car; and he clenched his fist, and half wished he had him there before him, that he might make him feel its weight.

On and on he trudged, revolving these matters, and accusing his Maker, though almost unconsciously, of cruelty and injustice. At last, on turning an angle in the track, he saw to his surprise the cars at a stand-still. What could be the matter? He quickened his pace, and as he drew nearer, curiosity urged him to run to the spot, where an excited crowd had already gathered.—He made his way through them, and beheld scattered upon the ground, the mutilated and disfigured bodies of six of the very men who had been in the car from which he had been ejected!—The wayfarer was not a stock or a stone. He at once recalled the train of thoughts in which he had been indulging, and the tears started to his eyes—tears at once of gratitude and shame. He could have taken the conductor by the hand and blessed him as the blind instrument of a saving Providence. He left the scene of catastrophe "a wiser and a better man."

The Poor Boy.

I know I am poor; but I am not ragged, and I will try to be honest. I can go to Sunday School, and there I can get many a tract and pretty book, and my teacher says, if I get the knowledge of Christ, I shall be richer than many a man who owns a million of dollars. Yes, I am poor! But not poor enough to steal, or to beg, or to lie. And I am not near poor enough to sell on Sunday, or to go to grog shops.

What if I am poor? My teacher says the blessed Saviour was poor. He says the Apostles were poor. And he says God loves the poor.

I will sing a little before I work:

"He that is down need fear no fall,
He that is poor no pride;
He that is humble ever shall
Have God to be his guide."

Thank ye for that, good John Bunyan. They say you were a poor boy yourself once; no better than a tinker. Very well, you are rich enough now, I dare say.

I don't see after all, but that I can sing as gaily as if I had a thousand dollars. Money does not lighten people's hearts. There is Squire Jones; he is rich, but I never heard him sing a hymn in my life. His cheek is paler than mine, and his arm is thinner, and I am sure he can't sleep much sounder than I do.

No, I am not so poor either. This fine spring morning I feel quite rich. The fields and flowers are mine. The red clouds yonder, where the sun is going to rise, are mine. All these robins, and thrushes and larks are mine. I never was sick in my life. I have bread and water. What could money buy for me more than this?

I thought I was poor, but I am rich.

The birds have no purse or pocket book, neither have I. They have no pains or aches, neither have I. They have food and drink, so have I. They are cheerful, so am I. They are taken care of by their Creator, so am I.

Testimonials.

Dr. Rush says of tobacco—"It impairs appetite, produces dyspepsia, tremors, vertigo, headache, and epilepsy. It injures the voice, destroys the teeth, and imparts to the complexion a disagreeable, dusky brown."

Dr. Boerhaave says that "since the use of tobacco has been so general in Europe, the number of hypochondriacal and consumptive complaints has increased by its use?"

Cr. Cullen says: "I have known a small quantity snuffed up the nose to produce giddiness, stupor and vomiting. There are many instances of its more violent effects, even of its proving a mortal poison."

Dr. Darwin says, "It produces disease of the salivary glands and the pancreas, and injures the power of digestion."

Dr. Tissott once saw the smoking of it prove fatal.

Our own highly distinguished Dr. Muzzy, speaks thus:—

"Tobacco is one of the most active and deadly vegetable poisons known. It acts directly upon the nervous power, enfeebling, deranging, or extinguishing, the action of life."

Ministers of the Gospel!

Will you please articulate a little more clearly and distinctly, in your pulpit exercises. Give the vowel and consonants their full and proper sounds. There is much complaint, especially in large churches and "College Halls." If we are not heard, or understood, we might as well speak in an unknown tongue, or to the whistling winds. The loss is irreirievable, besides the mental labor to the hearer is painful in the extreme.

Another evil still more rebukeable.—Some public speakers commence their exercises in a kind of low, mumbling, indistinct, sing-song tone, rendering it impossible to catch the idea, even should the hearer have an ear-trumpet placed at the speaker's mouth. Now this is intolerable! These same men have volume enough, for before they conclude, the very beams and rafters are made to crack with their thundering tones. "A bird that can sing, and will not sing, should be made to sing."

N. B. Would it not be well for students, in their academical and collegiate course, to take a few lessons touching on this point? Even a whisper, uttered distinctly, may be heard to the extremity of a large audience.—Golden Rule.

CHILD CHOKED BY A FISH BONE.—A child in New York, named Martha Wehmann, about 3 years old, was almost instantly choked to death by a small fish bone getting in her throat.

What Hinders Revival.

Of course we do not mean that when God designs "to revive his work," he cannot do it; but the question is to be understood in the same sense in which it is said, "Jesus could not do many mighty works there because of their unbelief." In speaking on this topic last Sabbath evening, a venerable father said:

"Impenitent sinners cannot prevem a revival.'

"Devils cannot prevent a revival."

"It is the 'lukewarm church' which prevents a Revival, the lifeless corpse of Christianity which she exhibits, the dull unmeaning prayer, the worldly life and inconsistent walk of professors—these prevent a revival, these grieve the Holy Spirit, keep the impenitent in countenance, and hurry their souls to hell!"

Ought not every church, every individual member of every church, solemnly and prayerfully to lift his heart to heaven and inquire, "Lord is it I?"—Pres. Advocate.

HEBREWS I. 6.—And again, when he bringeth in the first-begotten into the world, he saith, And let all the angels of God worship him.

It was during the reign of Theodosius the Great, in the fourth century, that the Arians, through the lenity of the emperor, made their most vigorous attempts to undermine the doctrine of the divinity of Jesus Christ. The event, however, of making his son Arcadius partner with himself on the throne, was happily over-ruled to his seeing the God-dishonoring character of their creed. Among the bishops who came to congratulate him on the occasion, was the famous and esteemed Ampilochus, who, it is said, had suffered much under the Arian persecution. He approached the emperor, and, making a very handsome and dutiful address, was going to take his leave. "What," said Theodosius, "do you take no notice of my son? Do you not know that I have made him a partner with me in the empire?" Upon this the good old bishop went to young Arcadius, then about sixteen years of age and putting his hand upon his head, said, "The Lord bless thee, my son!" and immediately drew back. Even this did not satisfy the emperor.—"What," said he, "is this all the respect you pay to a prince, that I have made of equal dignity with myself?" Upon this, the bishop arose, and looking the emperor in the face, with a tone of voice solemnly indignant, said, "Sir, do you so highly resent my apparent neglect of your son, because I do not give him equal honor with yourself?—What must the eternal God think of you, who have allowed his co-equal and co-eternal Son to be degraded in his proper divinity in every part of your empire?"—This was a two-edged sword in the heart of the emperor. He felt the reproof to be just and confounding, and no longer would seem to give the least indulgence to that creed, which did not secure divine glory to the "Prince of Peace."

From the American Messenger.

The Click of the Clock.

"It clicks the midnight hour away;
It clicks the darkness into day."

Arise, O my soul, for the hour of prayer is come. The morning dawns upon the mountains; it is time to pray. Not that any hour is unseasonable with God. The shadow of the earth never reaches his throne. "God is light, and in him is no darkness at all." 1 John, 1: 5. Be sure, then, at what hour soever you come to the throne, you will find him there, and find him awake, ready to hear.

It is written of the Lord Jesus, in the days of his humiliation, "In the morning rising up a great while before day, he went out and departed into a solitary place, and there prayed."—Mark 1: 35. Again: "And when he had sent the multitudes away, he went up into a mountain apart to pray; and when the evening was come, he was there alone." Matt. 14; 23. Once more: "It came to pass in those days, that he went out into a mountain to pray, and continued all night in prayer to God." Luke 6: 12. He had not such a closet as many have, a comfortable, retired room in their own house, provided for them by Him; therefore he went abroad into retired places to find his closet. He had not so much leisure as many have, who can command their time as they choose; therefore, in the absence of the multitudes, a great while before day or at a late hour when the work of the day was done, or at midnight when the world slept, he sought opportunity to pray.

Be not afraid, then, when you hear the click of the clock, though it be at midnight, to come to the throne. Your Lord used to visit it at that hour. Blame not the poor man, who retires to the haymow, or into the forest, or behind a rock, to find a closet. No hour is unseasonable, no place unsuitable for prayer.

But the morning is peculiarly the hour of prayer; because then we are fresh and vigorous, and all our powers are awake. The click before day admonishes of the hour. Another thing, too, is in its admonition. Time flies. The click gives notice: "time flies; time flies." Soon it will be too late to pray. For that same click measures off moments, hours, weeks, months, years. It continues to click—but where are we? Not a stroke but measures the same moment for all mankind. Not a stroke but is a knell for some mortal. Thus, at every stroke, some one ceases to pray, or to have time to pray. The believer exchanges prayer for praise; the unbeliever, the time to pray for an eternity of wailing. O then, let this little monitor quicken every one to do with his might whatsover his hand findeth to do. For "now is the accepted time."

"The moments fly!—a minute's gone!
The minutes fly!—an hour is run!
The day is fled—the night is here!
So flies a week—a month—a year!" E Y.

A Jew's Opinion of the Savior

Mr. Noah, of New York, himself a Jew by profession, has expressed the following opinion of Jesus, the true Messiah, which will be new to many of our readers, and contains some sentiments not unworthy of an avowed professor of the Christian religion:—

"It has been said, and with some commendations of what was called my liberality, that I did not in this discourse term Jesus of Nazareth an imposter. I have never considered him as such. The imposter generally aims at a temporal power,—attempts to subsidize the rich and weak believer, and draw around him followers of influence, whom he can control. Jesus was free from fanaticism; his was a quiet, subdued, retiring faith; he mingled with the poor, communed with the wretched, avoided the rich, and rebuked the vain-glorious. In the calm of evening he sought shelter in the secluded groves of Olivet, or wandered pensively on the shores of Galilee. He sincerely believed in his mission. He courted no one, flattered no one: in his political denunciations he was pointed and severe—in his religion calm and subdued. These are not characteristics of an imposter; but, admitting that we give a different interpretation to his mission, when one hundred and fifty millions believe in his divinity, and we see around us abundant evidences of the happiness, good faith, mild government and liberal feelings which sprang from his religion, what right has any one to call him an imposter? That religion which is calculated to make mankind great and happy, cannot be a false one."

LINES

Composed on hearing the death of Miss Hannah Ann Bassett, who departed this life January 5th, 1848, aged about 19 years.

O forbid not the tears of sorrow to flow,
While I touch to a requiem, mournful and low,
The plaintive notes of my lyre;
'Tis said that a tear will relieve in part
The grief that preys on the wounded heart
Like a slow consuming fire.

O bright are the links of love's golden chain,
But their lustre and beauty may not remain,
They are severing, day by day.
The fairest flowers, of loviest bloom,
Though reared o'er friendship's early tomb,
Are withering fast away.

As the blighting worm is oft concealed,
And the fate of the beautiful blossom sealed,
Ere its beauty begins to fade;
So my dearest friends are passing away,
Like the early dews of a summer's day,
With the bloom of youth arrayed.

O, sad are the ruins of hope and love,
That cross our path wherever we move,
In this low vale of tears;
O'er scenes that once smiled with joyous light,
O'er peaceful homes where all was bright,
The cloud of sorrow appears.

O, the wounded hearts that are bleeding now!
Mournfully over the tomb, they bow,
Of their dear idol child;
She hastily withered in youthful bloom,
And shadows now rest on the peaceful home,
Where once she moved and smiled.

O, they miss her—they miss her every where,
From the festal board---from the altar of prayer,
Their dearly loved dutiful one;
The morning dawns, but the shadows remain,
The evening comes, but to whisper again
Our dear Hannah Ann has gone.

Twice hath death entered that circle of peace,
And borne a child from their fond embrace,
To the low silent rest of the tomb.
When the shadows of life are lengthening o'er,
And the voice of the charmer is needed more,
Hath bereavement o'er them come.

But away through the mists of sorrow and gloom,
Faith points to the light of their blissful home,
And whispers, 'your children are there.'
O there shall they meet, where all is bright,
In that land of beauty, that knows no night,
Away from all sorrow and care.

HISTORICAL REMINISCENCES OF THE WAR OF 1812.

NO. VI.

Mr. Editor: In my last I had brought up the the history to the time General Tupper's Brigade joined General Harrison, at his camp at the foot of the Rapids, afterwards called Fort Meigs, in honor of the then Governor of Ohio. We found the troops had thrown up a breastwork of logs, and were directed to join our lines to their camp, on the point of land below them on the river. In a few days a Regiment of Kentucky Militia, which had wintered on the Auglaize or St. Maries, also joined, and completed a line connecting with those encamped before our arrival. No enemy molested us while I was there, but we had sufficient employment, in the duty of the camp, in building block-houses,—batteries,—mounting the artillery,—slaughtering the cattle and hogs bro't out on foot,—and gathering the corn grown by the inhabitants who had left, and which had been saved by our expedition to that place in November. The evidence of the just appreciation of the value of that article by General Tupper was not wanting; and I think I may say he stood as high in the army as any other officer under General Harrison at that time.

Our Spies had been transferred to the immediate command of General Harrison for some time before our march, and Captain Lewis the Indian chief with eleven other Shawnee warriors, were obtained and in conjunction with Capt. Wood and his Spies, were every day sent as scouts or Spies, down the river, that they might ascertain if any Indians or British were approaching from Detroit or Malden. About the middle of February haing gone down to the bay, at the mouth of the Maumee river, a distance of 16 miles, they found that about 100 Indians had arrived that day, and were collecting the cattle and hogs at a place called Presquile, where had been a small American settlement of French. They reported the fact to General Harrison, and were the next night sent down again, and on returning reported that the Indians were still engaged in collecting the stock; lodging in the houses vacated by the settlers who had fled after Hull's surrender or Winchester's defeat; I believe the latter, as much corn was braided by the husks and hung in the houses to dry. General Harrison collected his Generals together, and asked what they should do in the premises. General Tupper advised to send a detachment of six hundred men to capture or drive them away; and to prevent any possibility of failure of success, that a covering party of 500 men should follow the first party; and claimed it as his privilege, as the oldest Brigadier, to command the first party. Gen. Perkins, also of Ohio, claimed that as Gen. Tupper had already had one opportunity of facing the enemy, he ought to let him, Perkins, have this chance; and it was finally settled that General Perkins should command the first party, and General Tupper the second, with which General Harrison said he would himself proceed, to be near in case of any emergency requiring his presence or directions. The first detachment were detailed and marched down the river on the ice about sun-down. The second marched one hour after, with which General Harrison and his staff also marched. My office required me to have the chief staff duty to perform for the second, and, as the horses of the General and staff officers appeared to enjoy the privilege of the march, they walked so fast as to keep our men in a trot a good part of the time. When we had marched about ten miles, we came in sight of the first detachment, which had made a temporary halt, to hear from the Spies sent in advance; and General Harrison left our detachment to wait orders on a sand-bar, and joined General Perkins' command. The Spies reported the Indians to have left Presquile with the stock they had collected, and they judged by the fires, in the morning; and the probability was, they were that night at Frenchtown. General Perkins had with him a six pound cannon, and General Harrison determined to follow the Indians to that place; and sent us orders to follow the trail of the field piece on the ice, as he would march across the bay at the mouth of the river. We pursued our way for some hours, guided by the track of the cannon, until we began to see lights on our left, a mile or two ahead. which we took for the Indian encampment, and as our track still kept its direction; but when abreast of the fires. and could see men around them, it turned suddenly to them. When near the land we discovered it was our own troops, who had suffered so much with the cold, that they had gained the shore for the purpose of making fires, and in the meantime the Spies had been again sent ahead. After the first detachment left the fires, we occupied their place for half or three quarters of an hour, found some there who had given out, and were left. The first detachment had all of Capt. Langham's Company of Regular troops, whohad the day before they had marched, received their first supply of clothing (say about the 13th of February,) and having been unable for two months, to do duty for want of clothes, they were anxious to be employed; though their previous exemption had disqualified them for such a march.—Soon after the first detachment renewed their march, the field piece broke through the ice, where the water was not deep, but it delayed some time to recover it, and Colonel Ferree's horse also broke through, and in consequence of the wetting and subsequent exposure, Colonel Ferree took a cold, from the effects of which he never recovered; but if I recollect right, died in Zanesville, on his way home. When we had marched twenty-six miles from our camp, the Regular troops under Captain Langham, (or many of them,) became so much fatigued, that the troops were halted on a small island, and fires were lighted. The Spies returned to us here, and brought with them one of the inhabitants of Frenchtown. They found the Indians there, mostly occupying the houses of the inhabitants; but our Spies found this man in his house, without Indian company, and they brought him, to give such information as he had to communicate. So much time had already been spent upon the march, and detention, that General Harrison despaired of reaching Frenchtown before day, so as to surprise the Indians; and after day-light both detachments were ordered to return to camp. On our return march we met a number of sleds loaded with provisions, ammunition, and pioneer tools, such as mattocks, spades, and picks, which General Harrison had sent back for, and we ascertained he had designed when he found the Indians had left the mouth of the river to follow them to Frenchtown, and after defeating them to remain to bury the dead of Winchester's command which were still unburied. The giving out of the Regular troops defeated his intentions; and I have ever supposed it was very fortunate for us that it so happened, for if we had defeated the Indians, we should have done so after a march of 36 miles on the ice, and before we could have buried the dead, frozen as the earth then was, and with the men excessively fatigued, the British and Indians from Malden (but nine miles from Frenchtown on the ice,) would have been upon us, and we very unfit for action, from exhaustion.

We reached our camp before sun-down having marched fifty-two miles while absent about twenty-two hours. On the return march some of the men were so much exhausted as to lay down upon the ice to rest and as a consequence of the fatigue and exposure several died in a few days. In an account by a Lieutenant who had charge of the field piece extracted into Mr. Howe's Collections I find the number of the Indians estimated at 600. This was an error as Capt. Wood of the Spies who commanded those sent down to reconnoitre, estimated them at one hundred, and snch was the estimate of the Frenchman brought from Frenchtown.

During the rest af our sojourn in that encampment nothing of high importance occurred.—We were busily employed in strengthening the the defences of the camp, and as the time of most of our Brigade was out by the last of February, General Tupper and his staff were discharged and returned home.

It is not my purpose to write of the further progress of he operations at Fort Meigs, as that is a matter of history already on record by those who were actors in these scenes. The Ohio quoto was subsequently filled by new levies. I have not spoken particularly of those officers, who composed our command, because no opportunity offered of their distinguishing themselves in battle, but I have a right to say, that it was no fault of theirs, that they were not so distinguished, for they ever evinced great solicitude to beso employed, and were never backward in the discharge of duty. A number of them have been favorably known in civil offices at home, amongst whom are Colonel Robert Safford, of Gallia, Maj. Nathaniel Beasley, & Capt. Abraham Sheppard, of Adams, and Major James Galloway, of Green county. Others were equally energetic in the discharge of duty, but have not been so generally known as civillians. Most of our officersand men who returned, did so with constitutions much impaired by the exposure and fatigue of the campaign; with little Glory to boast of, but with the conciousness of having faithfully discharged a duty they owed their country. The faithful men who composed the rank and file of the Brigade, served a winter campaign, far from their homes, for the pitiful sum of six dollars and sixty cents per month, finding their own clothing, when they had any, while others, called out subsequently, but serving part of the same time, received eight dollars, and even this hard earned pittance was withheld, until about the middle of January they received pay until the last of December. Our magnanimous? legislature, who paid themselves three dollars a day, sent out a a short supply of socks, shoes, hunting shirts, and linsey pantaloons, for which the men were charged 75 cents for socks, and $2.25 for pantaloons, and other things in proportion, to be stopped from their pay, when they got any. They came home with clothes worn out, pay expended, and constitutions broken. Such is War; such is the glory of it.

Ohio and New York States.

Those who take superficial views of the progress of population and wealth, will ridicule any calculation of elements, which would go to prove that the State of Ohio, will outstrip its sister, the Empire State of New York, in the great race of superiority, before the year 1860; or that Cincinnati should become, by a period of only twenty-three years distant, or in other words, by the year 1870, a city of greater magnitude than New York, now the great emporium of the commerce of the United States. Yet, there is not rule of computation which men apply to other subjects, which will not work out these results.

These are weighty and startling propositions, which I propose to demonstrate. And first of the state.

The following table gives the population of New York and Ohio, at correspondent periods:

	New York.	Inc. pr ct.	Ohio.	Inc. pr ct.
1790,	340.120
1800,	581,756	73	45,365
1810,	959,049	65	230,760	509
1820,	1.372,812	43	581,434	152
1825,	1,617.349
1830,	1,918 608	37	937,637	61
1835,	2.173,0 5
1840,	2.429,876	25	1,519,467	62
1845,	2.600.374
1850,	2.741,519	12	2,278.810	50
1860,	2 962,740	8	3,190,334	40

These figures are the exhibitions of the six decennial enumerations, that have been taken from 1790 to 1840. Those of 1825, 1835 and 1845 are gathered from the state census of New York and those of 1850 and 1860, are assigned on what the decreasing rates of the past, as well as other existing facts, indicate. The actual figures ascertained by the U. S. enumerations of 1850 and 1860, will, I am satisfied, exhibit a result less favorable to New York, as well as more so to Ohio, than is here set down.—Cist's Advertiser.

Destoy it not.—Some years ago, says the Rev. William Jay, I had in my garden a tree that never bore. One day I was going down with the axe in my hand to fell it; my wife met me in the pathway, and pleaded for it, saying: Why the spring is now very near, stay and see whether there may not be some change, and if not, you can deal with it accordingly.

As I had never repented following her advice. I yielded to it now—and what was the consequence? In a few weeks the tree was covered with blossoms, and in a few weeks more it was bending with fruit. Ah! said I, this should teach me: I will learn a lesson from hence not to cut down too soon—that is, not to consider persons incorrigible or abandoned too soon, so as to give up hope, and the use of means and prayer in their behalf.

Luke, xii. 7: 9.—Then said he unto the dresser of his vineyard, behold, these three years I came seeking fruit on this fig-tree, and find none: cut it down; why cumbereth it the ground? And he answered and said unto him, let it alone this year also; and if it bear fruit, well; and if not, then after that thou shalt cut it down.

Colporteurs.—The Governer of Tennessee recently remarked to a friend, "that he could no conceive a more important work for the masses of the people, than diffusing moral and religious instruction by colporteurs." In his recent inaugural address, he alludes to the misfortunes whic must befall a State where public mortality is disregarded, and adds, "No state can prosper in long career of true glory, in the disregard o claims of justice and the injunctions of the Christian religion."

Extract of a Sermon

From Amos, IV. 12—"Prepare to meet thy God," from a volume of Sermons now in press by Rev. T. Potter.

Yet what avails all this aversion to meet your God? Reluctant, as sinful creatures may be, to go to this final interview with their Creator;—unwilling, as all are, to stand in the presence of Deity;—averse, as you yourselves do feel, to meet your God;—meet him you must! He, whose will is law,—whose word is power,—whose decision is destiny,—has made this interview utterly inevitable. His decree has gone forth, that at his bar all must appear; and from that sovereign fiat, there lies no appeal, and there is no way of escape. Heaven and earth may pass away; but that word Divine, which has surely fixed this final meeting, can never fail. The existence of Deity is not more certain,—the throne of God is not more sure,—the prerogatives of the triune Jehovah are not more secure,—than is our individual appearance in the presence of God, on the great day of doom! Nature itself fears this,—Reason confirms what nature fears;—while Revelation makes it Divinely sure.

Be assured, my Fellow-beings, we shall certainly have to meet our God. This summons must he obeyed;—your appearance at Gods' great Court must be made;—this solemn interview between you and your Judge will take place! However loath, or disinclined you may feel to comply,—resistance, or evasion will be impossible! No power can prevent you from being dragged into his presence;—no privacy can hide you from his seaching eye;—no plan can defeat his declared purpose. Were you immured in the deepest abysses of the dark unfathomed Ocean;—his arm is long enough to reach down to its lowest depths, and thence to drag you out into his presence! Were you buried in a cerement of granite, beneath all the rocks, hills, ond mighty mountains of the world, heaved up, and piled together, high as the moon, and broad as the circle of the earth;—his hand is strong enough to dig thro' all, and to draw you up to the footstool of his throne! Were you to flee from him with the rapidity, that wings the morning light;—He would overtake you midway in your flight, and would instantly bring you back to his bar! Had you removed from him far and remote, as Hell's "outer darkness is from the light and glory of Heaven's everlasting hills, where he sits enthroned in greatness;—his glance would reach you on the farthest extremity of the universe, at his single nod, you would in a moment, be face to face with God! Were Adam's whole posterity, in all their endless generations, and in all their untold millions, to form around your person in solid phalanx, that they might hide you from the face of him that sitteth upon the throne;"—a mere look from him would lay them all low on the ground, and leave you naked and bare to his immediate view! Nay,—were all the beings, that dwell in all the worlds of the wide creation,—the congregated population of the vast universe,—to interpose themselves between you and the judgment seat;—"He that sitteth in the heavens would only laugh" at their powerless opposition; and in defiance, and in derision at their mighty helplessness, would break thro' their midst, and bear you thro' all their crowding hosts to his dread tribunal! Yes!—yes!—you must meet him.—Instead then of indulging your reluctance to meet your God,—since you must meet,—so prepare for this inevitable interview, that when the time appointed arrives, you may lift up your head with joy, and triumphantly shout, "Lo this is our God; we have waited for him: he will come and save us!"

Dr. Chalmers and his Daughter.

The following anecdote concerning the late eminent divine of Scotland, is so characteristic of his devotion and parental love, that it should not be withheld from his numerous readers and admirers. It is another encouragement, drawn from the history of the providence of God towards the Church, which should urge those who have consecrated their sons and daughters to the God of their fathers, to continue unremittingly and earnestly to commend those they love to God who heareth and answereth prayer.

The Rev. Dr. Chalmers was, on a certain occasion, invited to address the children, of the Church in St. John's, Glasgow, on an anniversary occasion. But the mind of the Rev, Dr., so accustomed to lofty periods, and investigations in metaphysics, was but ill calculated to impress the hearts and arouse the attention of the children. The consequence was, they yawned and gaped, and some of them slept. The Dr. felt that, which all knew, his effort was a decided failure.

The Rev. Dr. Fletcher, of London styled the Prince of Preachers for children, was invited to address the children of Glasgow, which address Dr. Chalmers came to hear. Being highly delighted himself, and seeing the children also exceedingly enchanted with the address, Dr, C. stepped into the vestry, and spake to Dr. F. as follows: 'Sir, I am Dr. Chalmers. I have been very much delighted with your interesting discourse and would be pleased if you could take breakfast with me in the morning. Dr. Fletcher acceded with pleasure to the invitation.

In the morning, after breakfast and family worship, Dr. Chalmers thus addressed Dr. Fletcher: "Sir, it was not an invitation founded on a mere compliment that I gave you last evening to meet with me this morning; nor was it to enjoy you conversation- I have a daughter who appears still to have no part nor lot with the people of God. If there be any human instrumentality under God, which can impress her mind I believe it must be wielded by yourself. I will entreat you and while you are speaking to her, as animated for her soul's [illegible] God."

Preach the Truth

Fear not the face of clay—
Preach the truth—
It will spring another day,
If you're faithfll,
And the holy word obey.

What if scorning men oppose?
Preach the truth
To your friends and to your foes;
If you're faithful,
These will yield as well as those.

With the message from the skies,
Preach the truth
To the foolish and the wise—
If you're faithful,
Vice will sink and virtue rise.

If men bear, or men forbear,
Preach the truth;
Truth is never lost in air;
If you're faithful,
You a crown of life shall wear.

Missionary Intelligence.

The Present Aspect of the Missionary Field.

A review of the various missions of the society during the past year presents three important facts, to which the committee would invite special attention.

First—It appears that the ancient false religions, which for more than twenty centuries have held the nations of the earth in abject slavery, are now waning in their influence.

Buddhism, which has extended its sway over a larger portion of the family of man than any other superstition, is failing; failing, moreover, even in parts where neither Christianity nor civlization have penetrated. According to the reports of our missionary, at the Island of Pootoo, the sacred metropolis of Buddhism in China, the number of priests has been diminished by more than three hundred during the last century; and the dilapidated state of their temples, and the evident signs of contempt for them among the people, show that Buddhism is destined ere long to fall from mere inherant decay. The King of Siam sent an embassy to Ceylon, the reputed cradle of Buddhism, to seek element for rekindling the flame of devotion in his own dominions; and there he learned, from the representatives of the ancient line of Buddhist Kings. that the cause is failing. and that, even with the help of the gold from Siam, it can scarcely survive another century.

That Brahmanism is declining before the power of Christian truth, and the progress of European science, is testified by every intelligent observer; by the lamentations of deserted shrines; and by the bitter enmity of enraged devotees.

Secondly—Another great fact which presents itself is, that the Mohammedan and heathen secular powers are beginning to admit the principle of toleration, in the place of bigotry and persecution.

The edict of toleration in China has been sufficiently tested, and proved to be no dead letter: but the admission of a principle which the Celestial Empire has not the power to contravene. The partial recognition of this principle by the Turkish Sultan, the secular head and guardian of Mohammedanism, is a still more astonishing event. And even in Central Africa, as it appears from the missionaries at Abbeokouta, the same principle of toleration is recognized, and presents an open field to the teachers of the Christian faith.

The third fact is, the tendency to decay in the lapsed Christian Churches of the East, and the disposition among their members to seek refuge within the pale of Protestantism. Manifestations of this appears in the "transition state" of the Syrian Christians of Travancore; in the accepted aid of our mission by the Coptic Church; and, upon a still larger scale, in the late defections of the Armenian Christians at Constantinople, through the labors of a kindred society.

It thus appears as though the forces which have long held the minds of men in subjection were withdrawing and leaving a clear and open field for some approaching contest between other contending parties. There can be little doubt what those other contending parties will be. The troops are mustering. Here and there they survey and cast up the ground for fortifying some strong position. The missionaries from Rome, and the missionaries from the Protestant Churches of Europe and America, are the parties taking the field. Each successive year affords fresh proof of the warlike activity in the Romish camp, and sees multitudes sent out on foreign missions, who have been trained in the College of the Propaganda. In numbers and activity they far outdo the advocates of the truth. While we are meditating to send a missionary or catechist to a distant tribe of Northwest American Indians, one thousand miles from the missionary head-quarters of both parties, we hear that four Romish priests are already among them! While the Church of England for a whole year seeks, and seeks in vain, for one single missionary to China, the Romish agent at Hong Kong negotiates for a contract with a steam navigation company to carry to China one hundred priests within the year! Their missionary lists contain a host of archbishops, bishops, vicars apostolical, priests, deacons, sub-deacons, and nuns. In extent of ground they surround and overspread our positi ns. The intrusions into our missions at Khrishnaghur and New-Zealand, are but faint skirmishes, to be numbered among the many signs which unequivocally proclaim that the battle between Popery and Protestantism must be fought on the mission field no less than at home.

But there is enough to sustain the confidence of the committee in the assured triumph of their cause. They fear not the comparison as to the present results of Popish and Protestant missions, truth being the judge. They fear not the numbers, and the multiplied orders of Popish missions, if only they are enabled to send a few faithful witnesses of the truth, with an open Bible and a simple faith. In very many such trials of the comparative efficacy of the two systems, the Bible has already triumphed among the heathen.

But, to repeat the words of the zealous Bishop of Columbo, "we have not Gideon's 300 men." Else, like him, we could look without dismay, even though the Midianites and the Amalekites and all the children of the East should lay along in the valley like grasshoppers for multitude.—We have not the men to put the trumpet to the mouth and to hold up the light in their hand.— [illegible] and able to endure hardness for the sake of Christ. Like Gideon of old, we would proclaim to all others, whosoever is fearful and afraid, let him return and depart. —Rep. Ch. Miss. Society.

Temperance Department.

"Take care of that Ox."

Travelling, not long since, through one of the Western States, I stopped at a very neat public house and called for dinner. While it was preparing, I had a few words of conversation with the landlord, who kept a temperance house, and gave me a brief history of it.

Some years ago, he informed me, though a professor of religion, he had sold an immense quantity of liquor, and his house was noted far and near as a resort for respectable tipplers. Travellers loaded him with their favors. His conscience often troubled him, but he was accustomed to appease its clamors by the argument, that, "If he didn't sell, somebody else would."

One day a venerable Christian neighbor, who had often kindly spoken to him on the subject, left at the house, while he was absent, a Tract called "The Ox Sermon." Picking it up on his return, and glancing over it he was filled with resentment that his old neighbor should be constantly meddling with what did not concern him. He yet read the Tract, and was forced secretly to admit the truth it contained, and the inference it drew. This conviction only made him more angry with the old gentleman; and meeting him that afternoon, he went so far as to tell him that his grey hairs alone saved him from the chastisement his impudence deserved.

That night, as usual, he gathered his family together for evening prayers. While he was praying, that ox seemed to stand directly by his side. He retired to rest, but sleep departed from his eyes. Once he arose and went away by himself to pray, but there too stood the furious ox, close by his side, while a long row of decanters appeared in front. He turned around with his face the other way, but still there was the ox, and there were the decanters as before, plain as noonday. The next day the ox accompanied him wherever he went. Retiring early that night, he determined to sleep it off. But the ox stood close by his bed, rather more fierce and desperate than before. He slept not a moment all night. Next day he determined to drive off these strange misgivings; and proceeded to the city, purchased $50 worth of choice liquors, decanters, etc., resolved to enlarge his business and overcome his fears. But he was more miserable that night than ever before. The ox still haunted, him & a voice seemed to ring in his ear, "Take care of that Ox." He passed several restless nights and gloomy days. At last he could not endure the ox longer. One morning, just before day, having spent a horrible night, he made a solemn promise that if he lived till morning, he would wind up his iniquitous business.

As soon as it was light enough, he began to pour the contents of his decanters back into the barrels. This being completed, he rolled the barrels down into the road, and began to knock in the heads with an axe. His family were dreadfully alarmed, and fearing he was insane, dared not approach him. At length one of his hired men having more courage than the others, cautiously approached and inquired what he was doing. As soon as the family were convinced of his sanity, they assisted him in his work of destruction, and in an hour his choice wine, brandy sherry, gin, and whisky, were all running in the gutter. The bar was torn down, and though his customers nearly all forsook him, his concience was at rest. and he saw the ferocious ox no more. —American Messenger.

A Young Man Lost.

William Swingle, a young man about 21 years of ago, a lunatic, escaped from his father and brother on last Saturday morning, at the Tavern of Homer, 14 miles east of this city, on the National road, and has never since been heard of. The Messrs Swingle reside in Morgan county, York township, (post office, Deavertown,) and were on there way to the Lunatic Asylum, in this city. They staid during the night at Mr. Honrer's tavern, and arose early in the morning to start for this city; but just as they were about leaving, William, the lunatic, escaped from their hands and disappeared in the dark, and up to this time, one week after, nothing has been heard from him. They have searched in vain the whole country round, and have given up in despair, and now take this method of giving information on the subject. If he has perished in the cold that succeeded Saturday, the afflicted relatives would be thankful for a knowledge of the distressing fact. If he is still living, the earliest information of where he is, or the return of him to the home of his father in Morgan county, will be gratefully remembered and otherwise remunerated.

Papers in the neighboring counties, would be subserving the cause of humanity, by noticing the above, and thus aid in extending the information.—Ohio Statesman.

Responsibilities.—Are you an educated man? We do not ask you whether you graduated at college or the work bench—at the anvil or the hod; but we simply ask, are you educated? If so, immense responsibilities are yours. Your education is a mighty machine put into your hands to work for God and humanity—to elevate and improve mankind. Have you so put it in motion that you begin to see the glorious results of your labors? Have you improved the neighborhood—the town or the state in which you live? What have you done? Have your voice and your pen been silent or active? We pray you, young men of education, to look to your responsible stations, and if you have so long neglected some duty, commence now to discharge it as in the presence of Him who has thus endowed you with capacities to be co-workers with Him in redeeming the world. Lose not an hour of your precious time; for now you may influence minds that will never again come within your reach. Work—work—and God will give you success.

The Cholera is throwing its appalling shadow upon Europe. It is on its Eastern borders, and rapidly progressing westward. The famine lands will give it a fearful harvest. It will doubtless not spare our own country. The French [illegible] has sent three physicians eastward to watch its progress.

PITTSBURGH DISTRICT.

Jolley Town, Pa., Jan. 10, 1848.

Br. Bassett: Doubtless it will be pleasing to the friends of our Zion to hear that the Great Head of the Church has visited the Wheeling ct. with a revival of his work.

God has given us intimations of good at the most of the appointments on the circuit. At our first quarterly meeting there were some eight or ten that gave evidence of being born of the Spirit of God. Since then we are holding a course of protracted meetings, & thank his Great Name, our humble labors have not been in vain in the Lord. Between 30 and 40 have been added to the Church since Conference, and we are still looking up, hoping that our kind and Heavenly Father will yet grant unto us greater manifestations of his power to save. We have taken up some new appointments, at which we think there is every prospect of forming new Societies. On the West end of the circuit, at the Dowler appointment, the friends are now engaged in raising funds for a meeting house, which we hope with the blessing of God will succeed. While we thus record the work of the Lord, it is with grateful emotions of mind, acknowledging it to be his work. And while we give him all the glory and the praise, we still pray, O Jesus, ride on, till all be subdued.

Affectionately, yours,

R. H. SUTTON.

Allegheny City, Jan. 20, 1848.

Br. Bassett: In this place, Pittsburg, and Sharpsburg, there is, all things considered, a pretty good state of things in our Church—a revival, it is believed, is not far distant. Already mercy drops are falling.

Please publish the following appointments, and I will try to fill them, if spared:

Brownsville	ct.	March	12th	1848.
Uniontown	st.	"	19th	"
Connelsville	ct	"	26th	"
Fayette Springs	"	April	2d	"
Georges-Creek	"	"	9th	"

Our people in all these places, may expect me to lay the interests of the Aid Society before them, and to plead its cause with all my heart, soul, mind, and strength. I shall look for liberal subscriptions. Our Superintendents are desired to call in additional aid, at the above meetings, and to give me early notice where my visit will be expected.

Yours, truly,

GEO. BROWN.

MUSKINGUM DISTRICT.

Malta, O., Jan. 19, 1848.

Br. Bassett: For the information of Brother G. Clancy, the executive of the district, and as many others as feel an interest for the good cause which we are engaged in promoting, I wish to occupy a short space in your columns with a brief account of the spiritual condition of Morganville circuit. I reached the circuit soon after the rise of the Annual Conference and commenced the regular labors of the circuit in Malta. Thus far I have met all the appointments regularly. We had a pretty good time at the first quarterly meeting. Our Christmas meeting was a precious time to many souls. Here it pleased the great Redeemer to shower down such blessings, that many souls were enabled to praise God aloud. At other meetings we have had reason to rejoice in the God of our salvation. Some of the classes keep up their class-meetings and are doing pretty well; others neglect too much both prayer and class-meetings, and are not doing much. This will always bring leanness to the soul.

Our second quarterly meeting will be held in Triadelphia the last Saturday and Sabbath in February, to which we invite A. H. Bassett, C. Springer, and C. J. Sears. Come, brethren, for we need help.

Yours, in the kingdom and patience of Jesus Christ,

Lima, O., January 11, 1848.

Br. Bassett: I wish to inform my brethren through your paper, how we are getting along on the Lima circuit. We had rather a discouraging time when we first came on this circuit. We found it without form and void, and darkness dwelt upon the face of it. But our prospects are beginning to brighten a little in some places. The brethren are looking up for better times. We have had some good meetings and we think some five or six conversions, and ten accessions to the church, and we do hope that after all the reproach that has been heaped upon us together with the baneful influence that King Alcohol is exerting among us, with many other things, destructive to the happiness of man, yet we hope to see Lima circuit survive. We expect to commence our second quarterly meeting on the 5th of February, at the town of Lafayette, and we solicit the attendance of Brothers L. Ensminger, and G. Thornburg.

Come, brethren, and help us, and may the good Lord revive us at that meeting.

Yours, J. L. BORTON.

Kalida Ct., Jan. 10, 1848.

Br. Bassett: After so long time, I would inform the friends of Zion, that we are still striving in this northern country to make our way onward and upward. I reached my appointment, the second Sabbath after Conference, and found in general a valuable membership, and they living in peace. As yet we have had nothing to disturb our quietude in all our borders, though it is to be lamented that the church here has not been as lively in religion for some years past as it ought to have been, yet I trust in God that the day is not far distant when Zion will travail and bring forth sons and daughters, such as shall be eternally saved. We have held two protracted meetings, and some precious class-meetings. A few have given their names as probationers, and I trust have given God their hearts. Brethren, pray for us.

G. W. THORNBURGH, Sup't.

Indiana District.

White River Ct., Jan. 13, 1848.

Br. Bassett: I feel disposed to inform you and the friends of Zion of the prospects of our Church in this circuit. I have been acquainted with White River circuit for two years past, and I know it has had as many and severe trials to pass through, as any of the adjoining circuits, and yet it has struggled on, and nobly contended for the cause of Christ, and equal rights. And even now, storms threaten and thunders roar, but nothing intimidated, her course is still onward and upward. Since I wrote to you in the last Conference year, we have received seventeen additions to the Church, and are still looking for more. We thank the Lord for what he has done, and hope he will do abundantly more for us than we are able to think or ask, or in any wise worthy to receive. Pray for us.

Yours, in the Lord,

WM. BARNET.

Michigan District.

Livingston Ct., Jan. 3, 1848.

Br. Bassett: The field of labor which has been committed to my care this present Conference year, is becoming more interesting than it has been. The Lord is reviving his work on this circuit. We held our first quarterly meeting in Tyrone, commencing on the 25th of December, and it was protracted eight days; six of those days the President of our Conference was with us and the Lord was with him and the people. Angels no doubt were employed in bearing news to heaven, that the dead is alive and the lost is found. Some four have found Him of whom Moses and the law and the prophets did write, to be precious to their souls; and some backsliders reclaimed, and professors very much revived in the spirit of their minds, in so much that we had a general shout in the camp. I think that I never attended a meeting of more interest. The youth at first were very giddy, but before the meeting broke up, they became very solemn, and some were heard to exclaim the next day after Brother Mack left, that they were willing to give God their hearts, and I hope and trust that they will do so, for I believe that the Lord will bless the good seed that has been sown by his Holy Spirit, through the arduous labors of our worthy Brother Mack. I never sat under the preaching of the Gospel with so much interest in my life, never had so clear a view of redemption, of heaven, the glory of God, the redeemed from the earth, and the final happiness of all his children. My soul is highly elated while I see the stone that was cut out of the mountain without hands, rolling in this part of God's vineyard. Many in different parts of the circuit, that have not attended meetings for years, are making their way to the house of God, and in some neighborhoods the Macedonian cry is heard,—"Come over and help us." O, my brethren, let us pray that the Lord of the harvest would send forth laborers in his vineyard. Some he has called, and given them good talents but they will not occupy. They have bought a farm and must needs go and see it, &c.

O, my brethren and sisters in Christ, let us awake out of sleep, and work while it is called to-day. Night will soon overtake us, and then we must be called to render account of our stewardship at the bar of God. O, may it be with joy and not with grief. Brethren, pray for us.

Yours, in the toils of an itinerant life,

J. B. JEWEL.

WESTERN RECORDER.

PUTNAM, OHIO:

Thursday, January 27, 1848.

To Correspondents.—The verses by "Basil" are accepted, and should have been inserted this week but for their length.

We have to remind our old friend, "A Man of Rule," that it is a Rule amongst editors that when a man writes over his own proper signature, he should not be assailed by an anonymous writer. Our friend is correct in his positions, but is there not a 'more excellent way?'

We are under the necessity of stating that it is impossible we should take time to re-write articles for correspodents, who are amazingly deficient in a little branch of science called Orthography, unless it be when they send religious intelligence. In that case, we do it cheerfully. Sometimes a writer whom we highly esteem, could not possibly believe how many errors he gives us in a page. This is the reason why some articles, containing excellent ideas, lie for weeks in our drawer, and are sometimes laid by, unpublished. Friends will please consider that we are continually receiving such a mass of communications, that we must, of necessity, in most instances, give the preference to such articles as come to us prepared for the press.

The numbers by Br. Jos. Burns, shall appear. Shall we not wait a little, however, till Prudentia on the same subject, has got through?

'A Subscriber' writing from Pittsburgh, would have found his article inserted before now, if he had entrusted with us his proper name.

We are trying hard to get time to write to our worthy correspodent at Donnelsville. He will please bear with us.

"Golden Rule."—We have unintentionally omitted to respond to the enquiry of Br. Newton. The 'Cumberland Presbyterian,' is published at Uniontown, Fayette co. Pa.

Evangelical Alliance.—The Episcopal Recorder states that a monthly periodical is about to be commenced as the organ of the Alliance in the United States. It is to be entitled "Christian Union and Religious Memorial," and to be edited by a committee, consisting of one clergyman of each evangelical denomination.

Cold Water.—The Watchman of the Valley states that Professor Finney, of Oberlin, lately went through a regular course of Typhus fever, and recovered without the use of any medicine, or stimulants whatever, and that for 14 days he tasted of nothing but cold water.

Sabbath Keeping Boat.—We are gratified to learn that there is now at least one steamboat running on the Mississippi, which is conducted on Sabbath keeping principles. It is none other than the steamber Hannibal, Captain H. D. Bacon. On Saturday night at 11 o'clock, Captain B. invariably lays up, and does not resume his way till Monday morning at 1 o'clock. He has also banished the bar from the cabin. We are assured that passengers speak in the highest terms of the good order and good accommodation on board; and we are happy to learn that thus far the experiment has proved quite successful. Who will not rejoice to learn of this interesting reform movement? Remember, the Hannibal is the boat which should be patronized. We hope soon to hear of many others imitating so good an example.

Cough Drops.—Mrs. Bateham, Editress of the Ladies' Department of the Ohio Cultivator, says that the best cough drops for young ladies, is to drop the practice of dressing too thin. Is it not strange that this excellent remedy is treated with neglect and indifference by most young ladies?

U. S. CONGRESS.

Thurs. Jan. 13, House.—A Message from the President of the United States was laid before the House, in which he declined to furnish in compliance with a resolution of the House, a copy of "instructions and orders issued to Mr. Slidell, at any time prior or subsequent to his departure for Mexico." The President gave as a precedent, an instance in which President Washington declined to furnish certain information called for by the House in 1796, in reference to negotiations with Great Britain. A motion was made to print, &c. Mr. Adams of Massachusetts spoke in favor of printing, as he considered it a novel thing. Mr. A. explained in the case of Washington referred to,—that the subsequent action of the House was adverse to the position of President Washington, and much as he reverenced the name of Washington, even next to worship, he had ever considered him wrong in that particular instance, and that his reasons are not sufficient. After debate of some length, the motion to print was agreed to, and the subject was made the order of the day for Tuesday next.

The Senate, same day continued the debate upon the Ten Regiment Bill, but did not come to a final vote upon it.

Ohio Legislature.

Jan. 10 House.—Mr. Culbertson reported a bill to incoporate the Dresden Bridge Company.

Jan. 14.—The two houses jointly proceeded to certain elections, the result of which was as follows.

Associate Judge for Union County, Levi Phelps.

Associate Judge for Hocking County, R. Culver.

Associate Judge for Miami Co., M. G. Mitchell, and D. H. Morris.

Director of the Ohio Penitentiary, Thomas Brown.

Maj. General, 20th Div. Ohio Militia, D. M'Intosh.

Associate Judge for Pickaway County, W. W. Pierce.

Jan. 15. Sen.—The petition and remonstrance of citizens of Gratiot, in the Counties of Licking and Muskingum, for the including the said town in one or other of the said counties, were reported back by select Committee, and the petitioners had leave to withdraw their papers.

☞We observe that several writers are discussing, in the Western Christian Advocate, the propriety of a division of the Ohio Conference, M. E. Church.

Volume of Sermons.—Our readers will recollect that a few months ago, a prospectus was issued by Brother T. Potter of the Muskingum Conference, for publishing a volume of Sermons. The publication is now in press, and will be issued early in the ensuing Spring. Brother P. has spent much labor in the preparation of the work, and we feel assured that it will be well worthy of general patronage. For, the author is desirous to explode the too common saying, 'as dull as a sermon.' With leave of Brother P. we give on our first page an extract from one of the sermons, which will be read with interest.—Brethren in the ministry to whom prospectuses have been sent, will now, we trust, be industrious in procuring subscribers for the work, as Br. P. has entered into a heavy expense for its publication, and it will certainly be forthcoming. One dollar per copy, is to be the price, and we hesitate not to say that those who subscribe or purchase will receive the full worth of their money.

Godey's Lady's Book.—The February number has come to hand, and is for elegance, quite in keeping with the January number. It contains four steel engravings, of interesting designs, viz: Guess my name, Saluting the Commodore, &c. Besides these are fourteen other engravings illustrative of Model Churches, Model Cottages, Ladies' Work, Fashions, Music, &c. No other Magazine contains monthly so many plates.—Godey now furnishes sixty pages of reading matter in each number, and has enlisted the most talented and popular contributors. Terms, $3 per year. Two copies for $5. Those who pay $3 in advance receive also for a year, a copy of the Lady's Dollar Newspaper. Address L. A. Godey, Philadelphia. If any of our neighbors wishing to form a club, will give us their names and money, we will cheerfully assume the duties of an agency for Mr. Godey.

Lady's Dollar Newspaper.—This is a beautiful sheet, issued semi-monthly by the same publisher for the ladies. They will find it quite an attractive publication. We see that Grace Greenwood, has been engaged to serve as its editor.—As we are old fashioned in our views, and as we conduct a religious journal, we are bound to express our regret that so large a proportion of the columns of the Lady's Newspaper should be devoted to ficion, instead of more substantial and useful reading. But we are aware that such is the popular taste, that this very thing to which we feel bound to object, is the very thing which will secure the popularity of the Lady's Paper. It would please us well, however to see a reform in this particular. Terms, $1 a year in advance.

The publisher will please observe, that Putnam and not Zanesville, is our proper post office address. The January and February Magazine, was sent for us to each place.

Zanesville Counterfeit Detector.—We have omitted to notice heretofore the recent improvement of this publication, with the commencement of the present year. It has been enlarged, and is now published with a marginal Index of the States, as is Bicknell, which when cut like the alphabet of a Ledger, is very convenient for reference. Mr. T. W. Lord, the publisher, is a very enterprising man, and we learn that he has an extensive, and constantly increasing subscription list. His terms are, $1 in advance.

Ohio Lunatic Asylum.—The Annual Report of the Directors and Superintendent of this Institution makes an interesting pamphlet of 72 pages. It is gratifying to learn the continued success of the Asylum. All the improvements to the buildings contemplated last year, have been completed. A small steam engine has been put in operation, by means of which all parts of the establishment are supplied with hot and cold water. Sixty-four acres of land are owned and held by the Institution. The cost of this land at three different purchases was $6,900. The cost of the entire buildings is 153,821.

The whole number of patients received into the Institution since it went into operation, is 1047. Of these, 557 were males, and 496 were females—311 were pay patients, and 736 were supported by the State—528 were old cases, (the disease of more than a year's standing,) and 519 were recent cases, (the disease of less than a year's standing.) Of the whole number received, 603 have been discharged, and 115 have died. The whole number cured is 448. Of these, 250 were males, and 198 were females. The per centage of the cures of those discharged, in recent cases, is 90,20; in old cases, 28,3. In the whole number discharged, without reference to the duration of the disease, it is 62,40 per centum.

The average number in the Institution, during the year ending on the 15th of November last, was 318. During that period 181 (90 males and 91 females,) were received. Of those received, 99 were recent cases, and 82 were old cases. The whole number cured during the year, was 90. During the same period, 120 were discharged, and 23 died. Of those discharged, 78 were recent cases, and 65 were old cases—74 were males, and 69 were females. The per centage of cures in these resent cases, was 88,46. In the old cases, 33,85. The average in both was 63 per centum.

The directors advise the abolition of the distinction of pay and pauper patients. They very justly argue that as the Asylum has been reared by the property of the State, and the entire property of the State is taxed for its support, it is at least doubtful whether the sufferer from insanity, of he have property, should be compelled to pay a further tax for his admission and support in the Institution. This often brings embarrassment and distress upon the families of such. The Directors think that the benefits of the change would exceed the cost.

In an appendix to the report is an interesting account of the dedication of the new chapel connected with the Institution, which took place in September last, and written by a female patient. Two dedication hymns also are given, one written by a male, the other by a female patient. Finally an account is given of a debate, on the use tobacco and ardent spirits, between a couple of maniacs, which is so amusing, we here insert it for the entertainment of our readers.

THE DEBATE.

Having for some time noticed a strong disposition in two gentlemen, occupying the same gallery, to discuss certain topics of a general character, especially the customary use of tobacco and ardent spirits, we at length proposed that all strife should be ended by a public debate, for which each party should have due time to make preparations. To this there was an agreement, after some little diplomatic finessing on both sides. The day was accordingly fixed, and the question finally determined in writing, as follows: "Is it essential to the happiness and comfort of man that the use of tobacco and of ardent spirits be continued?" It was also arranged that a President and two Vice Presidents and a Secretary should be chosen—that reporters should be admitted, and that each debater should speak, if he thought proper, to the extent of ten minutes by the President's watch and no longer.

Accordingly, at the appointed time due preparation was made in the gallery occupied by the gentlemen aforesaid, by the arrangement of seats for the officers of the occasion; and the disputants having signified their readiness to begin the discussion. The Superintendent of the Asylum had the honor to be chosen President, assisted by two patients, who were nominated and duly elected Vice Presidents. A Secretary was also selected, and the assistant physicians proffered their services in the capacity of reporters.

The gentleman in the affirmative made his appearance with great confidence, being well supplied with an immense roll of written matter, the production of which had occupied much of his time for several days. His argument began at the garden in Eden, where he was confident tobacco, corn and rye were amongst the other goodly plants that grew therein: "That every plant was made for the use of man, and the only modes of using tobacco yet discovered were to chew, smoke or snuff it:" "That viewed in the glass of nature and judgment of the earth, the sober use of tobacco & spirits were promoters of happiness and comfort." Appealed to man at the first—to man after the flood—to man in the days of Ahasuerus—to man in the times of the Gospel and since the Declaration of Independence, alledging that these things were no where strictly forbidden—but were allowed by the Church, and that tobacco was freely used by ministers of all denominations. Attempted to show the value of exports of tobacco, and the amount paid for foreign importations of wine, spirits, gin, &c. Contended strongly that what had been said against the use of good liquor was addressed to the animal feelings, in the recital of miserable anecdotes and impudent allusions to "a drunken breath and weeping wife." And believing this opposition was an infringement of personal liberty, he was proceeding to show that "the earth is now under anathema for cursing good creatures," when the President's hammer came down upon the table, the time under the rule having expired, and he very pleasantly took his seat.

His opponent rose with great mildness, but in a very dignified manner, remarking modestly that he thought "if the company, and especially the speakers were blessed with small quantities of the matters in question, he might serve to give spirit to the debate." The gentleman in the affirmative was particularly gratified with this remark, and seemed to hail it as a yielding of the point. This however was but the glance of a sunbeam before the refreshing shower, for he soon proved to be anything but a novice in debate, opening the discussion with considerable ability, and meeting the arguments of his antagonist with great readiness and skill—showing that they were light and false—that tobacco was an injury to the system, no matter where it grew, and notwithstanding its use by different clergymen—that ardent spirits were a curse, and the cause of all unhappiness in society—"that families were unquestionably the purest where the least liquor ran in the blood;" and that the voice of truth and experience were against the use of these articles in any shape. "Mr. President," said he, "if the gentleman is right—if it be a fact that tobacco and strong drink are of any benefit in society, I sir, for one, have lost my reason." Continuing the argument in good style, he was about to conclude in the most triumphant manner, when some unfortunate whim in the brain gave his thoughts a new turn, and he took off in an opposite direction with the greatest rapidity, arguing and flourishing away in the most lively manner, until, to the astonishment of all he was fairly on the ground that should have been occupied by his adversary. Discovering the mistake, he made an effeort to recover, but had not time before the President's hammar was heard upon the table.

Reply, explanation and rejoinder followed, but the above contains the substance of the main discussion. Both gentlemen are regarded as incurable maniacs, and it is curious that the order of debate was strictly observed, nor did any evidence of ill humor appear.

All parties now looked to the president for his decision. This appeared to be rather non-committal. And each party appeared to be dissatisfied with the limited time allowed for speaking, and were anxious for a second trial, he was about to postpone his final judgment on the respective merits of the gentlemen in question, and appoint a second meeting, when one of the Vice Presidents suddenly exclaimed—"Dish court ish all for no use—any fool midout no sense at atl might know dhrinkin too much was'nt good for nobody!" Whereupon the meeting adjourned sine die.

Foreign.—The steamship Cambria, recently arrived at New York. The most important items of news by this arrival are that a slight rise in the price of breadstuffs had occurred in England, increased pecuniary embarrassments, and numerous additional failures of business houses.

Lane Seminary.—The Ohio State Journal of last week announces that the action against Drs. Beecher and Stowe, was decided by Court in Bank, in favor of the defendents. The Seminary therefore remains under the control of the New School Presbyterian brethren.

Biographical.

Miss Hannah Ann Bassett,

The Subject of this notice, daughter of Elisha and Elizabeth Bassett of Jefferson County, Indiana, was born March 1st, 1829, and was in infancy dedicated to God by baptism. She was a most amiable, dutiful and affectionate child. Her parents say that they never know her wilfully to do any thing wrong, since she reached the years of accountability. She was remarkably even in her temper and disposition, always ready to submit to the will of her parents, and to take their advice, manifesting for them the most ardent love. At about the age of fifteen, she joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, to which her parents have been for many years attached. And though she did not, whilst in health, profess to have experienced religion, she ever respected the services of the sanctuary, and the social means of grace, especially class meetings. In April 1847, she was taken with remitting fever, & never entirely recovered from the effects of the attack. In September following she was taken with intermittent fever, which tended still further to prostrate her system. A disease of the lungs was induced. Various popular remedies, and the best medical attention that could be procured, were resorted to in vain. Her disease made rapid progress. But though her strength failed and her flesh wasted away, she bore her sufferings with remarkable patience and resignation. A murmur never fell from her lips. Whilst able, she read daily a portion of the Sacred Scriptures. She lingered till Wednesday evening, Jan. 5th, 1848, when her spirit departed in the utmost composure and peace. As her departure drew nigh, she professed to enjoy peace of mind, and to be free from any fear of death. Her afflicted father, who is the only brother of the editor of this paper, gives the following statement of the closing scene.

"The sad hour drew nigh when we were to part with our only daughter, dearer to us than a right eye. But the will of God must be done, and he has a right to do with his own as he pleases. We endeavored to be submissive to his will.—Her extremities now became cold, and the cold sweat rested upon her pale brow. After lying for some time apparently asleep, she aroused, and requested to be raised up in the bed. I did as she requested, and sat behind her. She then told us that she had lost her sight, but wished to bid us farewell. She asked if we thought she could last much longer, and being answered in the negative, she assented. With the utmost composure she then stated to us the disposition she desired should be made of her various articles, to her parents, brothers and other relatives present and absent. She then took a most affectionate leave of each of her parents, bidding them farewell. She then took leave in like manner, of her several brothers, and other relatives, classmates and neighbors who were present, exhorting them all to meet her in heaven. After this, she seemed exausted, and we laid her down in the bed. She seemed to fall into a sound sleep for about half an hour, and then breathed her last."

Hannah Ann was a most lovely youth—a most affectionate daughter—sister and niece. And as she was by all esteemed, she is by all lamented in her early death. Her age was nearly 19 years. But she has been taken from the evil to come. May we be so happy as to join her by and by, in the mansions of the blessed.

India Rubber Felt for Railways.—The N. York Journal of Commerce says:—"Felt has been spoken of in our columns as being used in England on Railways.—India rubber is now manufactured here, (with a large mixture of metalic substance, rendering it impervious to heat and cold, and of all thicknesses from a sixteenth to a quarter of an inch,) for the purpose of being placed under the bearings of the rails, and at the junction of the rails on what is called the junction plates; by which it is supposed that most of the jar, and consequent noise and wear of machinery, will be avoided.

"A specimen of this composition is now before us. It is extremely tough, though elastic, and on being applied to a revolving grind stone, it is said to suffer less abrasion in a given time, than steel. We understand it will be used on several railroads where the track is to be laid the ensuing Spring."

Correspondence.

Written for the Western Recorder.

Aid Society, Pitts. Conference.

Br. Bassett: We have been instructed to transmit you, for publication in the Recorder, the accompanying resolutions, which were passed unanimously at a late meeting of the Managers of the "Preachers' Aid Society, of the Pittsburgh Annual Conference, Methodist Protestant Church." The resolutions are clear and comprehensive, and would not, we think, be materially improved, by comments or suggestions from us; but we cannot deny ourselves the gratification of stating, that the excellent Association to which they refer, is daily growing in favor with the people; and is, if we may judge from present indications, destined, ere long, to diffuse such a benign and extensive influence, as will place our beloved Zion on a solid and immoveable foundation. Must not the ministers of our communion, the veterans of the Cross, who are almost worn out in the service of their Lord and Master, rejoice to know that when additional years and increasing infirmities, shall have entirely disqualified them for active labor, they will have a fund to draw on, which will supply them with the means of procuring the necessaries of life, and render their passage to the tomb, comparatively smooth and tranquil! The great desideratum, long and ardently desired, for the comfort and accommodation of our aged preachers, begins to present itself to the enraptured vision, & to fill with sacred delight the hearts, of the most zealous and liberal members of our church. Surely it is a high and holy privilege, to be permitted to participate in this gracious work; and we therefore affectionately invite, irrespective of age or sex, all who are of, or friendly disposed towards us, to "come up to the help of the Lord, the help of the Lord against the mighty!"

From the condensed view submitted, of the present prospects of the 'Preachers' Aid Society,' we feel, in conclusion, impelled to exclaim—"Hallelujah! the Lord God omnipotent reigneth!"

Yours in the spirit of fraternal affection,

JOHN MECASKEY,
W. REEVES.

Pittsburgh, Jan. 20, 1848.

1. Resolved, By the Board of Managers of the Aid Society, of the Pittsburgh Conference, that we deem the efforts now being made to get up a fund for the benefit of our superannuated ministers, their widows and orphans, to be of the highest importance to the perpetuity and interests of our beloved church.

2. Resolved, That the thanks of the Board of Managers of the Aid Society are due, and are hereby tendered to Brother George Brown, the general agent of the Society, for the successful efforts he has made to increase the funds of the society; and hope that his future exertions may be attended with the success that the importance of his agency demands.

3. Resolved, That our brethren and friends throughout the district be, and they are hereby respectfully called upon, to come up to the work manfully and contribute liberally of their means to increase the funds of the Society.

4. Resolved, That we regard the influence of our female friends of vast importance in this labor of love, and that therefore, we affectionately solicit their co-operation in the accomplishment of this benevolent design.

Br. Bassett: My house has been a stopping place for the Preacher for more than twelve years, but we have been left by the Preachers last May, without telling us the cause. They had good congregations till the last.

I suppose they will say the reason was, I did not attend the quarterly meeting. But I must excuse myself that the principal cause was bodily infirmity. Some three or four years ago, after attending two protracted meetings, a cold settled on my lungs, and I was confined to the house for three months, and since that time my lungs have been so weak that I have not been able to ride much on horseback. Will the brethren forgive my negligence, and will Brother Marshall come and see me, and let's talk about our home in heaven, and preach a little for us here in the wilderness? We are left here as sheep without a shepherd, though thanks be to God, we have not all lost our hope of heaven.

Yours with respect, WM. OGLE.

Br. Bassett: Sir; In accordance with the instructions of the last quarterly meeting Conference of the Granger circuit, I forward you a copy of the preamble and resolutions in regard to slavery, which you will please publish in your paper.

Yours, respectfully,

G. B. HICKOX.

Weymouth, O., Dec. 13th 1847.

Whereas, the system of American slavery as maintained by all the slave laws of this country, deprives a part of our fellow beings of the inalienable rights bestowed upon them by our Creator, and places the authority of man over them superior to the authority of God, thus rendering it impossible for them to discharge the duties imposed upon them by the moral law, or which grow out of the domestic relations—takes away a man's right to himself, his right to his wife and his own children, and all that can be accounted of any value in life—deadens his moral sensibilities, his intellectual faculties and every faculty of his entire being, reducing him to the condition of chattel property, or a mere implement of husbandry, totally incapable of bearing legal testimony against any of the insults and outrages committed upon him by the merciless tyrant that usurps authority over him, therefore,

1. Resolved, That in the opinion of this Conference, the sin of slavery, as it exists in this nation, is the greatest sin this or any other nation can be guilty of.

2. Resolved, That so far as American churches are advocates or apologists for such a system of slavery they cannot be the churches of Christ.

3. Resolved, That it is the imperative duty of every slave claimant and every advocate or apologist for slavery in our church, to repent immediately, and to show the fruits of repentance by opening the prison doors and letting the opressed go free.

4. Resolved, That it is the duty of our church as a body so to alter the clauses in our church constitution, touching the question of slavery, as to exclude slave-holders from our church communion.

5. Resolved, That the secretary be, and he is hereby instructed to forward a copy of the above resolutions to the editor of the Recorder for publication. A. TRACY, Ch'n.

News of the Week.

From Oregon.

The N. York Tribune has received the Oregon Spectator to the 8th of July inclusive, via Sandwich Islands, not so late, we believe, as overland advices.

The people of the territory are still awake to the dangers of the free introduction & sale of intoxicating liquors, and meetings have been held to take measures for controlling the traffic.

The Spectator has not the official returns of the late Governor's election, but thinks Gov. Abernethy is re-elected by a small majority.

The 4th of July was generally observed throughout the territory.

The annual examination of Oregon Institute gives a flattering view of education under limited advantages.

The columns of the Spectator are adorned with several advertisements of divorce of unloving couples; which separations are so frequent as to wake the pungent satire of some—till now—"mute inglorious Milton" with the romantic soubriquet of Pooiwat.

A very important meeting was held at Oregon City on the 14th of May, for the purpose of obtaining an expression of opinion relative to trespasses on land claims, and it was resolved not to vote for any man for office engaged in such buiness.

The people have suffered recently from Indian disturbances.

In consequence of the want of rain, it was feared the crops, particularly cereal crops, would not turn out well.

FROM THE SANDWICH ISLANDS.—The New York papers, by an arrival from the Pacific, have Sandwich Islands papers, the Polynesian and Friend, to the 29th August. The Polynesian contains the annual report of the king's ministers on the condition of the Island, revenue, expenditures, imports, exports, population, schools, colleges, churches, newspapers, &c. The commercial and revenue statistics exhibit a steady increase. The receipts into the treasury for the year ending 31st March, 1847, amounted to $127,855 01, and the disbursements to $115,671 25. Imports of foreign goods during the year $516,173 14. Total exports, foreign and domestic goods, $777,333 24. The exports consisted of $154,333 24 in foreign goods; $48,000 in native produce, and $575,000 in supplies to American whale ships. The whale fishery is the main support of the Island. The use of spirituous liquors has diminished, in consequence of the increase of duties. Most of the coin and specie in circulation had been withdrawn to Oregon and California, but supplies were coming in from other countries. Diplomatic relations have been formed with Peru. The report of the Minister of Foreign Relations makes honorable mention of the new representatives of the U. States.

THE POPULATION OF NEW ORLEANS.—The assessors have recently completed the census of New Orleans, and their returns show a population of 79,998. This is a diminution of 18,000 since last year, and of 23,000 since 1840. The authorities not being satisfied with the returns, have ordered another census to be taken.

LATER FROM AFRICA.—Capture of Slaves, &c.—By the arrival at New York, on Sunday, of the brig Hollander, of Providence, Capt. Lovett, thirty-eight days from Monrovia, the New York papers are placed in possession of Africa's Luminary of November 10th, six days later than former accounts.

The Luminary contains a list of slavers captured on the Western Coast of Africa, from June 20th to August 25th, and sent to Sierra Leone for adjudication. They are 10 in number, mostly Brazilian, with a total of 1,329 slaves on board, besides two cargoes the number of which are not given.

There is intelligence also from the South Coast that the Fenhade (a British vessel) made three captures in a fortnight, and that one of the French cruisers had taken a slaver with upwards of five hundred slaves on board.

An unusual drouth has caused an almost total failure of the rice crop at Cape Palmas (in the Maryland Colony) and vicinity, and has very much injured the crops generally. Rice was selling at $2 per bushel, double the usual price, and it was feared the natives would suffer unless they should succeed in obtaining supplies from other parts of the Coast.

The Colonial schooner Cavally was capsized some time in September, near Cape Palmas, and sunk with her entire cargo. Loss about $5,000, which will be severely felt in the Colony.

There was quite a revival of religion among the Congers, and many youths of that tribe had been converted to Christianity. The schools are represented as generally prosperous.

LAMENTABLE.—An infant child of Mr. Thomas Glancy, in Boston, was killed on Wednesday last, by the use of croton oil, instead of castor oil.

HEAR THIS, GIRLS.—The Boston Chronotype says:—

Show me the wife that's on the watch
For every little rent or scratch,
And cures it with a timely patch
Before you know it;
She's a woman fit to match
A lord or poet.

☞ If Christians must contend, let it bo like the olive and vine—which shall bear the most and best fruit; and not like the aspen and elm, which shall make the most noise in the world.

"AS YOU WERE."—The National Intelligencer notices various conflicting statements which have been put forth lately as to the determination of the addministration in the matter of the difficulties among our Generals in Mexico, and says:

"Late last evening, we learned authentically, that General Towson, Paymaster General, did set out on Monday night last, for Mexico, where he is, in conjunction with General Cushing and General Butler, of the volunteer forces, to form a Court of Inquiry, ordered by the President of the United States, on General Scott—a very singular court, by the way—to sit in judgment on the General-in-chief of the Army."

BREADSTUFFS TO ENGLAND.—The N. Y. Express, remarking on the Cambria's news, which is generally esteemed quite favorable, say s:

"Although breadstuffs are comparatively low to what they were, we maintain that they are high enough. At the last quoted price, flour may be shipped from here at six dollars, or a shade under, and corn from sixty to seventy cents. We can well afford to ship these articles, even at a less rate."

THE FRENCH LINE OF STEAMERS.—The French company, the New York Herald says, is obliged to stop any further trips to the United States until Spring. The two millions of francs, including the six hundred thousand left in the government's hands, as a security for its four steam frigates, which money will be kept until new arrangements are made, have been expended in this enterprise.—The ships are to be overhauled and improved. The French Government will re-arrange the line, and pay MM. Heroult and de Handel a certain sum per annum, in addition to the use of the steamers.—Balt. Sun.

FERRYING THE ATLANTIC.—When the four new Cunard steamers, with the additional three now building for the American steam navigation company, are put upon the Atlantic race course, the establishment of a regular weekly ferry (as it were) between Europe and the United States, will be finally perfected. The American line has the contract with the United States government for carrying the mails to Bremen and Southampton, but it seems they are anxious to get out of it.—Baltimore Sun.

CAUTION.—A young man named Benchoff, residing near Smithburg, in Washington county, Maryland, died suddenly on the 12th instant, after having been playing at ball.

Particulars of the Burning and Explosion of the Sea Bird.

A slip from the office of the Cape Girardeau Eagle, gives the following particulars of the explosion and burning of the Sea Bird:

The steamer Sea Bird arrived here last Sunday morning, from New Orleans. After putting out a parcel of freight and finding the water too low to proceed on her trip to St. Louis, she dropped down about half a mile below the landing, and tied up, intending to wait for a rise. She had a large lot of freight on board, including between eleven and twelve hundred kegs of powder.—About three o'clock last night there was an alarm of fire. It was soon ascertained that the Sea Bird was burning. It commenced in the ladies' cabin, and had made such headway that it was found impossible to arrest it. An attempt to scuttle her proved unsuccessful. Capt. McMurty and some of his hands started off to apprise the citizens in the vicinity, of their danger, and secure their own safety. About an hour after the fire commenced, the powder exploded, causing the most tremendous and terrific noise that was ever heard in this section of country.

The concussion caused an almost universal jarring of houses, and crashing of windows, causing many who were unquainted with the case, to conclude that it was a terrible earthquake, and others supposed that the day of judgment had come, certain. The damage done to windows and doors of houses, in many instances, is immense. The College buildings, situated only about one hundred and fifty yards distant, was much injurod. The windows fronting the river were all destroyed; several of the doors were blown off and broken; much of the plastering thrown down, and furniture much damaged—supposed to be $500. The fine new brick building of Mr. R. M. Horrell, situated near the river, is considerably injured. The Baptist and Methodist churches have lost nearly all their panes of glass, and a number of sash are broken; every house has been more or less injured, but we are pleased to state no person is seriously hurt. Fragments of the boat, iron and wood, were scattered in almost every direction, but fortunately not one of them fell on any house. The large iron cable was blown into pieces, and a piece containing many links, was found two hundred yards distant.

The tremendous shock would have prostrated several houses, we have no doubt, and done much greater injury, but it was broken by a bluff near which the boat lay. Capt. McMurty supposed the fire was an accident, as there were two men on the watch at the time it was discovered. The boat was partly insured.

The captain informs us that the boat took fire on her boiler deck on her trip up, when near Plaquemine, and that one or two men who got off below the mouth were suspected of having set fire to some furniture which was piled upon that portion of the boat. Capt. McMurty deserves much much credit for his precaution in sending runners and going among the citizens himself, informing them of the powder on board. He informed us, a day or two ago, of the quantity of powder on board, and on account of the danger of the citizens in the event of an explosion, he dropped down below. We regret the loss which the Captain has sustained by this misfortune, as we know him to be a worthy and enterprising man, and deserves better luck. He was lying in his berth asleep, when the fire was discovered.

The report of the explosion was distinctly heard at Cairo, a distance of some 40 miles.

Fragments of the boat, chains, anchors and boilers, are to be found in every direction—some upon the opposite bank of the river.

PROGRESS OF THE SOUTHERN TELEGRAPH.—The Charleston Courier, of Monday last, says: "We have the pleasure of announcing, that, in all probability in one week from to-day, the line will be completed to Petersburg, and Charleston, and Boston, and Buffalo, and Cincinnati, and other distant cities will be in daily converse."

MICHIGAN.—The Legislature of Michigan met at the new Capitol on the 3d inst. The new Governor, Ransom, delivered a message, showing the State indebtedness to be less than two millions. To liquidate this indebtedness, the Governor recommends early and prompt action on the part of the Legislature.—Cincinnati Commercial.

DROWNED AT PORT CARBAN.—Recently, two boys, aged 11 and 13 years, sons of Mr. William Mayer, of Port Carban, attempting to cross the river on the ice opposite their father's residence, when they were about the middle of the stream the ice broke, and the boys sunk to rise no more.—Cin. Com.

A MISSIONARY MURDERED.—We are grieved to learn, that Rev. Walter M. Lowrie, son of Walter Lowrie, Esq., Corresponding Secretary of the Assembly Board of For. Mis. has been murdered in China by pirates. It appears, that he was on board a Chinese vesiel, on his way to a meeting of the missionaries, when the vessel was taken by pirates, and Mr. L. thrown overboard. He was a young man of talents and devoted piety; and his loss will be severely felt by the Mission. Most sincerely do we sympathise with his afflicted father and family. We shall doubtless receive further particulars soon. In the meantime we copy the following:

"DEATH OF THE REV. WALTER M. LOWRIE.—The Rev. Walter M. Lowrie, an American Missionary at Ningpo, a gentleman of eminent attainments, has been cruelly murdered in the Chinese seas by pirates. The reverend gentlemen took his passage in a Chinese boat from Shanghai to Ningpo, and during the voyage was attacked by a piratical vessel. At first, it would appear that the pirates only meditated robbery, but fearing that Mr. Lowrie might bring them to justice, they resolved to throw him overboard. Two of the ruffians seized him for that purpose, but not being able to accomplish it, a third joined in the murderous attack, and they succeeded in throwing him into the sea. As the waves ran high, though he was seen two or three times, he soon sank to rise no more. Mr. Sillivan, the English consul at Ningpo, proffered every aid his official station enabled him to render, & steps were being taken to recover the remains if possible.—Wilmer & Smith's Liverpool Times, Dec. 4th.

SLAVE STEAMERS.—Three large steamers have been fitted at Bahia, S. A., for the slave trade. One of them has already arrived on the West coast of Africa, where she embarked 900 slaves and escaped from the brig of war Sea Lark, by steaming away from her during a calm.

DEATH BY DROWNING.—A Mrs. Miller, of Greene county, was drowned a few days since in one of the streams tributary to the Monongahela. She had been somewhat deranged on account of the death of her child, and wandered from her home a cold winter night, about ten o'clock. She was found in the creek two days afterwards.

WE understand that Mr. J. B. Vashon, a young colored man of this city, was recently admitted to practice in the courts of New York, after a rigid examination which he sustained with honor. He could not be admitted here on account of his color. The Tribune speaks of him in light terms, as does the Pennsylvania Inquirer. He proceeds immediately to Hayti, where may success attend him.—Pittsburgh Commercial Journal.

GLORY.—Millions of bushels of human bones have been transported from the continent to Hull for agricultural purposes. Those which were collected on the plains of Leipsic, Austerlitz, and Waterloo, were the bones of the bold, the brave, and the chivalrous, who fell fighting their country's battles. With them were mixed the bones of the horses, and both were conveyed to Yorkshire, where they were ground to dust, sent to Doncaster, and sold for manure.—Yorkshire paper.

MAGNETIC TELEGRAPH.—The posts are set from St. Louis to Alton, Illinois. A contract has also been effected for constructing the Telegraph from Lexington, Ky, to Nashville, Tenn, running thro' Franfort, Shelbyville, Louisville, Breadstown, &c. At Lexington, the present contract meets one which is to build the line to Maysville and Wheeling and from Nashville it is to be continued to Tuscumbia, Ala, and thence to New Orleans, and is to be completed by the 1st of April.

EXPORT OF BREADSTUFFS.—The imports at this ports last year amounted to $95,036,257. The exports, to $52,879,274. Duties received, $20,-204,249.

Another Steamboat Accident

Cincinnati, Jan. 20.

The steamer Seventy-Six, bound from New Orleans to this, was totally destroyed by fire recently, above New Orleans a short distance. The boat and cargo, together with the United States Mail, were lost. No lives were lost.

FATAL CALAMITY.—On Saturday last one of the boilers in the saw-mill of Johnston & Carr Monongahela City, exploded, killing instantly James H. Collins, and seriously scalding and otherwise injuring the engineer, Mr. Simpson and his son; neither of them are considered fatal. Mr. Collins was sitting immediately in front of the boilers playing an instrument when the explosion took place. One of the boilers was found at the distance of nearly one hundred yards in the river.—Temperance Banner

QUICK WORK.—We had occasion yesterday to telegraph a friend whom we believed to be in Philadelphia. The communication was left in the office at Albany, about 10 o'clock to be sent to New York, where it was received, copied, and carried to Jersey City, whence it was forwarded to Philadelphia. The person addressed was hunted for and reported at Carlyle, within thirty miles of St. Louis.! The lightning was again called into requisition, the communication forwarded, the person found, and an answer received at 12 o'clock! Thus was a message, under these disadvantageous circumstances, transmitted 2,500 miles in two hours! Verily, after all, this telegraph arrangement is, as they say out West "some punkins."— Albany Evenieg Journal.

At the new blacksmith shop Washington Navy Yard, they are putting up a new steam hammer composed of a solid block of iron weighing £10,000. The bed in which this is to be placed weighs 10,000—making the wheigh when completed, 20,000.

CUBA.—The London Daily News says: "there is an understanding between President Polk and Jezabel Christina of Spain" upon the subject of selling Cuba to the United States.

MUNIFICENT REQUEST.—The late Doctor Fargues, of Quebec, left to the corporation of that city $24,000, for the purpose of erecting and maintaining an asylum for the poor of Quebec, and to supply them with work; it is to be named "The Fargues Asylum."

Decision in the Saturday Courier Case.

On Saturday last, in the Court of Common Pleas, in the matter of Holden vs. McMakin, Judge King delivered the opinion of the Court, and decreed finally that the subscription list and all other property of the Courier, belonged to the joint estate, and that the receiver should expose the same to public sale, to be sold to the highest and best bidder, and the proceeds of the sale to be credited to the joint estate of Holden & McMakin. That Mr. McMakin was to be allowed, by the receiver, a compensation for his care and management of the journal, since the death of Mr. Holden.

The Cincinnati Atlas states that one of the greatest wonders ever seen is now being exhibited it that city, being nothing less than a horse covered with wool instead of hair; without mane; with a tail like an elephant; and a beautiful form.

A serious fire occurred at Calais, Me., on the morning of the 5th inst. The dye-house and stable occupied by Columbus Cooper were entirely destroyed. Nothing was left but the chimneys. Six horses, besides carriages, harness, &c., were burned. A girl about 12 years old was suffocated in one of the upper rooms. Mr. Cooper, after getting out his wife and child, returned for the members of his family to the attic, and came near losing his life in the attempt. He was found insensible on the stairs, as was also his wife's sister in a room near by.

A PUFF FOR TOBACCO.—A peripatetic philosopher denominates the noxious weed was "a triple memento mori—dust for the nose, ashes for the mouth, and poison for the stomach." This reminds us of the remarks of a savant, who was importuned by a friend to take snuff: "No, sir! had Nature designed my nose as a dust hole, she would have placed my heels in the air, and my head downwards!"

IMPORTANT DECISION.—The supreme Court of New Jersey has at least decided that the actions brought against Ex-Mayor Lawrence, of New York for damages for blowing up houses at the great fire some ten years since, are untenable, as it was a work of neccessity.

PROSPECTS OF AFRICA.—In all parts of Christendom unusual interest is now manifested in efforts for the elevation of the long oppressed and degraded people of the Continent of Africa, and Christian benificence has already planted many a moral light house on her dark borders.

There are now, says the Missionary Herald, about 160 ordained Missionaries in Southern and Western Africa, and male and female assistants, at least 600, making the whole number of European Missionary laborers not far from 700. The number of native converts is estimated at 17,-000.

The influence of these Missions is rapidly extending into the interior. Chiefs from several hundred miles have applied to this mission at Gaboon as well as to the Governor of Liberia, for teachers to explain to them the religion of the white men, or of Americans, as they call the Colonists.

ST. LOUIS AND CINCINNATI RAILROAD.—It is supposed that the Indiana Legislature will, when it again meets, grant the right of way through that State to the contemplated railroad from St. Louis to Cincinnati. It is supposed that the counties through which the road will pass. when completed will subscribe enough to do the grading, bridging, to construct culverts, and to lay the wooden rails. The Vincennes committee think they can demonstrate that the route through Vincennes is the shortest. best, and most productive.

The Earl and the Farmer.

An English paper says:—A farmer called on Earl Fitzwilliam and complained, that, in his hunting exursions with his hounds, he had trodden down a field of wheat so as to do it damage. The Earl told him, that if he could procure an estimate of the loss, he would pay it. The man informed him that he had done so already, and it was believed the damage would be £50. The Earl paid it. But, as the spring came on, the wheat which had been trodden down, grew up, and became the best in the field. The farmer honestly returned the fifty pounds. "Ah," said the Earl, "this is what I like. This is as it ought to be between man and man." After making some inquiries about his family, the Earl went into another room, and returning, gave the man a cheque for one hundred pounds, saying, "take care of this, and when your eldest son is of age present it to him, and tell him the occasion that produced it."

Fearful Adventure.

Mr. Moffatt, in his "Scenes in Southern Africa," gives an account of his escape from a tiger and a serpent, which was truly providential. He had left the wagon to which he belonged, and wandered to a distance among the coppice and grassy openings, in quest of game. He had a small double-barrel gun on his shoulder, which was loaded with a ball and small shot. An antelope passed at which he fired and then slowly followed the course it took. After advancing a short distance, he saw a tiger-cat staring at him between the forked branches of a tree, behind which his long spotted body was concealed, twisting and turning his tail like a cat just going to spring upon her prey. This he knew was a critical moment. Not having a shot of ball in his gun he moved about as if in search of something on the ground, taking care to retreat at the same time. After getting, as he thought, a suitable distance to turn his back, he moved somewhat more quickly, but in his anxiety to escape what was behind, he did not see what was before, until startled by treading on a large cobra de capello serpent, asleep on the grass. It instantly twirled its body around his leg, on which he had nothing hut a pair of thin pants, when he leaped from the spot, dragging the venomous, deadly, and enraged reptile after him, and while in the act of throwing itself into a position to bite, without turning round, he threw his piece over his shoulder and shot it. Taking it by the tail, he brought it to his people at the wagons, who, on examining the bags of poison, asserted that had the creature bitten him, he could never have reached the wagons. The serpent was six feet long.

BURIED ALIVE.—The good people of Charlestown Mass., have been stirred up, lately, with a story that a young lady who was buried, some weeks ago, had been found on a recent visit to the vault, out of her coffin, lying near the door, (dead of course) and with one of her arms gnawed, apparently with her own teeth. Doubtful story.

TEXAS.—Gen. Wood has been elected Governor of Texas, and Judge Grier, Lieut. Governor. Wood beat Miller 2,048 votes. The Legislature which met on the 18th ult, was organized by choosing J. W. Henderson, Speaker of the House, over Gen. Lamar, by 10 votes. The whole population of Texas now amounts to 140,000.

MICHIGAN.—The Legislature of this State met at the new capital on the 18th inst. A. W. Buell was elected Speaker of the House.

DELIBERATE MURDER.—At Sparta, Tenn., a few days since, a most cold-blooded murder was committed upon the person of Wm. Little, clerk of the county court, by Richard B. Jones, a saddler. Jones placed himself in a grocery and shot Little as he passed with a rifle. Jones was arrested.

Br. R. H. Sutton, we now have no means of sending you pamphlets but by mail. We send you 15 copies for which we charge but 50 cents, the price of a dozen, on account of the postage. We would send more if we knew it would suit you.

Br. W. Pierce, Much obliged for your promptness. We will pay Br. Springer the balance of 50 cents, which will satisfy him in full. We have also credited you for vol. 9 and one fourth of vol. 10.

Br. D. Crall, we have paid Br. Springer the $5,50 you sent. He wishes to know to whom he is to credit the amount. He says he will send you grafts by mail, as he has not opportunity of sending trees.

The Law of Newspapers.

1. Subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, are considered wishing to continue their subscriptions.

2. If the subscribers order the discontinuance of their papers, the publishers may continue to send them till all cash charges are paid.

3. If subscribers neglect or refuse to take their papers from the offices to which they are directed, they are held responsible until they have settled their bill, and order their paper discontinued.

4. If subscribers remove to other places without informing the publishers, and the paper is sent to the former direction, they are held responsible.

5. The Courts have decided that refusing to take a paper or periodical from the office, or removing and leaving it uncalled for, is "prima facie" evidence of intentional fraud.

Liabilities of those who take Periodicals.

Thes law declare that any person, to whom a periodical is sent, is responsible for payment, if he receives the paper, or makes use of it, even if he has never subscribed for it, or has ordered it to be stopped. His duty in such a case is not to take the paper from the office or persons with whom the paper is left, but to notify the publisher that he does not wish for it.

If papers are sent to a Post Office, Store, or any other place of deposite,, and are not taken by the person to whom they are sent, the Postmaster, Storekeeper, &c., are responsible for the payment, until he returns the paper, or informs the publisher that they are lying dead in the office.

HYMENIAL.

☞ If the sick wish a diseased stomach restored and impure blood cleansed without endangering the constitution, go to J. Deen, Grocer and Shoemaker, Putnam, and obtain a box of Dr. Le Roy's Sarsaparilla and Wild Cherry Pills which is the best family medicine now in use. So says Mr. O'Neil the Agent.

DR. LE ROY'S

Wild Cherry, and Sarsaparilla PILLS.

DR. LE ROY has most happily succeeded in combining Wild Cherry and Sarsaparilla with other vegetable ingredients, so as to produce a medicine at once tonic, and purgative, the only perfect discovery of the kind ever made. Their great peculiar excellence, and that which distinguishes them from all other purnatives is, that their operation is followed by no re-action. Their unrivalled purifying and purgative properties, for which they are indebted to the essence of Sarsaparilla, and other ingredients, being controlled by their highly tonic virtues, derived from the extract of Wild Cherry, they do not strain the digestive organs into action, as is the mode of operation with other cathartics, but on the contrary strengthen them into action. Thus all other purgative medicines produce more or less subsequent costiveness, and sluggishness of the gastric juice, while Dr. Le Roy's Pills leave all the machinery of the system full of life and activity, and the bowels open and natural. "Hence," writes Dr. Cheeseman, "they are the only active purgative which I can recommend with confidence, and without alarm; for they remove nothing but what ought to be removed—neither rack, nor strain—occasion no apathy or debilitation—and leave the bowels free, open, and vigorous." But the great virtue of Dr. Le Roy's Pills—the virtue which has spread their fame over the two hemispheres with a rapidity almost miraculous—lies in their purification of the blood. Here they not only stand altogether unrivalled, but fill up the measure of desiro. They at once arrest the formation of bad blood, by removing all impurities from the chyle, of which the blood is formed; and moreover keep it clean, by toning and strengthing the digestive organs, so as to be able to exclude from it all matter of an innutricious nature; and then they purify the blood already in circulation; and never cease operation until it is entirely free from every noxious particle, & full of health, life, and vigor. For sale at J. Deen's.

THE OHIO CULTIVATOR FOR 1848.

Published at Columbus, Ohio, on the 1st and 15th of each month, M. B. Bateham, Editor and Proprietor. Terms, $1 per year—four copies for $3—payment invariably in advance.

THE fourth volume of the Ohio Cultivator will commence Jan. 1st. 1848. This paper has now become so well known that it is scarcely necessary to speak of its character, or to allude to the commendations it has received from the Public Press and other sources. The editor is determined to spare no pains on his part to sustain the reputation of the work, and make each succeeding volume more useful than the preceding one. Our motto is "upward and onward;" and the object of the "Cultivator" is not only to collect and disseminate valuable facts and information relating to practical agriculture, but to inspire 'Farmers' with more just conceptions of the dignity of their profession; to induce them to cultivate the 'Mind' as well as the 'soil,' and thus elevate themselves to that position which it is their duty and privilege to occupy ■ 'American Agriculturists," in this age of Progress and Improvement.

With its very large list of contributors, numbering over "two hundred," most of them practical farmers in the West, the pages of the "Cultivator" will contain the results of "Experience," as well as the teachings of "Science;" and being written or selected with special reference to the climate, productions and farming of Ohio, this paper will be found more valuable than any other for the farmers of this and the adjoining States. It will contain the latest intelligence of the "Markets" of this country and England; notices of the weather and the crops; descriptions (with engravings,) of improved implements, machines, &c.; instructions in gardening and fruit culture; rearing and management of domestic animals; construction of farm buildings, fences, &c.; and a "Ladies' Department" devoted to household affairs, useful receipts, &c.

The friends of Improvement in Ohio and adjoining States are requested to obtain and forward subscribers for the Ohio Cultivator. Remember that the price is only "seventy-five cents" each, when four or more names are sent by one person. All subscriptions must commence with the first number of the volume; a complete index is furnished at the end of the year. Specimen numbers and a prospectus will be forwarded to all who desire them.

☞ "Now is the time to subscribe!" Letters with remittances may be sent by mail at the risk and expense of the publisher. Address,

POET'S CORNER.

Written for the Western Recorder.

EVERY HEART KNOWETH ITS SORROW.

When'er we see a happy face,
How little do we know,
Within the breast how large a space
Is filled with pain and woe.

Perhaps a pleasant smile conceals
A pang which none discerns;
And while the brow a joy reveals,
The fire of anguish burns.

Oh, could we read the inmost heart,
Its sorrow and its grief;
Back from the smiling face we'd start,
And seek to give relief.

Pity instead of hate would move,
And love possess the breast;
A thousand times we should approve
Where censure is expressed.

THE WHITE PILGRIM.

I roamed to the place where the White Pilgrim lay
And passively stood by his tomb,
While in a low whisper I heard something say
How sweetly I sleep here alone.

The tempest may howl and the loud thunder roar,
And gathering storms may arise,
Yet calm are my feelings, at rest is my soul,
The tears are all wiped from my eyes.

The call of my master compelled me from home,
I bid my companions farewell,
I left my sweet children who now for me mourn,
In a far distant region to dwell.

I wandered an exile and stranger below,
To publish salvation abroad,
The Trump of the Gospel endeavored to blow,
Inviting poor sinners to God.

And when among strangers and far from my home,
No friends nor relations were nigh,
I met the contagion and passed to the tomb,
My spirit went home to the sky.

Go tell my companion and children most dear,
To weep not for me though I'm gone,
The same hand that lead me through scenes dark and drear,
Hath kindly assisted me home.

PRIVATE JUDGMENT.

1. Private Judgment apart from the Church.

2. The Authority of the Church apart from Private Judgment.

An article on 'Private Judgment apart from the Church,' is copied from the "English Church," by one of the religious Papers of this city: and is, doubtless, considered as being decisive of the question. The example, it is alleged, is that of "two persons, each with perfect, though mistaken sincerity, supplicating the throne of grace, that the true interpretation of those texts, which speak of election and predestination, may be conveyed to their divinely illuminated intellect." These two persons are George Whitefield and John Wesley. The result is, that the one person becomes a decided Calvanist; and, that the other rises up—a steadfast Arminian. Certainly, these different answers to prayer "for intellectual illumination cannot both be correct." But, the writer before "venturing to this conclusion," ought to have been sure that such were the facts. One fact is worth a thousand arguments. Now, it is denied that the arguments of Mr. Faber are founded on facts, as they are pretended to be. Mr. Wesley says, "I do not believe the doctrine of absolute predestination. I never did believe it, nor the doctrines connected with it, no, not for an hour. I cannot while I believe the BIBLE, while I believe either the Old or New Testament." It would be to make a book, to copy all similar passages from Mr. Wesley's Works. He was a man of one Book, and never prayed for illumination as to a doctrine he never believed. Mr. Whitefield says, "I never read any thing Calvin wrote—my doctrines I had from Christ and his Apostles—I was taught them of God"—not by Calvin—"but by Christ and his Apostles," Not by special revelation.

It is not an unusual thing for men in making out a case for others, to confute themselves, and this Mr. Faber has done very satisfactorily.—"The truth of the matter was," he truly remarks, "that each, by his own private reasoning and judging upon Scripture had firmly persuaded himself that his own view of election was undoubtedly correct." This was their great fault—exercising the right and duty of private judgment. John Wesley and George Whitefield, judging each for himself! apart from the divine authority of a corrupt church—a church in entire disagreement with itself. It was wise to bring forward these burning and shining lights, as beacons of the dangers and results of private judgment! Doubtless, Lord Herbert—an infidel—all infidels are superstitious—should have been compelled by the church to believe—likewise Socinus For, who is advantaged by unemployed power!

As illustrative of church authority, we copy from the (London) "Christian Remembrancer." Vol. ix., p. 188.—"Thoughtful minds have long anticipated the quarter of the heavens in which the gathering storm of years would break.—Without going into a superfluous proof of what the simplest must have felt, there can be little question that, speaking generally, the two great parties in the church have each their strong position. The symbol of one is, in the main, the Prayer-Book; that of the other, the (39) Articles. They represent respectively, and perhaps fairly enough, the Voice of Antiquity and the spirit of the Reformation; it is a separate question how far it may be entirely, the two may be found, or made, to harmonise; but on the first glance at them, they certainly present a different aspect. Lord Chatham expressed this distinction not accurately, but still with a sufficient approximation to truth for a popular statement, when he talked of our Papistical Book of Prayer and Calvinistical Book of Articles. It is quite certain that the [illegible] and most are convinced that the other is not Calvanistical.* But the two great schools which verge towards either extreme, have each felt bound to endure one for the love of the other. They are the Leah and Rachel of the English Church. The Prayer-Book party are charged with disparaging the Articles; and those who most quote the Articles seem to tread lightly over the Prayer-Book argument. On the one side we find a Lutheran bias, a good many sermons, popular preachers, justification by faith, once-a-week Christians, a disparagement of fasting, penitence, gloomy views, and the like, combined with vigorous and frequent appeals to the Thirty-nine Articles.—on the other are to be seen ranked, "Romanizing" tendencies, daily service, "exaltation of the sacraments," the word of God esteemed as something higher than 'painful preaching," and all this combined with a very confident grasp of, and a most consistent and uniform and polemical reference to, the Prayer-Book. In pamphlets, tracts and other magazines, we frequently find them bracketted: but in conversation, in preaching, and in the Christian walk, we can recall no single instance where the one scale or the other did not very soon predominate.

Indeed, were it necessary, some of the commonest facts prove this bias. How was it that the Dissenting teachers, till lately, received their license to preach by Act of Parliament upon doing what? Assenting to the Thirty-nine Articles: i. e. they were legally empowered to preach against the Church's Prayer-Book, under cover of her Articles. Compare too the source of the Articles—the known principles of their framers—and their sympathies with the Foreign Reformed—with the origin of the Prayer-Book. That the Articles are the National, and the Prayer-Book the Catholic, element of our mixed communion, is enough for the popular feeling.

The historical argument is in favor of the Catholic line; the Prayer-Book has hitherto been the ruling and paramount estate in our confused relations. Every change at each successive conference has been in its favor. In the Prayer-Book we can point to the restoration of the oblation in the Eucharist emanating from the same set of opinions.

In what way, then, have the Articles been received by the Church of England? The Articles are not terms of communion: the Articles are not a Confession of faith; they are articles of religion, a body of teachings, akin rather to the Homities than to the Service-Book. It is significant that the defenders of the Articles had all along one line of defence which is common to every successive removal of the dispute, under whatever forms:—viz—they all assume the sense of the Articles to be equivalent to the mind of the Church. The various defenders of subscription have assumed that the sense of the Articles was ascertained: and so have the assailants. It was because the Articles were Articles of the Church; because they were a fettering of the liberty of Protestantism, that Jebb and Disney opposed subscription in any sense: because as Lord, then Mr. Grey, said, 'As to speculative matters in religion, they are by no means material; the Articles are the offspring of monkish enthusiasm, a jumble of contradictions: away with such fanatical stuff'; we live in more enlightened times.'

The high church party, including the Puseyites, go for the Prayer-Book. The low church, or Evangelicals, stand by the Articles. From which set of opinions emanates the infallible teaching of the church? Away, away, with all these absurd pretensions. We take the Bible, "But continue thou in the things which thou hast learned and hast been assured of, knowing of whom thou hast learned them; and that from a child thou hast known the Holy Scriptures which are able to make thee wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus. All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness: That the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works."—2 Tim. 3, 14—16.

We add from Burkitt; "The Scriptures are a perfect, plain, and sufficient rule, in all things necessary to salvation. 1. They are a perfect rule; because the writers of them were inspired, and consequently their writings are infallible.—2. They are a plain rule; otherwise they would be no rule at all, of no more use to direct our faith and practice than a sun-dial in a dark room is to tell us the hour of the day. A rule that is not plain, whatever it may be in itself, is of no use to us till it is made plain. 3. They are a sufficient rule; they are able to make the man of God perfect and wise to salvation. Here the Church of Rome distinguishes, and says, the Scriptures are sufficient to salvation, but not to instruction; to whom one of the martyrs replied: "If so, God send me the salvation and you the instruction." "

Philadelphia, Pa. W. S. S.

* In a Note on page 200, is the following—"The sense in which the Articles were propounded, was not a Catholic, nor a Protestant, but a vague, indecisive, and therefore comprehensive, sense; that the Reformers themselves were without precise doctrinal views of their own upon the points in controversy; that they were consequently the victims, alternately, of extreme Catholic and extreme Protestant influences; that so far as they had any doctrinal sympathies of their own, they were Protestant rather than Catholic, but that the necessities of their position, as having to provide for the religious pacification of a country partly Catholic, partly Protestant, obliged them to a course (so far as doctrines at issue between the contending parties were concerned) of the strictest neutrality; and that the mode by which they sought to carry out this principle of neutrality, was that of couching their Formulary in language at once sufficiently Protestant in tone to satisfy the Reformers abroad, and sufficiently vague in expression to include the Catholics at home."

We scarcely know of a more touching instance of 'the ruling passion strong in death,' than is afforded in the last words of a schoolmaster who had gone in and out before successive little flocks in the same place for upwards of thirty years. When the film of death was gathering over his eyes, which were soon to open in the presence of Him who took little children in his arms and blessed them, he said: 'It is getting dark——the boys mays go out——school's dismissed!'

Proposed M. P. College.

To the President and Superintendents of the M. Protestant Church, Muskingum District;

BRETHREN—The time has certainly arrived when we as a Church are called upon to cast in our mite into the treasury of the glorious cause of Education.

It hath pleased Infinite Wisdom to create in man, certain latent principles, that can only be developed and spread out by vigilent cultivation. The age and country we live in is daily showing forth this fact. The inventions of science, have already over-topped the boldest imaginations of the common mind—elements in nature are now made subservient to our use, that ten years ago only alarmed our fears. The spell is broken; the schoolmaster is abroad; mysteries are simplified by the magic of learning; and the rustic mind is awaked to enquire into the cause of every effort: as well as the effects of every cause.

By the truly wise it is frankly acknowledged that religion alone teacheth aright. Hence almost every branch of the Christian Church hath already established Colleges where their sons may not only be taught the science of morals, and the science of religion, but be better qualified to convey from the sacred desk, as well as their daily walk, this paramount instruction to the eager, watching world around them. And let no branch of Christ's Church glory here, they have but barely done their duty. We fearlessly maintain, one prominent principle duty of the Church is, to lead in every good word and work, and that education is one of the foremost, none will deny, little philosophy is necessary to convince us that mothers-lap religion: or that religion that is early, hence thoroughly taught, and rationally embraced is most to be trusted. Had we a nation of pious, praying parents, (or say mothers) we would have less need of Colleges, but taking the world as we find it. We believe that branch of the Church that beareth none of this kind of fruit upon it, is liable to be lopped off.

Brethren, awake; Friends of our Zion, arise; Two duties demand our prayerful attention—1st, The care of the rising, and 2d, the care of the declining generation; Yes, the care of the indigent poor will be charged to the account of the visible church; (Hasten kind Heaven speedily to arouse every branch thereof of this too much neglected though highly important duty.) But the education of youth being a duty more congenial with the spirit of the times, I cannot help believing your attention needs only to be called to the subject to secure your active co-operation. The M. P. Church if not old enough as some perhaps may say, is certainly sufficiently strong to erect a college, and bear her part in the great work of shedding abroad good morals, and evangelical principles throughout the land.

I have learned with deep regret that she has already made some laborious but unsuccessful attempts at erecting a College. One of those attempts was certainly unwisely gone about. There is many a wrong way attempted in doing a right thing. The philanthropic, upright, and liberal sentiments embosomed within the arms of the M. P. Church, are not to be disheartened, (or I am much mistaken) by the sacrifices (tho great) already made in this cause. Experience teacheth wisdom; and by the aid of united co-operation, and judicious economy, with but very trifling individual outlay, the same fruit may be gathered, yea, a more abundant harvest reaped, than perhaps might have followed our former very extravagant plan.

Colleges are built upon three principles, or foundations if you please: 1st—The Endowment principle. 2d—The Manual Labor principle.—And 3d—The Voluntary principle. Unwilling to occupy too much space in our excellent paper, we will withhold the whys and the wherefores and only say that observation and experience prompt me decidedly to prefer the last plan.—Voluntaryism is the very essence of Liberty.—The genius of Republicanism was cradled in the voluntary principle, and we, whose motto is Mutual Rights, can frame our constitution in neither of the other two. The first we will find to be a stagnant, sickly swamp. The second a provoking brier patch, an endless jungle. Let a suitable situation for our college be selected, some healthy spot near the centre of the district, on a good road, convenient to growing towns, where merchants may visit their boys on an afternoon's ride of pleasure, and with a prudent Board, and proper Faculty, our College will sustain itself well. All that's wanting is means to erect it: and to obtain this, brethren, I believe you have only to turn your minds to the subject—where there is a will there is a way. If every superintendent would heartily resolve, he would easily accomplish the raising of $20 for the erection of a Methodist Protestant College, none will question him whether he got it from a few members, or all the members, or adherents out of the Ch. or from liberal souls any where.

Some might fall a little short, but others would greatly over-run, and if all would make the willing effort the thing might be easily accomplished. This sum would build a very commodious College; the citizens and surrounding neighborhood, where it may be located, ought to furnish a proper cite, fence it in, ornament it with trees and shrubbery, and provide a proper Library for the use of the students.

The College to be chartered, and by the constitution put into the hands of a Board of Trustees, who shall have power to elect the Faculty, appoint the Fees, say what branches must be taught, &c., &c. Upon these items and the place of location much depends for thesuccess of our enterprise. I therefore at this stage of the business will pause for a little and call upon you, brethren, President & Superintendents, for counsel in this matter. Union is strength, only a few lines from each of you, promising your co-operation, naming the place you approve of, plan, &c., &c. And should you differ most materially with me in any or all points, rest assured I shall not convert an honest difference of opinion into personal invective and abuse.

Yours, faithfully,

WM. HAMILTON.

Itineracy,---The Restrictive Rule.

NO. III.

MR. EDITOR,—The present form of our itineracy, is not only contray to primitive usage, but to Apostolic preference, and sense of propriety. It requires our ministers to build constantly upon another man's foundation. This the Apostles studied to avoid. Said Paul, "so have I strived to preach the gospel, not where Christ was named, lest I should build upon another man's foundation." In accordance to this, it appears that the Apostles all took different routes, and, according to the early christian writers, "they all had their particular provinces allotted to them, wherein they went forth preaching the gospel;" thus each one laboring in his own field, not thinking it the best policy to build upon each others foundation. So there was nothing in the itinerancy of the Apostles that justifies modern itinerancy. They did not make it a point to travel over the same countries. And so, in harmony with their own action in this relation, they left all of the ministers whom they ordained, to be settled pastors, or as presbyters to labor in some particular church. But under our present economy, a minister receives a field of labor; enters upon it, perhaps under many discouragements; his talent is suited to that place; he is successful; he is the means of producing revivals and building up the church; for three years successfully, he is, by an increased acquaintance, enlarging the circle of his influence and extending his usefulness; many gather around him as around a spiritual father; he organises new societies and leads them on in paths of christian devotion; he is known, respected and beloved thro'out the community; from all by which we can judge, he might here spend many years in continued usefulness, like one of the primitive bishops, and according to Apostolic designs, residing among his own flock. But the three years have passed, and he must be removed. He must give up his field of usefulness for one in which he is a stranger; one in which it is doubtful as to his success. His talent is different from that to which they have been accustomed, but he must go upon uncertainty and do the best he can. The field of his former usefulness must be entered by another. The new minister enters into the labors of his brother; but O! he is so unlike him! He appears to be a good man but his talents are so different. He is a good preacher, but he has not the same attachment for this flock that the former minister had. They are not endeared to him by so many touching incidents and tender memories. He feels not the same watchful care. He does not visit the same. He cannot please as he pleased. Indeed, he doubts the propriety of much that was done by his predecessor, and he takes a course entirely different; being a good man; a conscientious man, he must do what he thinks to be right; and there is a division—some are for Paul, and some are for Apolos. A year—two years—three years pass, and many have become dissatisfied,—stay from church,—weeks,—months,—and finally become, disconnected therewith. Six years are spent by these two ministers in this church. At the commencement of this period all was discouraging. At the end of three years all was encouraging. At the end of six years the church is no better off than at the beginning. This is more than a mere fancied sketch. It has often been acted in the progress of Methodism with more or less exactness, and is the result of that which the Apostles studied to avoid,—building upon another man's foundation.

The natural consequence of this, is, instability in our churches. How frequently does one minister destroy one year what his predecessor built up the year before. There is no church in the world which takes in and turns out more members than the Methodist Church. The cause of this may be partly in great excitement; but this is not the principal cause. It is want of proper pastoral attention. When persons are excited to good works, form purposes of piety, and join the church, they are but babes in Christ. No one can so successfully lead them on in christianity, as the minister under whose pastoral care they have been induced to give their names to the church. But when this nursing has to be given up to strangers, it is not to be wondered at that so many die under the unnatural treatment. Who can feel the same interest in a babe in Christ as he who is his spiritual father? So much taking in one year and turning out the next, may be mostly attributed to the constant change of preachers. When a person first unites with the church he needs the care of a pastor for whom he feels a tender regard. Such as a stranger may bestow, generally, does not answer.

And there is no church in the land, which, in its individual churches, experiences more successions of prosperity and adversity than does the Methodist church. One year the circuit or station has a minister that every body likes, and he carries community with him, and in the congregation all is prosperity; but the next year they have directly the reverse;—a man who does not take with community at all, in that place, and is not esteemed by the church. The Conference is blamed for sending them such a man, but they thought it would be suitable, and they could do no better. What do the people expect from such an arrangement but instability? Citizens of any place, who expect to continue their residence in that place, in uniting with the church, wish to become connected with one where they may expect an ecclesiastical home for themselves and their children after them. The ministry of that church, in that place, is one important point, and when he observes the change and instability of a suitable ministration of the word, has he not reason to fear that in it his church relation will not be as pleasant as might be desirable? Would he not much prefer a church freed from so much uncertainty of change, and a pastor, from whose long acquaintance, he esteems him in his family as a religious father? Or after he has become sufficiently acquainted with him to discover his worth, would he desire to endure the pain of separation, and the unpleasant task, of receiving in his place a stranger, and all for no better a reason, than that such is the arrangement of the church, and the behest of a rule, which has become sanctified by age till no one must speak against it?

ON PRIDE.

Pride, which according to Scripture, is the beginning of all sin, is also the consumation of it. It completes it, by always endeavoring to exculpate itself. This evil obtains in us from our first parents, or rather it proceeds—from an imperfection entailed to our nature. Adam threw the blame on Eve, and on God for having given her to him. Eve, on her part accuses the serpent, and consequently God for suffering her to be tempted; neither the one or the other acknowledge themselves guilty. We too faithfully copy after Adam and Eve in this particular. We cannot bring ourselves to pronounce against ourselves; than which, some have denied free-will, and introduced fatality; some have imputed them to a Divine prescience, as a necessary consequence of its infallibility: others have admitted of two principles, the one good, and the other evil. But without recuring to these systems, if we consult our own pride, it will decide that the good we do comes from ourselves, and all the evil we fall into, comes from every cause besides our own will. It is to be feared there is much of this pride in the Christian Church, which proves pernicious to her children. Jehovah, desirous to crush this vice, and save us therefrom, has enjoined Humility and acknowledgment of our faults. But instead of thanking him for his goodness for affixing the pardon of our offenses, upon so easy a means, "if we confess our sin he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." Yet tho' indispensable, we put it off from day to day, and altho' we know we cannot find peace to our souls, we rather choose to live on with a tormented conscience, even at the hazard of dying in that state. And when the precepts of Christ urge that there is no longer room for delay, pangs, frights, and strange agonies ensue. So painful is it to avow ourselves sinners! So much does it cost our miserable pride to undergo such humiliation; we could wish the entire economy of the Almighty changed. Hence it is, that so few of the countless millions of immortal spirits that are brought into existence, conceive a real sorrow for having sinned. Now the first thing that repentance is supposed to effect, is an interior knowledge of our faults, and an humble avowal of it to ourselves, and before God. But when it comes to the declaration of our sins,—it is then, that pride plays its part, and displays itself. With what should we begin? It should be with the faults that are the most humiliating; but alas! the contrary is generally practised: they are generally kept back for the last. With what difficulty do we clearly confess, and how far from being explicit! Shame ties the tongue. O God! what a share of self-love, how many turnings & twistings, how many dissimulations and excuses, how many self justifications even at the expense of our neighbor, in a voluntary and free accusation, and in a matter also in which our souls are at stake!! Is it not also this same cause that puts obstacles to some certain indispensable operations!—We have been essentially hurtful to our neighbor, who have ulcerated his heart with our uncharitable, our scornful, injurious, and outragious proceedings: it is exacted of us that we appease him, to apologise, even to ask his pardon: but we are unwilling to do it; it is too painful to our self-love. We have calumniated our neighbor; his reputation must be re-established at the expense of our own, and we must recall our words before the same company. We may admit of the necessity of this retraction; but our pride murmurs at it, opposes it, and refuses to submit to it. We have been a long while at varience with others: we no longer meet or speak with each other, we are vehement in our mutual complaints and reproaches. A reconciliation is proposed to us, and we agree to it; but neither party are willing to take the first step towards it: a thousand reasons are alledged to justify the refusal; and these reasons are reducable to this, that a step of this kind would be an acknowledgment of our being in the wrong; that it would be courting our mere equal, and to debase ourselves before him;—and this is what our pride cannot condescend to. Thus it is that all animosities, resentments and hatred are kept up, and with many carried to the grave: nay, they sometimes becomes heriditary, and eternize themselves among our families. Sin, is doubtless a great evil; but the pride that palliates it, that excuses, that justifies it, is an evil incomparably greater: it is in fact this pride that brings on perdition. The humble and contrite person who declares his faults with candor and sincerity, finds plenteous grace at the throne of mercy: But the proud sinner to whom his sins give less pain that the shame of avowing it, and who does all he can to extenuate this avowal, has no pardon to expect, nor is there hope of amendment, unless he begins by controling his pride. But oh!! the great misfortune is that pride is blind, & cannot see itself. Oh that the members of Christ's Militant Church, may seek to be clothed upon with the righteousness of Jesus, that at the Harvest he may present his bride before the Father in the presence of the Angels, and all the Host of Heaven.

CANADA THISTLE.—So great is the apprehension in New York concerning the spread of this weed, that the last Legislature passed an act compelling the Railroad Companies to cut this weed down, twice every summer, on the line of their roads, and the Canal Companies to do the same, on the lines of their canals. These are the places where it is allowed to mature—scattering yearly its seeds over the country.

AUTUMN.

BY "BASIL."

The hollow breeze,
Among the trees,
Breathes deep and mournful, saddened tones,
Which enter the soul, like the sad stifled moans,
Of those who weep
Their friends that sleep
Beneath the cold, damp ground;
Where not the deepest sound,
May make their slumbers dread,
Till the last trump shall rouse them from their bed.

The garb of green,
Which late was seen,
O'er hill and valley, far and near,
Is now all withered, brown and sear;
And, as the restless, roving eye,
Strives, as it wanders, to descry
Some brighter object, the dull scene
Grows duller still, and dons its barren sheen;
And even now,
Sad as the brow
Of stern Old Winter, seem the barren groves,
Through which pale Melancholy roves,
And sighs upon the hollow breeze,
To all the list'ning trees,
A plaintive song, and o'er the heath
The branches strow their leaves, to mourn,
The Summer's death.

Down in the vale,
The list'ning trees among,
A thousand gurgling fountains wail,
With pensive song,
Whilst rustling leaves are swept along,
To add fresh sadness to the plaintive tale,
Night o'er an Autumn scene!
Cynthia on high
Sits queen-like in the misty sky,
And paints each brook, in silver sheen,
That wanders down, the hills between;
Her beams now struggle, faint and pale,
Through misty shrouds
Of rugged clouds,
Which sweep through fields, illimitable, vast,
As the wild eagle rides the midnight blast;
And o'er the moon, they cast a transient veil,
Soon rent, and swept aside
Or, scattered into air,
By winds which meet in pride,
And battle wildly there;
Like mountain torrents, meeting in the dale
And warring with each other, sweep
Man's puny labors, in one common heap
Of ruin, waste, and devastation, dire,
And leave them piled, a sample of their ire.

Now, from afar, the night-owl's heinous scream
Comes floating on the gale; and, as a dream
Of bright and sunny skies,
And soft, love-speaking eyes,
Is broke by voids unfathomably deep,
Which ope before us as we walk in sleep,
Along some runnel, as it rolls in pride,
While those we love are rambling by our side,
So does this howl of demon sound
The dreaming ear of Nature wound,
And, from the scene which late was blest,
It takes the beauty and the rest.

Now through the trees
Breathes the deep moaning breeze,
And from their thrones, the leafy throng
Fall down, the winding vales among;
Sear, wither'd, blasted, brown and dry;
Rustling their death-knell, as they fly
Among the branches, almost bare,
Or, with each other, in the air
They battle to and fro; tossed at the sport
Of fitful winds, until they find a port:
There like dull man to rot
Ere long to be forgot,
And never thought of more,
Or, thought of to be curst,
Till through the wild, terrific roar
Of maddened elements, in that Great Day to soar,
When he the confines of the tomb shall burst,
And seek the peaceful rest, which saints have Sought before.

Great God of Nature! Thou whose throne
Rests on a thousand suns of fire!
Who call'st the wide-spread universe thine own,
And o'er the waters fling'st thy binding zone;
At whose dread touch, when roused thine ire,
Ten thousand worlds with direful din expire!
Oh! Thou who rein'st the storm-god's fiery steeds;
At whose approach the dread simoom recedes;
Whose loud command, tornadoes swift obey,
And melt to gentle zephyrs 'neath thy sway!
Thou who dost temper the pale moon's mild light;
To add a dreamy softness to the night;
Who speak'st, in thunder, to the world of woe,
And sing'st in cooling breezes which do blow!
Thou! O Eternal and Infinite One,
Who guid'st the stars and light'st the flaming Sun,
And, from on high,
Send'st forth, to roam the sky,
Those wild, relentless tracts of fire,
Which sweep unguided through the air,
At whose approach the darkling spheres expire,
Or thro' the void, unbound their course they bear!
Thee I delight to view through all thy works;
In the dark storm and in the milder shower;
In the black clouds where howling thunder lurks,
Armed with thy mighty and manifold power;
And I delight to view thee in the scene
Viewed at the midnight hour, when all is still,
When Cynthia paints it all in silver sheen,
From the broad river to the gurgling rill.

HISTORICAL REMINISCENCES OF THE WAR OF 1812.

NO. VII.

(CONCLUDED.)

Mr. Editor: In my last number I have closed the narrative of that part of the operations on our north-west frontier, in which I was personally engaged, and ought perhaps to leave it there; but the indulgence you have extended to me, emboldens me to add a few observations to my already extended notes.

After the surrender of General Hull, the confidence of the community, in the men who were in office, or were called to take office, was very much weakened, or wholly lost; and the charge made by General Cass and other officers, who were under Hull, that he was a traitor, had a powerfully deleterious influence upon their subsequent efforts, to redeem the loss, sustained by Hull's surrender of Detroit. I endeavored to divest myself of prejudice, and to make up my mind as to the fact, upon the best evidence within my reach; and I came to the conclusion that Hull was no traitor, but a person totally unfit for the station he was selected for. His habits were intemperate to such a degree, as to lose him the confidence of his officers, and they became inimical, and some instances insubordinate. It is well known that General Cass' letter to the Secretary of War, contained charges he would not swear to himself or that could be proved before the court-martial which tried Hull: and I heard General James Taylor of Newport, Ky., on his return from Malden, asked the question, whether he considered Hull a traitor? He replied without hesitation, No! He was a poor, superannuated old man, drunk a good part of his time.—Such I believe was the fact; but this was not all the reason that contributed to this result, so injurious to the interest of the nation. Those who were at the head of the War Department, were not qualified for a profitable discharge of their duties, and the consequence was, a lamentable deficiency in all the requisites of an efficient army. They were destitute of provisions, and were too few for the service they had to perform. Another mistake was in estimating the power of the British in Canada, by the Regular troops; while the Indians were in fact, the dangerous part of the opposing forces: while our govererument refused to employ those Indians friendly to us, except a few as scouts, or spies.—A third error was an improper estimate of the difficulty of supplying the army, through a wet, uncultivated wilderness, full of swamps and wet prairies, of a hundred miles in extent. These difficulties had all to be encountered by General Harrison, as well as the collection, organization, and disciplining of a new army. It was also an error to advance Winchester's, and our Brigade, so far beyond the provisions necessary for their substance, so early in the season. Indeed no good was obtained by the advance to the Rapids, while the enemy had command of the lakes.—Stationed at Upper Sandusky, Solomonstown, and St. Marics, they would have as effectually covered our frontier, as at the more advanced parts, of Fort M'Authur, and Fort Defiance, and could have been more effectually disciplined, because those places were more healthy, and had better grounds for parades and drill. The large expenditure of money and the loss of life consequent to the advance of our troops so near to the British forces, and resources as Fort Meigs, could easily have been avoided, if a competent commander had been appointed sufficiently early; but Winchester's advance to Fort Defiance while he was the superior officer, was the original cause of this whole difficulty.

While our heads of departments, continue to be appointed, because of party interest, instead of fitness for the station, these difficulties will continue to occur, in the early part of all the contests this nation may be engaged in, with other nations. I fear the rule "Is he honest; is he capable" is not likely soon to be the rule of appointment in our government.

Accept Mr. Editor my thanks for your favor to me, in the publishing these notes.

HORACE NYE.

Putnam, Jan. 25, 1848.

NEW YORK AND CINCINNATI.

I have stated that the state of Ohio is gaining on that of New York, in a ratio which must render ours, by the year 1860, the most populous state in the Union. This result, if predicted twenty years since, would have been generally pronounced ridiculous, as there are not wanting persons now, who would consider it perfectly absurd to expect Cincinnati by the year 1870 to overtake the city of New York in population, wealth and business. Yet, as I have already said—there is no correct rule of computation which will not establish the fact.

Let us take the population of both cities.

New York.	Inc. pr ct.		Cincinnati.
1679	4 362	1790	500
1756	10,381	1800	750
1787	26.160	1805	960
1790	33,131	1810	2.320
1800	50.489 80	1820	9,602
1805	75 570
1810	96.373 60	1824	12,016
1820	123.706 29	1826	15.540
1830	202 589 62	1829	22,148
1835	270,089	1830	24 831
1840	312,710 54	1840	46 382
		1844	70,439
1845	371.102	1847	91.280
1850	437 650 40	1850	127 559
1860	583 533 33	1860	352 260
1870	748,007 28	1870	968,713

The figures of both cities for 1840, are the census of 1840 returns. Those of 1845, to New York, are the returns of the state census of that year. Those of the three later periods, in the same column, are estimates based on the progressive ratio from 1820 to 1845.

The figures to the Cincinnati column, for 1844 are the growth from 1840, based upon the increase in the Presidential electoral vote, during the same period. The canvass of 1840 being more spirit-stirring than 1844 hinders this ratio doing full justice, but I preferred being below the fact. The calculation for 1847 is founded on the increase of dwelling house, and the regular average growth of population since 1840. The same rule is applied to 1850.

The ratio for 1860 and 1870, is our ascertained increase since 1840, presuming that we preserve that rate to those dates.

Shall we preserve that rate? I think so.

Our railroad communications are just opening. Our manufacturing operations are enlarging in a constantly increasing ratio. The country of which we are the commercial centre, is not supplying us with more than 15 per cent of what it can produce under the stimulus prices will receive when those products can be taken by railroad transit, via New York, Boston, Philadelphia or Baltimore, to Europe.

Can any person point out a single element of our prosperity, which has not advanced in the same ratio, the past year, as the year before, or any one year in previous years. This is the true test of the question on the point I advocate, and it is believed the answer in the negative, as it must be answered, will be conclusive.

But it is not necessary for my position, that our progress up to 1870, should be maintained at our present ratio. Long before that period, the wedge between our corporate line and the hills on the north, at least, if not other territory adjacent, will be included in the corporate limits, as it now is in every other respect, as regards Cincinnati. This will serve to make up any dificiency in the ratios given above. Besides, my calculation can fall short for 1870, 230,000 inhabitants without affecting the result.—Cist's Advertiser

Extract of a Sermon,

From Zech. iv: 10. "Who hath despised the day of small things?" from a volume of sermons now in press, by Rev. T. Potter.

At a more recent period of the history of christianity, the rise of Methodism in the revival of practical godliness and scriptural holiness, through the preaching of the Wesley's, and their fellow laborers in the gospel, may be justly regarded as a second reformation of religion. In its general features, this was almost a counterpart of the first reformation, although in its occasion, and in several of its details, it was somewhat different. The first found a christianity without Christ, and brought out again "the truth as it is in Jesus:"—the latter found Protestantism a dead formality, and restored again its divine life:—as in the first, the truth was made free; so in the second, christianity was made in earnest:—in the rise of Protestantism, christianity was purified from dead works; in the rise of Methodism, christians were energized into newness of life, by a spiritual inspiration, under which their hearts began to glow with a hallowed fervor, and their lives exhibited all the quickened activity of an honest and devout zeal. This modification of christianity which we recognize under the once reproachful, but now boasted name of Methodism, needs no eulogist in the present day; for its own works are its proper enconium—seen and known by all men. Before it embarked to bear "the holy fire" across the broad Atlantic; or had landed and set down its "sacramental host" among the children of the sun, in the spicy isles of the south; in the land of its birth, and while in the feebleness of its infancy, Methodism—amid a great fight of affliction; with a haughty and jealous government scowling upon its enterprising zeal, and the worldly, lordly hierarchy of the establishment, threatening its disinterested emissaries; and the rude and violent rabble, committing brutal assault and battery upon all its humble, unresisting adherents; had shed over all England and a considerable extent of Ireland, those scintillations of christian fervor, never yet put out, but burning brighter, clearer, wider every day; and had planted in every town of note, and in many of the rural parishes, its well organized societies, which in the aggregate of their membership amounted to thousands, all living in the practice, and having the power of godliness.—Nor is it a vain assumption to assert that whatever of vital godliness, or of spiritual energy, has been, and is still exhibited, by other denominations of christians in Great Britain; it caught its inspiration, and derived first impulses from the followers of Wesley. For until these worthy followers of a most worthy leader, began to exhibit the life and power of godliness, all the religious sects were either stupified with the cold insensibility of heartless forms, or else were drowsily resting in indolent repose on an orthodox sentimentalism. Even the descendants of the Puritans, who, according to unquestioned history, had alone preserved among them the last sparks of civil and religious liberty, had not been careful to retain, at least in their pristine intensity, those sacred fires of vital godliness, that burned in the bosoms and shone in the lives of their devout ancestry. Especially in the Established church, embracing at the time not less than nine-tenths of the population of England; all the religion to be found, or to be seen, consisted in decent church-going, and in muttering over, in careless haste, the responses of a formal ritual; followed, not unfrequently, with games and sports that profaned the Sabbath, within the very enclosure surrounding the house of God. In the midst of this season of inaction and inanity, Methodism, under God, not only reared up a spiritual household of its own, a numerous and goodly seed; but by indirection, through the conjoint influence of its stirring operations, and the provocatives of its many heavenly minded examples, imparted to all other churches a portion of its own hallowing warmth, that gradually thawed away their cold insensibility, and spurred them up to an emulating energy of purpose and to an effective activity of zeal. But passing away from what was done at first; and leaving a long parenthesis between, unfilled, with what has been accomplished in the mean time; let us stay a moment to glance at the present fruits of Methodism in the various branches of its great family, as a general result. Yet how shall this be told! It is one of the marvels of true history! When we have been informed, that a full moiety of the immense population of England proper, a large proportion of the people in the adjoining principality of Wales, not a few in Scotland and the Orkneys, & multitudes in all the provinces of Ireland,—are at this day consolidated, under this name, into vast religious bodies:—and when we are further told of the thousands and the thousands of thousands in the American States, glorying in this name, and adorning the doctrines it designates, with their piety and good works:—& when we have had an exhibit, of the noble temples for worship, of the several seminaries for learning, of the large printing establishments, of the Sabbath schools and other benevolent institutions,—raised voluntarily under its influence on both sides of the Atlantic, exhibiting so much liberality and such an extent of resources as almost challenges credence:—when all these products of Methodism have been announced,—still the inquiry comes to us,—where is the continent in which its societies do not locate? Where are the people not visited by its Evangelists? What island, of which sea, if tenanted by man, has escaped the eye of its benevolence, or been excluded from the plan of its mission operations? Where are Methodists, pious and prayerful, not to be found? The south, far beyond the islands of Spice, cries out,—"they are here!"—The north, up in the everlasting snows of the frigid zone, responds,—"they are here!" The oriental, from her hive of nations, looking out upon the dark waters of the Euxine, and over the blue Mediterranean, repeats,—"even here are Methodists!" From the far west, where the desert ranger in his wanderings, and the restless adventurer in his in immigrations, are at length stopped by the surging surf of the Pacific ocean, they themselves answer,—"lo! we are here!"—Now, after this admiring survey of these prodigious manifestations of a living christianity, let us turn back and look at its first development. If we are surprised at Methodism in its present vast accumulation of members, influence and operations; must not our suprise be lost in wonder, when the record written by its founder, describing its first rudiments, its primary elements,—meets our eye, thus:—"In 1729, two young men, in England, reading the Bible, saw they could not be saved without holiness: followed after it, and incited others so to do."—"God thrust them out to raise a holy people." So it arose! "Two young men"—these were the beginning:—"reading the Bible"—"that was the exciting cause:—these youths saw that holiness was necessary to salvation—that was the paramount reason:—they followed till they found "scriptural holiness"—that was the grand desideratum:—"they excited others so to do"—that was the simple mode of operation:—and "they raised up a holy people"—these were the people first called Methodists!—"Behold how great a matter a little fire kindleth!" Surely, surely, when these two young Bible readers united to seek after holiness, and to fix upon measures to incite others to the same essential attainment, Methodism was in its "day of small things."

Prayer the First Duty of the Ministry.

The holy Spirit had a meeting, when it guided the Apostles to put prayer first in this expression. "We will give ourselves continually to prayer, and to the ministry of the Word." It is here implied that prayer goes before the ministry of the Word, as the most important exercise required of Christ's ministers. It is the better half of their whole work. When we thus speak of prayer, we mean not the performance of public prayer, but the heart's labor in prayer in all its forms. We here speak of prayer as it exists in the experience of a faithful minister, as the life of all his other duties—prayer as seasoning and directing every effort. It involves the doing of every work of the minister in the spirit of prayer.

Without this element of life pervading the efforts of the minister, how can he expect success? A prayerless ministry does not honor the Spirit of God, as the source of its power. Hence it will be found true, as a general rule, that the most successful ministers have been the most prayerful.—And most sadly do they mistake, who expect by any amount of labor, skill and eloquence in preaching, or any diligence in pastoral labors, to make amends for the want of a prayerful spirit; because this deficiency paralyzes all these efforts.

If, then, the minister longs to see religion revived, and has recourse to all the efforts which an enlightened zeal can suggest, and if he be on the point of yielding to discouragement, let him ask himself, if there has not after all his efforts been this sad deficiency—that he has not gone forth to his many labors, with his soul bathed in a spirit of earnest and importunate prayer. Let him, in a word, become more simple, childlike and prayerful, and see what the result will be.—Puritan.

The Nutmeg Tree.—The nutmeg tree flourishes in Sigapore, near the equator. It is raised from the nurseries, where it remains till the fifth year, when it puts forth its first blossom, and shows its sex. It is then set out permanently. The trees are planted thirty feet apart, in diamond order, a male tree in the centre. They begin to bear in the eight year, and they pay a large profit. They are cultivated chiefly by Europeans. There is no nutmeg season. Every day of the year shows buds, blossoms and fruit, in every stage of growth to maturity. The nutmeg is a large and beautiful tree, with thick foliage, and of a rich and deep green color. The ripe fruit is singularly brilliant. The shell is glossy black, and the mace it exposes when it bursts is a bright scarlet, making it one of the most beautiful products of the vegetable world.—Ex. Paper.

Materials for Thought.

[A selection by our Correspondent "S."]

Strauss' Life of Jesus.

"A prodigious sensation was produced in Germany on the first appearance of this work about ten years ago. For this it is perhaps difficult at first sight to account. It was not the originality of his hypothesis that occasioned this sensation, for to originality he lays no claim. It was not the profundity of his learning; for in this respect his countrymen were not long in discovering that his just pretensions were greatly below par, when compared with the average standard of learning in Germany. And as little was it the ratiocinative power displayed by him in the use of his materials; for though he throughout displays the adroitness of a skilful pleader veiled under the apparent gravity of a judge, there is little beyond this to draw admiration to him as a reasoner.—We believe the true solution of the problem is that suggested by M. Quinet, in his review of Dr. Strauss' book. "If this work," says M. Quinet, "had appeared to be the thought of one man, so many minds would not at once have been alarmed at it. But, when it was seen, as a sort of mathematical result of almost all the labors which during half-a-century have been accomplished beyond the Rhine, and that each had brought a stone to this sad sepulchre,—learned Germany started, and fled before her work."—[The serpent warmed into life!] This, we suspect, is pretty near the truth. 'Learned Germany' has been indulging itself in writing infidelity for the last half-century without altogether suspecting it. Dr. Strauss has done them the benefit of showing them to themselves; and they have been confounded, appalled, and angry, as well they might, at the hideous picture which his canvas has presented.

Strauss assumes that the Bible, written so long ago, cannot be adapted to advanced periods of mental development. This assumption, that such adaptation is impossible, is the very thing to be proved. To assume it, is to beg the main question at issue. The legendary records of Greece are not to be admitted as illustrating the want of adaptation of the Bible to all human conditions to the end of time.

Poisonous seeds and fruits—deadly poisons—were the legends of the heathen. The Scriptures are the bread of life; always were, and always will be, adapted to all human wants.

"It has been a strange and relentless conflict through which Christianity has had to pass. But she has passed through it. She has passed thro' it not only unsubdued but invigorated. Her sword has not returned back empty, nor has her banner stooped in the field. She has outlived the philosophies that offered themselves as her rivals; she has silenced by her august earnestness the petulent jests of the scoffer; she has vindicated the cause of her despised adherents; she has royally appropriated the scattered wrecks of antiquity; she has received the homage of modern discovery; she has laid the sciences under tribute, and now uses them as her servants; she has shown herself adapted to secure the happiness and promote the well-being of man in all countries and under all circumstances; and after centuries of contumely and conflict, she stands before the world with her fame untarnished, her resources unenfeebled, and her prospects of universal supremacy brighter than ever."

"Of the German Naturalist or Rationalist school, it is characteristic to give such explanations as the following, which is extracted from Strauss' book:—"The flame and smoke which ascended from Mount Sinai, at the giving of the law, was merely a fire which Moses kindled, in order to make a deeper impression upon the imagination of the people, together with an accidental thunder-storm which arose at that moment. The shining of his countenance was the natural effect of his being over-heated; but it was supposed to be a divine manifestation, not only by the people but by Moses himself, he being ignorant of the true cause." [What a simpleton these enlightened interpreters must take the great legislator of the Jews to have been, not to know that the cause of an unusual glow in his face was his having over-heated himself! How easily can German Naturalists account for every supernatural occurrence!] So also in the New Testament: "A happy accident is called a protecting Angel; a joyous thought the salutation of an angel; and a peaceful state of mind a comforting angel." The angel seen by Zacharias in the temple was only the "glimmer of the lamp falling upon the ascending cloud of incense, and shaping itself into various forms;" his dumbness was the effect of an attack of apoplexy, into which his fears threw him, but which was of so peculiar a kind, that he was able to return home healthy and vigorous; and the recovery of his speech was the result of sudden joy, with which he was seized on the occasion of the circumcision of his child, the more important event of the birth being one which he seems to have encountered with more of composure and moderation." Let these specimens suffice; though we could add scores equally puerile and ridiculous, and many much more so—such as the grave contributions of Eichhorn and Paulus, to the 'rational interpretation' of Scripture. No wonder that Naturalism dug its own grave, and became 'self-annihilated;' the wonder is, that even in Germany such a system could live and thrive at all.

——Dr. Strauss' hypothesis includes two propositions. The one is, that the Gospels are not to be received as containing narratives of real events; the other is, that these narratives are partly mythical, partly legendary, and partly intentionally fictitious. Very conveniently for himself has Dr. Strauss constructed his theory. He reminds us of the preacher who always took several verses to speak from, assigning as a reason, that when he felt himself straightened in one, he could flee to the next. This principle is analagous to that of the ancient schoolmaster, who to abbreviate the processes of geography, was wont to say to his pupils: 'Boys, the world may be conveniently divided into three parts,—Great Britain, Europe, and the rest; now when you want to know where any place is, look first for it in Great Britain; if you cannot find it there, look next for it in Europe; and if you cannot find it in Europe, you may be sure it is in the rest of the world.' So says the learned Dr. Strauss:—'Try the myth first; if that will not do, try the legend; if that fails, there is the limitless field of spontaneous addition—you will be sure to find room for it there. Any thing, in short, rather than believe it.'

A writer in the Westminster Review, who is very far from being a Christian—but rather avows infidelity—in noticing Strauss' work, says,—"It is no longer true 'that out of nothing nothing can come; for, at least Strauss shows you that into nothing every thing may vanish. He touches the past with his wand, and its personages quit the ground, and float in ideal forms away; its sharp outlines waver and melt, its colors mix, and it retires in dissolving views. The most solid and brilliant objects, clear as the windows of history, or as the very sun that shines through them, are scanned by his unblenching eye till they become spectra, not only discredited as existences, but reversed even as phenomena; individuals lose themselves in their age; their age in the courses of humanity; and humanity itself, in the phantasmagoria, which we call the universe.—It is the pride of Strauss that he uncreates. At his spell the warmth of every faith, the accumulated glow of old ages, that alone renders the present habitable, suddenly becomes latent: the facts, the scenes, the truths, that reabsorb it, run down in liquefaction, pass off in vapor, and restore the world to a nebular condition." Such are the workings of the German philosophy of which so much has been heard. Such is German Neology—liquefactory, vaporish—not even a shadow of things present or things to come.—It is characteristic of infidelity to destroy what it denies; it would form a new creation. Or, if in condescension to the superstition of Christian people their new systems should comprehend some of the precepts of the Bible, they must be permitted to expurgate its essential doctrines, deny, or account for all its miracles, and utterly repudiate its authority as an inspired book. This is the privilege of every worshipper at the shrines of sensualism and transcendentalism. The questions are: What is comprehensible? What pleasurable?

A very respectful inquiry may not be out of place: What new intelligence has modern infidelity for the world?

Are their alleged reasons for rejecting the Holy Books new? Nothing new have they to propose—their faith in all unbelief is not a new faith—its wickedness, and injuriousness, and absurdities, have been manifest of old. What new system of morals, what new motives prompting to all goodness; what new rewards and penalties do they propose? And above all, what new religion, to live with and die with? What are the testimonies of the death-bed scenes of infidels? Hume, who contemplated annihilation with complacency, was busied on his death-bed about his posthumous fame. Of course, infidels are to be guiltless—they have denied their accountability. Some have renounced immortality. For them there is no future. Others, who accept of a future, intend to select their own condition in eternity. These have never been subject to "the grand vice of Protestantism, in according to the Bible a mastery over their souls!"

Men are certainly free agents within prescribed limits, but they often find it hard work to submit to restraints which they disallow and cannot remove. Infidels, however, are not wholly inconsiderate of themselves and others in some of the social relations. They are generally willing that the Bible should hold a mastery over the souls and bodies of their wives and daughters—and even of their sons, it is true, that they would rather they would be Christians than vagabonds. Infidelity never yet saved a human soul; it has no power but to destroy. "What shall a man give in exchange for his soul?"

We were forcibly impressed with the remark that "the grand vice of Protestantism is its erecting the Bible into a mastery of the soul." This is the glory of Protestantism. The shame of infidelity is—its eternal shame it must be,—that it "erects" the bodies and souls of its votaries—'the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eye, and the pride of life' into a supposed mastery of the Bible. But man's unbelief and corruptions cannot make void the law of his Creator.

There is more sunshine than rain—more joy than pain—more love than hate—more smiles than tears, in the world. Those who say to the contrary, we would not choose for our friends or companions. The good heart, the tender feelings, and the pleasant disposition, make smiles, love and sunshine everywhere. A word spoken pleasantly is a large spot of sunshine on the sad heart—and who has not seen its effects? A smile is like the bursting out of the sun from behind a cloud, to him, who thinks he has no friend in the wide world. The tear of affection, how brilliantly it shines along the dark path of life! A thousand gems make a milk way on earth, more glorious than the glorious cluster over our heads.

The population of Wisconsin is estimated at 200,000.

The Conference closed its session in much good feeling.

We just add: We have been to many Conferences, but this has been the most harmonious and best we ever attended; it was hard parting, but the preachers went to their several stations in good spirits. We have had considerable increase the past year, and God grant us success the present. PUBLISHING COMMITTEE.

Religious Intelligence.

MUSKINGUM DISTRICT.

Georgetown Ct., Jan. 27, 1848.

BR. BASSETT: I would say through your valuable paper, to our worthy President, Brother Clancy, and the friends of religion, that we are still trying to live though we are surrounded with many things to discourage us. We have held our first quarterly meeting and two protracted meetings. At our quarterly meeting, the church was much revived. The second meeting was held at Harrisville. There we were compelled to close on Monday night for want of help, just when we think that good might have been done. Many of our brethren were there from every other part of the circuit. Had not the world a hold upon our friends, how much better would a general turn out make our meetings. A general interest is beginning to appear. The membership is beginning to act their part. Our congregations have increased three fold. We are looking for a revival. May God send it. Our second quarterly meeting will be held at Georgetown, commencing on the 19th of February next. We invite Brothers S. W. Laishley, S. Lancaster. and all others of our brethren that can come heaven and earth, S. CATLIN.

OHIO DISTRICT.

Richwood Ct., Jan. 20, 1848.

BR. BASSETT: We are not getting along as we should like to do, on Richwood Circuit. We have entirely too much love of the world among us; and far too little responsibility—individual responsibility—felt for the welfare of Zion.—Peace, however, reigns among us, and at some of our appointments there is manifestly an increasing interest felt for a revival of the work of Christ Jesus our Lord. We held a protracted meeting at Middletown, commencing December 14th, and closing January 9th, 1848: the best meeting I ever attended, taking all the appointments into consideration. It was generally agreed that we had not one meeting in which the power of God was not displayed. The watch-meeting especially was one of great solemnity and religious feeling. The result of our meeting was several conversions, and twelve accessions. If we had more of a self-sacrificing spirit among us—if we had less of compromise with the world, Richwood circuit would soon blaze forth in a general revival. I am not able to do half the service this year, on account of afflictions, as I did last; and I have many things that weigh down my hands. But my trust is in God, and to his name be all the glory for what has been done already. My colleague has proved himself very acceptable to the people. Pray for us.

Yours, in Christian Love,
JOHN B. PEAT, Supt.

Michigan District.

Pennfield, Jan. 19, '48.

BR BASSETT: It may be interesting to your readers to know something about Marshall Circuit; it is a part of the Belvue circuit, where the beloved Williams met his fate last year: although he has gone to join the Church above, yet he lives in the affections of all that knew him. This Circuit has about fifty members. I came on to my appointment the next week after the rise of Conference, found some of the classes without leaders, and no prayer meetings; now we have four prayer meetings on this work, and the membership is coming up to the help of the Lord against the mighty. Our first quarterly meeting was held the 4th and 5th of December; our beloved Brother Mack, the President, was not with us; all the help I had was Brother Miller, who preached twice with great acceptibility.—The weather was extremely cold, that kept some of our folks at home, but the good Lord was with us. The lovefeast was good. To hear three kinds of Methodists, Congregationalists, and Baptists, speak of the goodness of God, was happyfying. The communion season was very refreshing. The Lord was made known in breaking of bread,—two joined on probation in the lovefeast. Have had an addition of thirty since Conference. Our neighbors are at peace with us on this work, and one local preacher of the Methodist Episcopal Church, preaches for us at one of our appointments once in four weeks, and I preach for them in one of their classes once in four weeks. Our next quarterly meeting will be the third Saturday and Sunday in February.

WESTERN REGORDER.

PUTNAM, OHIO:

Thursday, February 3, 1848.

IMPOSITION.—Br. J. B. Jewel, of Michigan, to whom we sent by mail 66 pamphlets, informs us that he was charged a postage of 3 cents a piece on each. The lawful rate of postage is 2½ cents each. If any P. M. charged him more than this, he should refund the balance, or be reported at once to the Department, and lose his office.

ANOTHER.—A few weeks ago, a man sent us for insertion in our paper, a notice of his own marriage, upon which he made us pay postage. No other printer would have published it in such case. We did.

AN EXCELLENT ARTICLE.—The paper on Strauss' Life of Jesus, on our first page, Read it.

"AUTUMN."—The poetical effusion on our first page, we are assured, was produced by its writer at the age of fifteen.

THE RISE AND PROGRESS OF METHODISM is graphically given in the extract of a Sermon by Br. Potter, on our first page.

"PLEA FOR TOBACCO!"—Our friend 'Northern Light' thinks we must give the other side this week. Well, we can't refuse. We felt quite alarmed when he began to mention about 'the fury of the women,' but were entirely relieved when we found that they were not against us, but on our part.

"HISTORICAL REMINISCENCES" &c.—We are under obligations to our old friend, Maj. Nye, for the interesting series of papers which closes with our present number. We believe they have been read with interest generally, and sought after by many. We have sent a copy regularly to the Cincinnati Historical Society, not doubting that the articles will be preserved with the Annals of the Association. In reference to the incidents of the campaign in the North West, the writer of the Reminiscences 'knows whereof he affirms,' having served not only as Brigade Major, but Paymaster, during the service. The incidents seem to have made a vived impression on his mind, which still remains undiminished by time.

ZANESVILLE CIRCUIT.—We had the pleasure of attending, on last Saturday and Sabbath, the quarterly meeting at the village of Gratiot. We were pleased to find a very respectable turn out of brethren from all parts of the circuit, as well as a full attendance from the village and vicinity. Quite an encouraging amount of religious interest was excited, and it is hoped that not a little good will result. The Quarterly Conference passed a resolution in favor of holding a camp-meeting the ensuing summer, in conjunction with the adjoining (Newark) circuit. Brother Hoagland, the Superintendent, seems encouraged in reference to religious prospects within a considerable portion of his charge. Brother Potter, the Conference Missionary, was in attendance, zealously striving to 'abound in the work of the Lord.' When we had to leave, the brethren were expecting to continue the meeting for several days longer.

AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY.—The Zanesville Gazette of last week publishes the proceedings of a public meeting at which was organised an Agricultural Society for Muskingum county. Rev. C. Springer, was chosen President; G. W. Gibbons, Vice President; J. L. Cox, Treasurer; R. I. Peach, Secretary; J. Findley, J. Dillon, S. Rodman, J. John, and C. Hall, Managers. A Committee was appointed to prepare a Constitution. Next meeting of the society is to be held at the Senate Chamber, Zanesville, on the first Friday in April, 10 o'clock.

REV. LEWIS GARRETT.—We learn by the Nashville Christian Advocate, that this aged minister has recently taken refuge in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. He was received into the Mississippi Conference at its recent session. By his own account, Mr. G. was driven by unrighteous treatment, some years ago, from the M. E. Church, after which he identified himself with the Methodist Protestant Church, until his recent change just announced. This does not surprise us at all. Whilst with us, he improved his time faithfully in writing against the government and administration of the old church, in which he brought forth many cogent truths and arguments, but seemed to excel all other writers for severity. Bishop Soule especially came under the lash of his pen. We have published much for old Brother G. out of respect for his age and long standing in the ministry. But we have on hand several unpublished articles of his, which we might now hand over to the editors of the Nashville Christian Advocate, if they think they would suit the latitude of the 'city of Rocks.'

SCIENTIFIC ASSOCIATION.—The Pittsburgh Gazette of last week gives the constitution of an association recently formed in that city, called the Scientific Association of Western Pennsylvania. Its chief object is 'to promote the investigation of physical science, and to diffuse knowledge on that subject by the formation of a cabinet of objects of natural science—the collection of a library—holding meetings for discussion—delivering lectures,' &c. The society is to be convened at intervals of once in four months. Professor Lemuel Stephens was chosen President. Dr. Jackson, of Blairsville, Vice President. Dr. King, of Greensburg, Corresponding Secretary. We are gratified to learn of the formation of such an Association at Pittsburgh. It is to be similar to one which has for some years been in existence in Cincinnati, called the Western Academy of Natural Sciences.

☞ It is now confidently announced that Gen. Scott has been re-called from Mexico, and that Gen. Butler of Ky., is to be Commander-in-chief.

U. S. CONGRESS.

Mon. Jan. 17. House.—Mr. Giddings of Ohio introduced the following resolution, which after considerable debate and confusion, were laid on the table, by the following vote. Yeas, 94. Nays, 88.

Whereas, on Friday last, three armed persons, engaged in the internal slave trade, entered a dwelling in this city, and violently seized a colored man, employed as a waiter in the boarding-house of several members of this body, and, in the presence of his wife, gagged him, placed him in irons, and, with loaded pistols, forced him into one of the slave prisons of this city, from which, it is reported, he has since been dispatched for the slave market at New Orleans;

And whereas said colored man had been employed in said boarding-house for several years, had become well and favorably known to members sf this House, had married a wife in this city, and, under a contract to purchase his freedom for the sum of $300, had, by great industry, paid that sum within about $60:

And whereas outrages like the foregoing have been of common occurrence in this District, and are sanctioned by the laws of Congress, and are extremely painful to many of the members of this House, as well as in themselves inhuman: Therefore,

Resolved, That a select committee of five members be appointed to inquire into and report upon the facts aforesaid; also, as to the propriety of repeating such acts of Congress as sustain or authorize the slave trade in this District, or to remove the seat of Government to some free State.

Senate.—The credentials of Mr. W. B. S. Moor were presented, he having been appointed by the Governor of Maine to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of Mr. Fairfield. Mr. M. was qualified, and took his seat.

Thurs. 20. House.—The death of Hon. J. W. Hornbeck, a member from Pennsylvania having been announced, the usual resolutions of respect were passed, and the House adjourned.

Fri. 21.—The death of Mr. Hornbeck, having been announced, the usual resolutions were passed, and the Senate adjourned.

Ohio Legislature.

Mon. Jan. 17. Senate.—A bill was passed to extend the corporate limits of the town of Bellbrook, in Green County.

Fri. 21. Senate.—Mr. Winegarner from Committee on railroads and turnpikes, reported a bill which was read the first time, to authorize the County of Muskingum and the town Council of Zanesvile to subscribe to the capital stock of the Central Railroad.

House.—The bill to erect the new County of National was lost by a tie vote. Yeas, 32. Nays. 32.

Sat. 22. House.—The bill to erect the new county of Gilead was amended by striking out Gilead and inserting Morrow. The bill was then passed for erecting the new county of Morrow Ayes, 39. Nays, 22.

Mon. 24. Senate.—The bill to erect the new county of Bennington, was indefinitely postponed. Yeas, 18. Nays, 16.

OHIO DEAF AND DUMB ASYLUM.—We have in hand the 21st Annual Report of this Institution. The Trustees say that through the last year, a kind Providence has continued the life & health of both teachers and pupils, and found the Asylum with success and prosperity. The number of pupils the past year has been 101, of whom, eleven finished their course of study, and eight others failed to return. Forty-two new pupils were received at the commencement of the present term, making the whole number now in the Asylum 121.

During the past year, the Superintendent has visited several similar Institutions in eastern States. He states it as a pleasing reflection that throughout the civilized world, a greater interest is now taken in behalf of the deaf and dumb, than has existed at any previous period. He names as favored countries, Prussia, Denmark, parts of Germany, France, the British Isles, and the United States. He observes however that there is no Institution for the Deaf and Dumb, upon the American Continent, save in the United States.

OHIO INSTITUTION FOR TRE EDUCATION OF THE BLIND.—The Eleventh Annual Report of this Institution is before us. The Trustees say that the Institution continues in a prosperous and progressing condition. At present, there are sixty eight pupils in the Institution, twelve of whom were admitted during the past year. A year ago, three of the pupils went to Indianapolis, and gave an exhibition before the State Legislature of Indiana, which was well received, and determined that body to adopt the policy of Ohio, by erecting a similar State Institution, which went into operation in October last.

LOSS OF THE A. N. JOHNSON.—We have received a copy of the testimony taken at a public investigation in Wheeling of the causes of the late fatal disaster to the Steamer, A. N. Johnson. We have perused it carefully, and do not see why the owners and Captain should not be acquitted of all censure in reference to the calamity. Indeed we are informed that the Insurance Companies, were so well convinced of this, that they voted unanimously to pay the insurance. The Statement of Captain Bennett makes it appear, that the accounts of the number of lives lost have been greatly exaggerated. He thinks the number could not be over thirty. He does not hazard an opinion as to the cause of the explosion, considers it unaccountable. He says

"Whatever may be the verdict of public opinion in the matter, no power on earth can rob me of the pleasing consolation of having done all in my power to avoid the accident. There are none that can be more keenly alive than I am, to the desolation that has been wrought, or whose sympathies are more warmly & honestly tendered to the bereaved, to the widows and orphans, and friends of those that perished in this distressing catastrophy."

THOUGHTS OF AN ITINERANT; &c. By Rev. Levi R. Reese, Baltimore, Methodist Protestant Church, 1847.

We are pleased to acknowledge the receipt of a copy of this work, having previously observed flattering notices of it in religious papers of Baltimore. It is a beautiful volume of 189 pages, 18mo. It contains brief chapters on the Church of Christ—its positive institutions—its means of grace, and social obligations; and is designed as a family companion for Methodists. The design and arrangement of the work are original and well devised. Brother Reese is a writer of chaste and interesting style. His present production is a book, filled with valuable and useful hints on the advantages and obligations of Church relations—and the reciprocal duties of the Christian ministry the membership of the Church, and its various subordinate officers. The necessity of personal and family religion, and faithful attention to the various means of grace, is forcibly urged upon all. The book is a valuable compendium for both official and private members of the Church. It is designed as a family companion for Methodists, because it approves and defends the usages of the Methodist branch of the Christian household. Yet the writer is not a sectarian, as will appear from the following passage:

Here the reader may be startled with surprise, and ask, does the writer mean to teach that "a man may be a christian and not a good Methodist?" Certainly he does—and why not? In earlier life he deemed such a thing an absurdity, but experience and observation have taught him better.—A man cannot be a good Methodist and not be a christian, because, to be a Methodist implies not only submission to Methodist discipline, but a belief in Christ and an earnest desire to flee from the wrath to come, and be saved from sin: but he may be a christian—i. e. he may believe in Jesus, and experience the peace of pardon in his heart, and be obedient to Christ, and yet his judgment may not approve, nor his will consent to the usages and institutions of Methodism.—The peculiarities of Methodism as a branch of the General Church do not commend themselves to his mind. Either from prejudice, or taste, or judgment, or education or some other cause he feels that he cannot enjoy himself or in any wise profit from the exercise of a class room—or that he cannot approve of, or be edified by the teachings of an itinerant ministry. He is not, nor can he be therefore a good Methodist. He may however be a good christian and greatly enjoy himself in religion and be very useful in the world, in some other church where the machinery of its government is better suited to his modes of thought and peculiarities of mind!

The General Church resembles in some respects a vast army, divided into its appropriate battalions. Each church constitutes a battalion, under the command of Christ as the Commander-in-Chief, but having its own subordinate officers, and its own peculiar regulations. In an army all may be good soldiers, but all may not be suited alike to the same division. Some suit the Infantry—others, the Artillery—others, the Cavalry, and as such they do execution; but change their position—put them under tactics which are adverse to their tastes and habits—and though they may be just as patriotic and brave they are no longer so efficient. So with the churches—a man for instance who has been trained in the forms, and educated in the prejudices of the Episcopal church may be a sincere follower of Jesus Christ, and as such do much good to the glory of God, but put him under the economy of Methodism, and he will be tramelled and you shall soon discover that he cannot work with its machinery! A man may be trained a Methodist and be truly pious, and yet he cannot be brought to read his prayers or to profit by the Litany of the church! Now in the first instance the Episcopalian tho' a good man is not a good Methodist, while in the other the Methodist though equally good, is not a good churchman. In this sense we believe a man may be a christian and yet not a good Methodist,

We would be glad to see the excellent little work of Brother Reese generally circulated, and find a place in every family of our people, as we are persuaded that it will do good.

MORE BANK FAILURES.—We learn by last number of Bicknell's Reporter, that the State Bank of Saugerties, N. Y., and Cayuga Lake Bank, Ithaca, N. Y., have suspended.

Correspondence.

DEAR BROTHER: People seem to be entering up complaints against you for your course—in reference to Masonry and Anti-Masonry, Tobacco and Anti-Tobacco, &c.—And I don't know but I have as good right to make known to you my complaints as any body. Therefore I will tell you what I like and what I dislike in your paper.—I like the general course of its Editor, I like his modesty and forbearance—I like the interest he manifests for the good of the church, and all Benevolent institutions.—I like his selections of News Items,—and his kind intercourse with Brother Editors, &c.—I dislike his admiting articles in his paper that are calculated to stir up hard feelings, with Brethren, who differ on such subjects,—as Masonary and Anti-Masonary, &c., as the discussion can lead to no good results—but the contrary—I dislike too much discussion of the vexed Negro question,—because many of the readers of the Recorder have long since become sick of it. I dislike the using of expressions in reference to the acts of our Political Government that are calculated to injure feelings of brethren, that cannot see as the Editor does,—such as denouncing the President* and calling the present War with Mexico an unjust and unholy War and such like expression,—as I do know that there are brethren that are equally interested in the general good of mankind, who honesly differ with the kind Editor on this very subject, who have kept pace with the whole affair, and sought for correct information. A Christian Editor should use his best exertions to prevent collisions among Nations and contend for peace—but when his country is engaged in doing what the powers that be, deem proper and right he should not hedge up the way—or abuse those whose opinions are entitled to equal respect with his own,

Now Brother, these things frequently grate upon my feelings and had it not have been for the respect I entertain for my brother and the knowledge I have of his good intentions I should long since ceased to have been a subscriber to his paper—but I know we should bear with each other's infirmities—for we are creatures liable to do wrong on all sides.—I have frequently felt if I could see my brother face to face I would scold him for some things, and commend him for others. But after all, the Western Recorder is as good a paper as any I am acquainted with, and its Editor a very clever and worthy brother. Excuse my liberty Br. Bassett, and if you feel like it, scold me in return for this my complaint and whatsoever you think amiss in me.

Your old friend and brother,
THOS. P. ARMSTRONG.

Laporte, Indiana, Jan. 5th, 1848.

*Our old friend certainly does not mean to say that we have ever done this thing. If he does, we must call for the specifications. ED.

News of the Week.

THE NEW REPUBLIC.—We learn from the Liberia Herald that the following Flag and Seal were adopted by the Convention, as the insignia of the Republic of Liberia, and ordered to be employed to mark its nationality.

FLAG: Six red stripes with five white stripes, alternately displayed longitudinally. In the upper angle of the flag, next to the spear, a square blue ground covering in depth five stripes. In the centre of the blue one white star.

SEAL: A dove on the wing with an open scroll in its claws. A view of the ocean with a ship under sail—the sun just emerging from the waters. A palm tree, and at its base a plough and spade. Beneath the emblems the words "Republic of Liberia," and above the emblems the national motto "the love of liberty has brought us here."

NATIONAL EXCHANGES.—We announce with pleasure the arrival in our city on his way to Washington, of M. Vattemare, a gentleman who is known throughout the civilized world, for his earnest and untiring efforts, to secure a system of national literary and artistical exchanges. He brought over with him from France, presents of various kinds, to the value of $80,000, consisting of books, engravings, medals and other products of taste, industry, skill and genius. The enterprise in which this ardent and enthusiastic Frenchman is engaged, commends itself to all our purer and better feelings and tastes. It may be regarded as a sort of mental bond of union throughout the world. On his return, M. Vattemare proposes to have an exhibition in Paris, of the works of American industry and skill, and with this object he has already secured the promise and support of the French Government, thro' one of its leading functionaries.—Sat. Gleaner.

Tutor Goodrich, of New Haven is out of danger.

The American Bible Society are now printing, at their establishment in Nassau street, N. York, about 70,000 copies of Bibles and Testaments monthly—equal to 840,000 annually—and yet are not able to meet the constantly increasing demand.

IMPORTANT SUIT.—The New York Express says: "It was mentioned, not long since, that a mandamus had been applied for, requiring the Trustees of the Centenary Church at Brooklyn, to shew cause why they refuse to give possession of the pulpit to Rev. Mr. Griffin, who had been appointed by the Bishop to the charge. The argument commenced on Monday, and is not yet, we believe, concluded. Mr. Green, who is in charge, and is the favorite of the trustees and congregation, was suspended by the Bishop, and Mr. Griffin appointed, but the trustees would not receive the latter, and hence the present proceeding. The salary of the pastor, we believe is about $1000 a year, paid by the congregation,"

STATES NOT IN DEBT.—We gave a list a day or two since of such of the indebted States as are not paying interest or principal. The States which are not in debt, we believe, are the following: New Hampshire, Rhode Island, Delaware, Iowa, Connecticut, Vermont, and North Carolina. New Jersey has a small temporary debt of $37,000, which will probably be paid the present year. The year 1847 has been remarkable for resumption of two States—Maryland and Indiana—the first in full, and the second partly. Maryland, from this time forth will pay the interest on her debt promptly, and Indiana will, without doubt, promptly pay the interest on that portion of the debt which the State has assumed.—Balt. Sun.

SHENANDOAH IMPROVEMENT.—The bill on the improvement of the Shenandoah River, has passed the Virginia Senate, and being returned to the House with amendment, will pass that body, without doubt, and become a law. The fact that a dividend of 8 per cent. has just been made upon the Monongahela improvement, after its second year, should be an encouragement to this undertaking.

ANOTHER LINK.—The telegraph connexion between Buffalo and Cleveland is now complete, and the line is operating. Our business men will find it a great convenience.

TRADE.—Large quantities of Sugar, Molasses, Tobacco, Coffee and other staple groceries have been received, within the week past, by our Merchants, and yet further supples are on their way from Pittsburgh, Cincinnati and New Orleans, at which latter point our heavy dealers make the bulk of their purchases.

The difficulties of transit on our Improvement are much exaggerated at a distance, we have been informed. One merchant here received a letter from a customer in Newark, a few days since, asking if it was 'true' that there would be no fresh stock of groceries in Zanesville this season. If the gentleman had a peep at our Main Street for a few days past, he would have been satisfied on that head. And we take pleasure in stating for the information of frends abroad, that they will, upon trial, find this market as well stocked and as good this spring as it has ever been,—reports to the contraay notwithstanding.—Zanesville Courier.

The Free White Population of western Virginia, numbers eighty thousand more than the free white population of eastern Virginia.

THREE HUNDRED DOLLARS WORTH OF RELIGION.—Mr. Brown in a recent lecture at Salem, Mass., said he knew of a slave put up at auction upon whom only $100 was bid, but the auctioneer announcing the fact that she was pious, the bids became lively as high as $800.

MELANCHOLY ACCIDENT.—Three Men drowned—The ferry boat while crossing the Illinois river at Ottawa, on the 5th, was swamped, and of six passengers in it, three of them were drowned.

The Burning of the Steamer Yallabusha.

The New Orleans papers of the 20th bring additional particulars of the destruction of the Yallabusha by fire, on the 18th, when opposite "the College," above that city. As usual, the number of persons lost was overrated by the first report. The fire is said to have spread so rapidly that the passengers were unable to save anything. It originated on the star board side, a little forward of the Clerk's office. The Captain immediately ran the boat ashore, but she instantly rebounded into the stream. Some of the passengers at the time jumped on the bank, and saved themselves, some jumping into the river.

The New Orleans Commercial Times gives the following as a list of the passengers who lost their lives on this melancholy occasion: Mrs. Jane Chamberlain and child, Miss Frances Johnson, Mrs. Bernard and children, Rev. Mr. Page and two children, a son of judge Mills, Mr. John Johnson, Mr. Alexander's two children, Mr. Nicholas and child, together with one or two of the boat's crew, and the watchman.

Most of the passengers saved were taken to New Orleans by the steamer Childe Harold, Captain Pierce, from this city, on board which boat the sum of $175 was raised by contributions among the passengers for the benefit of the sufferers.—Cincinnati Gazette.

LAKE TRADE OF OHIO.—From the report of J. L. Weatherly to Mr. Spencer, chairman of the Chicago Harbor Convention, which appears in the Cleveland Herald, of the 11th inst., we learn that during the year ending September last, 1,445 steamboats and 1,550 other vessels cleared from Cleveland to other United States ports, also 87 American vessels and 99 Canadian to Canada; 876 steamboats and 515 other vessels cleared from Fairport to other United States ports.—Cleveland exported in that year to other United States ports 697,533 barrels of flour, 2,336,263 bushels of wheat, 1,432,332 bushels other grain, 27,289 barrels of pork, nearly a million lbs. butter 575,933 lbs. wool, &c., value over nine millions of dollars, Cleveland also exported to Canada 37,192 bbls. of flour, 452,280 bushels wheat, &c., value $695,244. Sandusky exported to Canada wheat, flour, &c., value $160,137, and to other United States ports, value $3,438,530. Huron exported to United States ports. value $2,293,010. The vessels owned at Cleveland, Sandusky, Huron, Vermillion, Black River, and Conneaut measure 29,958 tons, are worth $1,462,960, and are manned by 1,544 sailors. Vessels worth nearly a million of dollars have been built at these ports. The imports into these harbors from Canada were valued at $219,983. A description of the harbors is given.

GAS WORKS DESTROYED.—On Saturday morning, about four o'clock, the gas works, at Wilmington, Delaware, were entirely destroyed by fire—the result of carelessness on the part of a boy. The fire spread with much rapidity, soon enveloping the building in one sheet of flame. The citizens of the place will necessarily be deprived of their gas lights for some time.

STRUGGLE FOR FREEDOM.—Every arrival from Europe brings indications of increasing efforts on the parts of the many to obtain a greater degree of civil and religious liberty, and a corresponding necessity on the part of the powers that be, to yield to the demands of a more enlightened public sentiment. Among these indications in England, may be named a meeting of deputies of the "Three Denominations," (Independents, Presbyterian, and Baptists,) recently held in London, when it was stated that through their operations, there were at present not less than sixty-two members of Parliament who were opposed to all grants of public money for the purpose of religious endowments. The proposed admission of Jews into Parliament excites intense opposition.

PITTSBURGH AND CONNELLSVILLE RAILROAD.—The Uniontown (Pa.) Democrat, of 20th instant, has the following paragraph:

"Five miles of this road are to be put under contract to-day, commencing two miles above Connellsville and going eastward. The friends of this road are in fine spirits, and have every assurance that the stock will be taken and the road completed. The charter is now considered safe."

RAILROAD ACCOUNTABILITY.—An order has been adopted by the lower House of the Massachusetts Legislature calling on the President of all the railroads in the Commonwealth, to transmit to the Speaker, by the 15th of February, a statement of the number of persons, passengers or employers, killed on the respective roads since their opening, the number wounded, the amount of damages paid to the injured and to the representatives of the dead, and the causes and manner of the accidents, so far as can be ascertained.

MANUFACTURE OF GLASS.—A mountain of silex has lately been discovered in Tennessee, near Harisville, Summer county, which is pronounced by the State geologists to be the finest in the Union. A bill is before the House for the incorporation of a company for the manufacture of glass, and Tennesse bids fair to outrival any of her sister States in the manufacture of this important article.

PUBLIC LAND SALE.—At the Chilicothe (Ohio) land office, during the year ending the 31st December last, there was a total of 64,081 acres sold, the value of which was $83,008,59. The sales of the past year largely exceed those of any previous year. The lands are all sold at $1.25 per acre, with the exception of a small quantity of Miami Extension Canal lands, which are valued at $2,50 per acre.

CAVE IN WISCONSIN.—The editor of the Wisconsin Argus recently explored a large cave, situated in Dane county, the entrance to which is under a high bluff, on the eastern edge of Nine Mound Prairie. The party explored the cave to a great distance, winding their way through intricate and dripping passages, which led to several subterranean rooms. After groping their way for several hours, the company emerged to daylight, their countenances streaming with perspiration, and their clothes plentifully garnished with mud. Another party has subsequently penetrated this dark labyrinth to the distance of a thousand feet; without finding any sign of an end.

The Argus thus speaks of the appearance and geological character of this newly discovered cavern:

"In many of the larger chamber, numerous stalactites were found, depending from the roof, many of them of immense size. The smaller ones are translucent, but those of larger size, from yearly contact with water, blackened with vegetable mould were, opaque. Stalagmites were also equally numerous, and of like kind. Specimens of both kinds, brought out, upon test are found to be carbonate of lime. The rock is the magnesia limestone of the lower group. We found nodules of chert and other characteristic marks of the true lead bearing rocks. Masses of red earth or clay of a peculiar unctuous feeling, were found, but none were brought out."

Church Action.

We notice everywhere, over the South, action of some kind, on the subject of the religious instruction of our colored people.

The Quarterly Review, edited by H. B. Bascom, L. L. D. and published by John Earley for the Methodist Episcopal Church South, for July has an article on the Religious Instruction of Negroes, written by our old friend the Rev. Mr. Wightman, of South Carolina. It details what Methodists have done, and are doing in that State. The degradation of the neglected plantation negro is faithfully depicted, and the superiority of house and town servants freely admitted; and, also, the humanizing influence which instruction produces.

But in all the reports we have read, one fact stares us in the face—the bold and open licentiousness which prevails among the colored people. In the minutes of the Dover Baptist Association (which includes the Churches of Richmond, Williamsburg, and James city in Lower Virginia) details are given, and the Church invoked to act upon them. That body declares:

"The greater barrier to their salvation is their exposure to the transgression of the seventh commandment. Of three hundred and sixteen exclusions from the first African Church of Richmond during the last six years, two hundred have been for this offence!"

Talk of the spread of religious knowledge where such licentiousness prevails! Men of God! it is a vain hope. Nothing so quickly saps all virtue as this vice. It consumes all manly and womanly hope, and leaves those who practice it with a reckless and scarred moral nature. Can fathers remember, will mothers love their offspring when thus debased? Can, or will they, love their God while thus hopelessly sunk in a brutalizing pollution? We must strike at the root of this evil, else will churces and masters fail to meet the fearful responsibility which rests upon them.

The Dover Association, while pointing to the fact, that churches educate and send out missionaries to the heathen, invokes the church—invokes all churches—to do something towards the improvement of the colored race, and recommends—

1st. That pious families should keep up morning and evening worship, and require their servants to attend.

2d. That public preaching should be more adapted to them.

3d. That catechisms should be used in families and the house of God.

4th. That the marriage tie should be enforced.

We hope our friends in Lower Virginia will consider the necessity, in this connexion, of obtaining the passage of laws which shall legalize the marriage of slaves, and bar masters from separating families. This is absolutely essential to the christianizing of our colored people. And the Churches in Virginia and Kentucky could accomplish these objects, if they were to set about it. Will the good and pious meditate upon our suggestion? Will they, in the spirit of our common master, meet the responsibility which "Divine Providence has thrown around them?"—Examiner.

A CHURCH OF ENGLAND DIFFICULTY.—There lately arose in the church of England a great turmoil in opposition to the promotion of Dr. Hampden to the see of Hereford. By the last accounts we learn that it has come to an issue—an issue, by the way, which could not well be different, seeing that the form of election by Dean and chapter is really a mere sham, and that all the English Bishops are in fact appointed by the Crown—that is, by the Prime Minister. Notwithstanding every instrument of opposition was put in requisition by the Dean of Hereford himself, and other Oxforpites, yet in view of Lord John Russell's disregard thereof, when the votes of the chapter were taken a majority were found in the Doctor's favor. The Dean voted against him, but gave the final certificate necessary to constitute his legal election. The actual difference between Dr. Hampden and the Oxford or Puseytte clergy, appears to be this: He makes the Church subordinate to the Scriptures—they exalt the Church in authority over the Scriptures.

The Influenza still prevails in London and the provincial towns. It proves generally fatal to old people, a very large number having died lately with this epidemic. It is said thon the influenza is the fore-runner of the cholero, and considerable alarm begins to be manifested. Sanitary commissioners and cleansing of streets and drains are the order of the day. To such an extent has this "cleansing" been carried, that in one parish the scavengers were at work on the Sabbath!

INDIANA.—The message of Governor Whitcomb to the Legislature of the State shows that the ordinary expenses of the State Government for the fiscal year ending on the 31st of October last, were $90,762 67, and the amount of revenue $362,347 07. The Governor congratulates the Legislature on the success of the efforts to remove from the State the stain of repudiation. Over nine millions of bonds, exclusive of interest, have been cancelled under the arrangement entered into with the creditors of the State, and hopes are entertained that most of the remainder will be in like manner surrendered. The principal of the suspended debt, for which State bonds were given, amounted to eleven million and sixty-five thousand dollars. On this debt no interest has been paid since 1841. The interest on it was $554,770 per annum, by which amount the State's indebtedness was yearly increased.

EXPLOSION AND LOSS OF LIFE.—A dreadful accident occurred on Tuesday, at Crother's turning shop, New Market street, Philadelphia. A young man named John Duffee, was so severely injured by the bursting of a boiler, that he died while on his way to the hospital. Great damage was done to the building, machinery, &c.

DEATH FROM HYDROPHOBIA.—John Craymer, a youth, expired on Monday last, at Philadelphia, from an attack of hydrophobia. He had been bitten in the hand about nine weeks previously, by a dog which was not then known to be mad. He expired after enduring the greatest torments.

ON OPENING the Magnetic Telegraph line, between Chicago, Illinois, and Milwaukie, Wisconsin, last week, the following correspondence took place:

MILWAUKIE, Jan. 17, 12½ P. M.

MILWAUKIE, with her 14,000 inhabitants sends greeting to her fair sister Chicago with her 17,000, requests her to clear the track, to allow her to pass.

To this was immediately received in reply:

CHICAGO, with her 17,000 will soon have her railroad tracks east to the Atlantic and west to the Mississippi clear, so that the 14,000 citizens of their sister city can have every possible facility for passing.—Pitts. Com. Journal.

WOOLLEN FACTORY.—Messrs. Bennett and Chouse, are about to erect a Woollen Factory in the vicinity of Chillicothe, Ohio. They have plenty of capital, have ordered machinery, and are making necessary preparations to enable them to go into operation on the first of May next. Their machinery is to be of the first quality, adapted to the manufacture of cloths, casinets, casimeres, jeans, tweeds, linseys, blankets and flannels.—Pittsburgh Com. Journal.

PENNSYLVANIA PUBLIC WORKS.—The net revenue of the Pennsylvania State Canals and Railroads for the year ending Nov. 30, 1847, were $888,044, being an increase of $307,522 over the net revenues of the previous year. But for the damage by the freshet, the Commissioners say, the net revenues would have reached $1,272,463. The excess of receipts over expenditures in 1847, amounts to one hundred and forty-eight thousand eighty-two dollars and sixty-seven cents.

WE SEE it announced that a new work entitled, "Statistics of Coal," is shortly to be published. A work of the kind is much needed, and the one proposed we judge, by the brief outline which we have seen of its contents, to be complete and satisfactory. It will contain complete review of the state of the Coal Trade, its present condition and prospects; together with Geographical Maps and tables, showing the distribution of the Coal through the country. This will make it a work of great value, not only to the practical man of business, but to the student and scholar. It will shortly be issued from the press, when it will be for sale at Mr. Bosworth's, No. 43, Market Street. In our community the book cannot fail to meet with a very extensive sale.—Pitts. Commercial Journal.

The Honest Preacher Rewarded.

The following anecdote of the late king of England, is said to be from an authentic source:

A few years ago, when George IV visited Ireland, he remained sometime in Dublin, its capital. As it was expected he would attend Divine service, an eminent clergyman was appointed to preach before him. When the time approached, the clergyman fell sick, and it became necessary to appoint another to perform that duty. Dr. Magee, author of a work on the atonement, being in Dublin, was solicited to preach before His Majesty. He accepted the invitation.—The Doctor was a warm, zealous Churchman, of enlightened views, and liberal, evangelical sentiments, When the Sabbath came, he read the prayers, ascended the pulpit, and gave out the following text, Acts xxi, 31: 'Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved, and thy house.' In this discourse he expatiated on the necessity of repentance, faith, and holiness. The command to believe—the object of faith, (the Lord Jesus Christ)—character of Him on whom we are called to believe—the importance of doing so for our own safety, and as an example to others but particularly our own houses; with the individual, local, & national advantages of religion, were eloquently and honestly presented to His Majesty, & his court, present on the occasion. After he had held forth the doctrine of justification by faith, he powerfully insisted on a change of heart, without which it was impossiele for any individual to arrive at heaven. His boldness & earnestness surprised and alarmed the courtiers of His Majesty, who had not been accustomed to such plain dealing. All were looking for a reproof from the sovereign for the boldness of the preacher; but though his sermon was a subject of general conversation, his majesty alone retained a total silence respecting it, never alluding to the circumstance for several months.

During this time, the Archbishop of Armagh, Primate of England, died, and the Right Rev. Lord John Beresford, Archbishop of Dublin, was appointed to succeed him. The See of Dublin, being in the gift of the crown, a list of candidates were nominated to His Majesty, for each of whom powerful interest was made. Dr. Magee not being a favorite on account of his evangelical sentiments, was neglected. When His Majesty proceeded to make the appointment, he inquired the name of the faithful, able, and eloquent preacher who had delivered a discourse before him in Dublin. He was told that it was Dr. Magee. "Then," said he, "the man that fears not to preach the whole truth before his king, shall be honored, and Dr. Magee shall be Archbishop of Dublin." After saying this, he took his pen, and filled the blank in the deed of gift with Dr. Magee.

RAILROADS IN THE WEST.—A great railroad meeting was called at Chicago on the 18th for the purpose of taking into consideration the construction of a railroad to connect the Upper and Lower Mississippi with the Lakes, and petitioning Congress for a donation of land to aid in that object.

SNOW.—This stranger to the low country of Georgia, actually made its appearance in minute quantities on Thursday last.

ANOTHER REVOLUTIONARY HERO GONE.—We regret to learn the death of Daniel Jones of Roxbury, Morris county, N. J. at the age of ninety-two years. He died after a brief illness, on the 22d of December, and his wife, aged 70 years, died on the 27th of the same month. Mr. Jones was a Sergeant in the army of the Revolution and served during the whole war. He was at the battles of Bunker Hill, Stillwater, Saratoga, Trenton, Princeton and Monmouth, and served three years under Gen. Wayne in his Western Expedition.

PERILOUS ADVENTURE.—On Saturday morning, as the Rev. Mr. A. Underwood, of the Free Church in Clinton street, was riding on horseback along Broad street, near the corner of Market, he attempted to raise his umbrella to shield himself from the rain which had just then began to fall in large drops, when the animal became frightened, reared suddenly upon his hind feet, and threw his rider from the saddle. His feet becoming entangled in the stirrup, he was dragged thro' the mud some distance, the horse jumping and kicking all the while. Fortunately, the Rev. gentleman escaped from his perilous situation without sustaining any personal injury, but his appearance was any thing but comely.

NEW BANKS.—The State Journal of Tuesday contains a proclamation by the Governor, declaring the establishment of the following new Branches of the Ohio State Bank:

The Belmont Branch at Bridgeport.
The Knox County Branch at Mt. Vernon.
The Union Branch at Massillon.
The Portage County Branch at Ravenna.

ABDICATION OF THE EMPEROR OF RUSSIA.—On the first of December, says the London Sun, the Emperor of Russia completed the 22nd year of his reign; in three years, therefore, he will have arrived at an epoch which has not been attained by any of the Czars before him. A fundamental law exists in Russia, which dates before the time of Peter the Great, and by which the Emperor of Russia can reign no more than twenty-five years. After this period he is obliged to abdicate in favor of the heir presumptive of the Imperial Crown. It is thought he will try and have the law revoked.

DEATH AFTER INTERMENT.—We hear it rumored, that a female was interred in Charlestown, Mass., recently, whose body was subsequently found in a state that proved her to have recovered animation and suffered all the horrors of death by starvation in the tomb. Many such cases are related, perfectly authentic, and of such a character as to urge upon us the importance of due caution, in not too hastily interring the apparently dead.—Sci- Amer.

REMEMBER THD SABBATH DAY.—The Grand Duke Constance, during his tour in that region, visited the islands of Staffa and Iona, in the Shearwater. He arrived at the latter on Sunday. The stern old keeper of the cathedral keys refused to unlock the gate and admit the party to see the tomb-stones, for that would, in his opinion, have been to desecrate the Sabbath. In vain did Capt. Robison ask imploringly whether he was aware who the illustrious stranger was whom he refused to gratify. Donald "didna exactly ken." He supposed, "from what folk said, it was only the Emperor of Russia. But he wadna gie up the key to his own Queen on the Lord's day. There was a power aboon superior to ony earthly power, and he couldna gie up the key."

SWITZERLAND.—The members of the various religious orders expelled from Switzerland, says the Freeman's Journal, have entered France, Belgium, Baden and Austria. Some of the Jesuits have arrived at Vienna and met with a kind reception from Prince Metternich.

NEW ORLEANS BRANCH MINT.—We understand that for the month ending December last $470,000 in gold eagles, and $90,000 in half dollars, were coined at the U. S. Branch Mint in this city. This makes a total of $530,000 coined in the month of December.

WINDFALL.—The origin of this term is said to be the following:—Some of the English nobility were forbidden felling any of the trees in their forests—the timber being reserved for the use of the Royal Navy. Such trees as fell without cutting were the property of the occupant. A tornado was, therefore, a perfect Godsend in every sense of the word, to those who had occupancy of these entensive forests, and a windfall was sometimes of very great value. Some years since, it is said, a tornado threw down timber enough on the Duke of Marlborough's estate, to sell for forty thousand dollars.

HOGS FOR THE EAST.—Live hogs are being shipped from this point to Baltimore. Three hundred and fifty were yesterday put upon flatboats, to be towed to Wheeling, driven to Cumberland, and from thence by railroad to Baltimore. Pork commands a much higher price in Baltimore than in this market.—Cincinnati Commercial.

COLD IN NEW HAMPSHIRE.—A letter from Franconia New Hampshire dated 11th inst. says:—

"This is the coldest morning of which we have any record. On the 26th January, 1847, the spirit indicated 38 degrees below zero, & on January 17th, 1840, 37 degrees below zero; this morning at sunrise, 39 degrees below zero, and the mercury congealed in the bulb of the thermometer, and did not thaw till it was brought under the influence of fire. Last evening, when the spirit indicated 15 degrees below zero, the mercury stood 21 degrees below, so that, could the mercury have resisted the cold it would have indicated 45 degrees below zero this morning.

A fire occurred in Chicage week before last, which destroyed $30,000 worth of property.

FATAL MISTAKE.—Recently, in mistake, a dose of Croton oil was administered to a child in Boston. Croton oil is a deadly poison, and is only administered in desperate cases; and then in very minute doses. Twenty men would have been killed by the dose given to the child, who expired in an instant after swallowing it.—Cin, Com.

SUDDEN DEATH.—We learn from the N. O. Picayune that Charles Henry Langdon Elwyn, Esq., well known in this city, died suddenly last week at the house of Mr. Adams, without any apparent cause being visible. He was as well as usual, and had been riding on horseback just before his death. We learn that he dismounted, walked into the house, sat down and died. He had for some time past complained of palpitation of the heart. He was much respected by his numerous friends.—Cin. Com.

SMALL POX IN INDIANAPOLIS.—There are said to be two cases of small pox in Indianapolis—the wife of Mr. Palmer, proprietor of the Palmer House, and Mr. Chapman, editor of the Sentinel. Some of the knowing ones think the Legislature which has again assembled will fly from the State.—Cin. Com.

ANOTHER VICTIM.—The N. Y. Commical, of Saturday, announces the death, by ship fever, of Dr. John Snowden, physician & superintendent of the institution of the Commissioners of Emigration at Ward's Island. Dr. Snowden has died a martyr to his zeal in the discharge of his duties.

IMPROVEMENT IN THE TELEGRAPH, PERHAPS.—The Cincinnati Chronicle, of the 17th, says:—"We have conversed with Dr. Roe, of Illinois who is proceeding to Washington with the model of an invention which he calls the Telegraph Manipulator. Dispatches, messages or large documents are set up in electrical types, locked in a chase in a manner similar to printing types, and the form placed upon the machine. Dr. Roe is sanguine in the belief that he can by this machine transmit to all points connected with the wire, as much matter as would make one entire page of the Chronicle in twenty minutes

"The Manipulator is represented as being remarkably simple, and not likely to get out of order. And to secure correctness, as well as speed a proof is taken from the types, in the ordinary manner."

NEW YORK, Jan. 23.

The Roman Catholic Church, Elizabeth street, near Walker, was destroyed by fire, last night.—Three houses on Elizabeth, and six on Bowery, were also destroyed. The loss was heavy, and many families were made houseless. Numbers of women and children were turned out, without shelter.

A fire occurred in Cleveland, on the morning of the 18th inst. in a wooden building occupied as a store and dwelling. The fire occurred about three o'clock, and the house entirely consumed. The family escaped, but without saving any property. A man named Spear, who was engaged in endeavoring to rescue a person supposed to be in the upper story, was badly injured by the explosion of a quantity of powder.

BALTIMORE AND OHIO RAILROAD.—The Baltimore Clipper says that a proposition has been made by Mr. T. W. Leston, on behalf of himself and others, to complete the whole line in four years on the following terms, if we correctly understand them:—The price of the whole work shall be seven millions—the company to apply its surplus revenue to the use of the contractors for four years—say, in the whole, three millions. This would leave four millions to be to be furnished by the contractors; and for this amount, together with the difference of interest between four and ten years, the company to issue their obligation, payable with six per cent. interest, in from one to fifty years.

IMPORTANT DECISION IN MISSISSIPPI.—In February 1840, the Commercial and Railroad Bank of Vicksburgh, which was incorporated with a capital of $4,000,000, made two deeds of assignment conveying all its property and effects of every description to three trustees, or assignees, for the alledged purpose of enabling it to avoid a forfeiture of its charter, by completing the railroad by the time prescribed in its charter, and placing all its creditors upon an equal footing.—In 1841, Alexander H. Arthur, a large bill-holder, instituted a suit to recover his claim, which suit has been carried from inferior to superior courts, until at length it has been decided that the assignment is illegal and void upon the face of the deeds themselves. The decision was based upon the point that the assignment was an attempt to appropriate the property and effects to the ultimate benefit of the bank, postponing creditors without limit. The effect of this decision is to displace the assignees, and throw the whole business of the bank back into the hands of the president, directors, and company, as it stood before the assignment.

CHURCH SOLD FOR DEBT.—The Parish of Grace Church, Cincinnati, has been dissolved, and the church sold for debt.

A water Velocipede has been invented, consisting of three hollow tin cases, connected by iron rods, to which is affixed a seat, the propelling power being paddle wheels moved by the feet. Speed, five miles per hour, as long as your legs can stand it, and you have neither wind, waves, nor current to contend with.

SLAUGHTERING.—There are about ten thousand hogs yet to be slaughtered before the close of the season. Lots, from different quarters, are continually coming in, and several houses which had closed, have again resumed. We saw 3,000 hogs in the pens of Hand & Patterson, yesterday.—Cin. Com.

LOSS OF THE ANN CHASE.—The United States steamer Ann Chase, according to news received at New Orleans on the 19th inst., was lost twenty miles to the southward of Tampico bar—no lives lost.—Cin. Gaz.

SERIOUS ACCIDENT.—Mr. John Long, a farmer near Cumberland, Md., while felling a tree, on Friday last, was caught under it and crushed to the earth in such a manner as to break his back, and other seriously injure him. He still lives, but his recovery is doubtful.

SPRING TRADE.—The New York Sun says that Western and Southern merchants and jobbers are arriving in large numbers, and that large stocks of dry goods have been pledged there by the British manufacturers, who can well afford to sell at a reduction of twenty-five or thirty per cent, on last year's prices. This country is not able to pay the high prices of last year.

EVILS OF DISSECTING.—Dr. Moses P. Greenleaf, aged thirty-one years died in West Newton, on Sunday, probably from a poisonous humor taken in a dissecting room in Boston. He visited his patients only three days before his death.

HORRIBLE.—A man named James Kelley while cleaning hogs at Jersey City, a few days since, was accidentally knocked into a hogshead of scalding water. He died on Wednesday evening.

MEETING HOUSE BURNT.—The colored people's meeting-house, near Elkton, Md., was burned down, on Saturday last. This is the second time this church has been destroyed by an incendiary.

Notices.

New Salem, Ia. Jan. 21, 1848.

BR. BASSETT: On Flat Rock Circuit I suppose we have about 100 members, seven preaching places and no preacher to supply them. The brethren would be satisfied if those places were supplied regularly every three weeks. This could be done on Sundays. Perhaps occasionally it would require a Saturday for the performance of said labor. The brethren would raise $100. The balance of the time a minister could employ himself in that way he might see fit in sustaining himself and family.* Should any one proffer his services that wishes a home he can accommodate himself with 80 acres of land, 40 acres of which is improved, for $1,000, four or five hundred of which must be paid down, the balance can be discharged in five or six years at $100 with 6 per cent. interest thereon annually, and the Brother may continue our superintendent as long as the parties agree or the rule allows.

Should you have any knowledge of a Brother that would likely make such an arrangement please inform him. We want a man to settle among us and continue with us. JOS. J. AMOS.

* We only remind our worthy old friend, that the duties of the pastoral office should require somewhat more of the minister, than the mere Sabbath services.—ED.

Pisgah Ct. Muskingum District.

Our second quarterly meeting will be held at Bethel, on the 19th and 20th of February. Will Brs. C. J. Sears and H. T. Lawson come to our aid?

O. V. WARREN.

NEWARK CT., MUSK. CON.—Our second quarterly-meeting is to be held at Elizabethtown, (Perryton) commencing, February 19th. We invite Brs. E. S. Hoagland, J. S. Thrap, A. K. Duffy, and any others of our brethren who can favor us with their assistance.

W. H. MARSHALL.

COSHOCTON CT., MUSK. CON.—Our second quarterly-meeting is to be held at Pleasant Bethel Meeting House, some three miles north of Jacobsport, on the Coshocton road, commencing on Saturday, February 12th. Can you not come and assist us? WM. ROSS.

[O for a railroad, that we could slip through that 40 miles in an hour or two. We would certainly try and come to Brother Ross' meeting. There are so many demands upon our time, it is almost impossible for us to go from home a day's journey. But if we miss it this time, we have it in our heart to visit C. circuit at a later period in the year if possible.—ED.]

DEATHS.

DIED—In Schenectady, New York, on the 8th inst., Judge JAMES V. S. RYLEY, in the 87th year of his age.

Fifty-six years ago, as we have been informed, our venerable and respected fellow-citizen, Colonel DANIEL CONVERS, then a mere boy, was a prisoner among the Indians, in the vicinity of Detroit. Impatient of captivity and ready to risk all to accomplish his own deliverance, he had for some time entertained an indefinite intention to escape. But the idea of taking to the woods with the hope of reaching the Muskingum was, under the circumstances, a hopeless one. In this dilemma, Judge Ryley, whose death is above recorded, then a trader among the Indians, becoming acquainted with his design, pledged all the assistance in his power. In fulfillment of his pledge, he obtained from Captain Smith, the commandant of the English garrison at Detroit, a promise that, if Convers should reach the fort, he should there be protected. Convers accordingly improved the first opportunity, and made his way to a Frenchman's house near the fort, and concealed himself in the loft. The Indians, following the trail, came up and searched for him in vain. Thence he found his way to the fort, and eventually to his home and friends.

Towards the deceased, Colonel C. has ever entertained feelings of the liveliest gratitude, always alluding to him as the savior of his life. More than thirty years elapsed ere he again heard of or from his deliverer, when, from Hon. Lewis Cass, he learned that Judge Ryley was a resident of Schenectady, and a correspondence was opened.

The instance we have related was not the only one of Ryley's active aid to Americans escaping from barbarous captivity, and we have deemed the notice of his decease a fitting occasion for our narrative and for the payment of a deserved tribute to the memory of the deceased, on behalf of humanity and feeling.—*Zanes. THE OHIO CULTIVATOR FOR 1848

Published at Columbus, Ohio, on the 1st and 15th of each month, M. B. Bateham, Editor and Proprietor. Terms, $1 per year—four copies for $3—payment invariably in advance.

THE fourth volume of the Ohio Cultivator will commence Jan. 1st, 1848. This paper has now become so well known that it is scarcely necessary to speak of its character, or to allude to the commendations it has received from the Public Press and other sources. The editor is determined to spare no pains on his part to sustain the reputation of the work, and make each succeeding volume more useful than the preceding one. Our motto is "upward and onward;" and the object of the "Cultivator" is not only to collect and disseminate valuable facts and information relating to practical agriculture, but to inspire 'Farmers' with more just conceptions of the dignity of their profession; to induce them to cultivate the 'Mind' as well as the 'soil,' and thus elevate themselves to that position which it is their duty and privilege to occupy as 'American Agriculturists,'' in this age of Progress and Improvement.

With its very large list of contributors, numbering over "two hundred," most of them practical farmers in the West, the pages of the "Cultivator" will contain the results of "Experience," as well as the teachings of "Science;" and being written or selected with special reference to the climate, productions and farming of Ohio, this paper will be found more valuable than any other for the farmers of this and the adjoining States. It will contain the latest intelligence of the "Markets" of this country and England; notices of the weather and the crops; descriptions (with engravings,) of improved implements, machines, &c.; instructions in gardening and fruit culture; rearing and management of domestic animals; construction of farm buildings, fences, &c.; and a "Ladies' Department" devoted to household affairs, useful receipts, &c.

The friends of Improvement in Ohio and adjoining States are requested to obtain and forward subscribers for the Ohio Cultivator. Remember that the price is only "seventy-five cents" each, when four or more names are sent by one person. All subscriptions must commence with the first number of the volume; a complete index is furnished at the end of the year. Specimen numbers and a prospectus will be forwarded to all who desire them.

☞ "Now is the time to subscribe!" Letters with remittances may be sent by mail at the risk and expense of the publisher. Address,

A NEW AND IMPROVED VOLUME FOR 1848!

SEARS' PICTORIAL FAMILY MAGAZINE,

Established for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge:

A Monthly Miscellany of moral and instructive information, embellished with numerous ENGRAVINGS of the various subjects treated of in the course of the year. Published monthly, in parts of 48 large octavo pages each.

PROSPECTUS FOR THE FIFTH VOLUME.

For four years the Pictorial Family Magazine has been before the American public, and it is peculiarly gratifying to the Publisher to know, that his efforts to do good through its medium, have met with the universal approbation of the public & the public prints, wherever it has found its way. It is now too firmly established upon the broad foundation of public confidence, to require a great flourish of trumpets to proclaim its continued existence, or the tricks of 'puffery' to allure the people to its support.

To those who are acquainted with the Magazine, it is unnecessary to speak of its design & merits; to those who are not, we will make a brief statement of both. The original design of this work was a noble one, and worthy of all praise. It was intended as a vehicle for conveying solid information to that class of citizens whose circumstances denied them the privilege of drinking abundantly

☞ Price two dollars per annum—three copies for five dollars, or ten copies for fifteen dollars—invariably in advance, as no Numbers are sent out until the subscription is paid.

☞ Thus far we have gone on steadily advancing in public favor, the sure indication of which has been a healthy increase in our subscription list. That we shall double our present number of subscribers in 1848, we have little doubt, for we intend doubling our efforts and increasing very greatly the value of the Magizine. We shall engage the very best engravers to be found. We have now some plates, illustrating a great variety of subjects, in progress for our new volume, that will be equal to anything that has appeared in the country.

☞ EVERY MAN HIS OWN AGENT.—All remittances of money for this Magazine must be sent to us free of postage. Those wishing to take our Magazine, will please write direct to us, enclosing a year's subscription ($2,) or the price of a club (ten copies for $15,) in funds current in the State where they reside. MISSIONS.

BY MRS. SIGOURNEY.

Light for the dreary vales
Of ice-bound Labrador!
Where the frost-king breathes on the slippery sails,
And the mariner wakes no more;
Lift high the lamp that never fails,
To that dark and sterile shore.

Light for the forest child!
An outcast though he be,
From the haunts where the sun of his childhood smiled
And the country of the free;
Pour the hope of heaven o'er his desert wild,
For what hope on earth has he?

Light for the hills of Greece!
Light for that trampled clime,
Where the rage of the spoiler refused to cease
Ere it wrecked the boast of time!
If the Moslem hath dealt the gift of peace,
Can ye grudge the boon sublime?

Light on the Hindoo shed!
On the maddening idol train;
The flame of the suttee is dire and red,
And the fakir faints with pain,
And the dying moan on their cheerless bed,
By the Ganges laved in vain.

Light on the Persian sky!
The Sophi's wisdom fades,
And the pearies of Cirrus are poor to buy
Armour when death invades;
Hark! Hark!—'tis the Christian wanderer's sigh
From Ararat's mournful shades.

Light for the Burman vales!
For the islands of the sea!
For the coast where slave-ship fill her sails
With a sigh of agony,
And her kidnapped babes the mother wails!
'Neath the lone banana-tree!

Light for the ancient race
Exiled from Zion's rest!
Homeless they roam from place to place,
Benighted and oppressed,
They shudder at Sinai's fearful base;
Guide them to Calvary's breast.

Light for the darkened earth!
Ye blessed, its beams who shed,
Shrink not, till the day-spring hath its birth,
Till wherever the footstep of man doth tread,
Salvation's banner; spread broadly forth,
Shall gild the dream of the cradle-bed,
And clear the tomb
From its lingering gloom,
For the aged to rest his weary head.

Itinerancy,---The Restrictive Rule.

NO. IV.

MR. EDITOR,—Such is the nature of the gospel ministry, that no human being, without supernatural assistance, can determine how long a man will be useful in a field of labor. And will it be pretended that any thing but a regard for usefulness, is to govern the direction of ministerial labor? I know that we are very apt to be influenced by selfish motives; and that the idea that the better appointments ought to be handed round among the brethren of a Conference, is one of the mighty arguments with some for the restrictive rule. But according to the great gospel design, such motives are to have nothing to do in the direction of ministerial labor. The great leading and governing object in this calling is usefulness. We may judge from existing and visible facts that a brother will be useful in a place for a year, or two years, and by this judgment a Conference may be governed in appointing him. So they may judge from existing facts that he will not be useful for a longer period than two years. But it may not happen according to their judgment. At the end of two years, other facts may be visible. Ought they then to bind themselves, or to be bound, by a solemn obligation, that the brother shall not stay longer than two years, so as to prevent them appointing him a third year, provided existing facts, at the end of two years, should lead them to judge that he would be more useful in that place a third year than in any other? Ought they to be thus bound? Ought the minister to take upon himself such a binding obligation, that he will in no case whatever labor in the same station for a longer period than two years; and thus say to God, you must do all the work that you have to do thro' me to that people in the space of two years, for I positively will stay there no longer? Ought we to bring God to our measures, or adopt his? —Now we read that "the word of God is not bound;" but its message in him is by this bound down and limited. I argue from this that the Conference, the minister, and the people whom he serves, ought to be left free to continue the relation as long as existing facts lead them to judge that he will be more useful in that place than in any other, If no man can know how long he may be useful in a place, I hold it to be sinful for him to say that he will in no case stay longer than a given period, or for those who have the control of his continuance to say this of him. Certainly if a man ought to feel free at all times to follow the convictions of duty, he ought to be left free so to do. What is the duty of an individual in this case, is surely the duty of the whole church. You may here see the bearing of the restrictive rule.

This rule is inconsistent with the belief in a call to the ministry. How is it supposed that a man is called to the ministry? Not by an audible voice, but by a conviction of duty, and the openings of Providence. But the duty to which he is called relates to his fellow creatures. He feels that he is required to warn sinners and lead them to the Saviour. Providence opens his way to a field of labor. Now by what rule is he to determine the length of time that he is to continue in that field of labor? I think that common sense, and common Christianity, would both answer, by the same rule that he at first determines it to be his duty to preach the gospel. By the restrictive rule he may determine how long his church would have him remain, but not how long it may be the divine will that he should stay. Can it be pretended that God calls him to preach and will not in the same way make known to him his duty in relation to entering upon or continuing in any field of labor? Or will it be pretended that God calls a man to preach, and as soon as that is done, hands him over to the Constitution of the Methodist Protestant Church for the direction of that ministry, and makes known ministerial duty to him no farther? I think that no advocate of the restrictive rule can believe this, and yet that rule virtually assumes that this is the case. If the Divine will has to do with one part of ministerial duty, it has to do with every part. If that will is made known in relation to the commencement, it must also be made known in relation to the continuance of ministerial duty.

The restrictive rule is perfectly arbitrary. It knows no circumstance, hears no plea, and sees no necessity. It must be admitted that there may be instances in which the welfare of the church will require a longer continuance of a minister than the limitation of this rule;—instances, when such are his convictions of duty, and the indications of Providence;—instances in which God may call him to continue in his charge as loudly as ever HE called him at first to enter the ministry, but this human rule prohibits the divine rule; being absolute in its authority, it regards no contrary claim, however high it may be. It is true that one man would be more useful in a given field than another, and so be useful for a longer period than another. But this rule places all upon the same ground.

This rule also prevents the minister from laboring in that field where his talent would render him useful. That the same talent is not adapted to every place, may be seen by common observation. The minister who would be useful in one place, would not be in all others. But if God has called a man to preach, there can be no doubt but there is some place where he will be instrumental in doing good. There may be many places, and there may not be many. Where ministers, then, are constantly exchanged from place to place, it must be expected that they will often be left in fields of labour to which their talent is not adapted. Whereas, if they were left free to follow their own conviction of duty, and the openings of Divine Providence, no man, whose duty it is to preach, would be long without a field of labor, and that would be one to which his talent would be adapted. The objection to the restrictive rule, in this case, is, that when he is in such a field of usefulness, he cannot be permitted to stay there.

Restrictive Rule.

NO. I.

BR. BASSETT:—With your permission I wish to present to the consideration of the readers of your paper, a few thoughts on the subject of a Resolution which was discussed at our last Annual Conference, which, if it prevails, has directly in view the removal of the 'Restrictive Rule' from the Constitution of the M. P. Church. In doing so, I am aware of the contrariety of sentiment there is entertained on this subject, and consequently, cannot hope for a universal reception at the present, of the theory that may be presented. I am aware also, of the peculiar circumstances connected with this subject which are calculated to prejudice the mind against the change contemplated; and that many of our ablest men are not only opposed to the change desired, but they appear determined to sustain the Rule with all their influence against all arguments, however convincing, and facts demonstrating the contrary never so clearly. The genius of our institutions requires of each man, as he is in duty bound, to think and act in view of his personal responsibility, and not to receive the ipse dixit of any man or body of men, uninvestigated. And we have a right to differ, if after a faithful endeavor to know the truth, we cannot see eye to eye. The right of private judgment was not only taught and believed in Witemburg, and Zurich, but is a fundamental peculiarity of Protestantism, and should be exercised and held inviolate by all, even in the question now to be presented. Neither do I think the reason which is urged by some of oldest and best men, to be either worthy of their intelligence, or of sufficient moment to induce continued silence on the subject:—viz. 'That at the time of the organization of the church, those who persecuted the reformers, accused them of wishing to destroy an efficient inerrancy.' To which accusation they plead not guilty, and now conceive, that in order to consistency, they must continue to operate under this rule unchanged. I dissent from such conclusion for two reasons:—1st. Though we readily acknowledge the superior wisdom of those honored ones who framed the Constitution and Discipline of the church, yet it would be absurd to suppose them capable of knowing every circumstance connected with our subsequent history, and providing for exigencies that might arise. —2d. I honestly believe that to remove the rule would not only not destroy, but that it would give efficiency to our itinerancy. In presenting the subject through this medium, while we desire the church to examine it unbiassedly, we desire also that those who entertain contrary sentiments will use the same medium in giving us their views, with all the arguments by which they are sustained; that the views entertained on both sides of the question, thus made tangible, may be judged of as to their consistency and propriety.

The following is the resolution spoken of in the commencement:—

Resolved, That it is the opinion of the Pittsburgh Annual Conference of the Methodist Prot. Church, that the 'Restrictive Rule' which forbids the stationing of ministers and preachers longer than three years successively on the same Circuit and two years successively in the same station, is contrary to Apostolic usage, not necessary to an efficient itinerancy, and in many instances, is detrimental to the interests of Circuits and Stations; and consequently, the Delegates to the next General Conference should be clothed with conventional power, in view of its removal from our book of Discipline.

As I am opposed to the use of anonymous signatures, I subscribe myself, Yours, &c.,

Answer to "A Virginian."

NO. IV.

MR. EDITOR: Having in my last No. shown that our relation to slavery, is sinful, and that the system of slavery owes its existence to the more humane, and professing Christian slaveholder; I come now to consider another question proposed by "Virginian." He says, "I ask you, sir, what advantage has the Methodist E. Church received from a division into a Northern and Southern General Conference? What injury has it done?" Our Virginian then answers, "It has dissolved all friendly intercourse with each other, and the North Church is decreasing by its hundreds of thousands;—also meddles with our civil Government, and is now shaking these United States from centre to circumference." Now, good Virginian, if you were in earnest when you wrote the above, the god of slavery must have blinded your eyes, or you would never have ventured your veracy on such assertions. If you will look at this subject with "the beam" of slavery out of your eye, you will see that there is some friendly intercourse among the true lovers of Christ, and haters of sin North and South, and instead of the North Church decreasing by hundreds of thousands, it has only for the past year decreased about twelve thousand, and that it is the slavery party if any, which is "shaking these United States from centre to circumference." For slavery's enlargement and protection, Texas must come into these United States, and then war exists between Mexico and the U. States, and thousands of valuable lives are sacrificed on both sides, and both republics plunged into debt and disgrace, and all the evils of a long protracted hostile war. Also because slavery could not exist unmolested in the character of one of the acting Bishops of the M. E. Church, its advocates call for and make arrangements for a division of the church, and off they go into the Church South. And the Methodist E. Church North has gained much every way by the division, but chiefly because it has almost entirely stopped the emigration from the M. E. Church, to the Wesleyan Church. And at the next General Conference doubtless they will claim all the Church property, and all the territory South as well as North. Now, sir, I want every Methodist Protestant to protest in all consistent and lawful ways, against all sin, slavery not excepted.—I want the law-making department of our church to make laws against the practice of slaveholding, and slavedealing in our church. And if nothing can yet be done against slavery, rather than the slave power and influence should destroy our church at the North, or even cripple her energies, I should wish for a peaceable division into two General Conferences. And if we cannot effect a peaceable division, and must have war, I wish then for every opposer of slavery in the Methodist Protestant Church to gird on the armor, and in all suitable ways contend against slavery in the Church.

In my next No. I will answer the inquiry in relation to immediate emancipation.

Yours, &c.,

JAMES GAY.

Written for the Western Recorder.

A Plea for Tobacco.

MR. BASSETT: We would have you and the readers of your paper to understand that we consider the Western Recorder one of the best papers in our country. But yet there is one thing about it, that is not so congenial to our feelings, that is the opposition it contains against the precious Plant of Nature, Tobacco; and indeed, sir, it appears to me that some men in these latter days are getting so overmuch nice, that they would deprive us honest farmers of all the luxuries of life, and we feel ourselves somewhat aggrieved over it, not but what we have to acknowledge that there are some things contained in the practice, not so very nice, yet it is not worth while to make so much fuss about it, for it is surely productive of much good. And therefore as an honest man, I'll give you my reasons for coming out in defence of the use of this Pleasant Plant of Nature, and then throw myself open to conviction.

1. We consider that as honest men we have a natural right to make use of that which Nature has bestowed upon us, and indeed sir, it helps us to spend our leisure hours in peace and quietude, and in my opinion those who do not use it are not calculated to judge of its excellent qualities.

2. I consider it is our own business, and sir if you and other editors would quit publishing those pieces of persecution, against the brethren, I have no doubt but we would get along quite well —and still be able to sustain the Recorder.

3. My main reason is, that you and others are kindling the fury of our women, and this you know produces disturbance in our families; not that we have words over it, but you know that sometimes we will forget and besmear our tobacco juice over the floor and the next thing is to hand us the Recorder. But, sir, if you could see the sour looks, and heavy frowns we receive, you would sympathise with us, for they would almost melt the heart of stone, and therefore I think it is time that the anti-tobacco club should cease their hostilities, upon those who would like to live in peace and enjoy their rights.

NORTHERN LIGHT.

Jan. 10, 1848.

WRITE IN GOLD.—The great comprehensive truth, says President Quincy, written in letters of living light on every page of our history, are these: Human happiness has no perfect security but freedom; freedom, none but virtue; virtue, none but knowledge; and neither freedom, nor virtue, nor knowledge, has any vigor or immortal hope, except in the principles of the Christian faith, and in the sanctions of the Christian religion.

Expedition to the Dead Sea

In reference to the proposed survey of the Dead Sea, several of the newspapers have asked. "Cui bono?"

As the first public intimation was given without my knowledge, through your columns, I ask permission to avail myself of the same medium to answer briefly, to the point of abruptness, questions at once so natural and so reasonable.

Although most reluctant to parade my insignificant name in print, I take this step without an instant's hesitation, in justice to the enlightened statesman whose mind in an instant grasped the importance of the questions at issue, and forsaw the credit to be acquired by his country in their solution.

For upwards of four thousand years the Dead Sea has laid in its deep and wondrous chasm a withering record of the visitation of God's wrath upon his sinful creatures. Itself once a fertile vale, teeming with population and redundant with the products of a favored clime, it now lies inert and sluggish, a mass of dark and bitter waters with no living thing upon its shore, or above or beneath its surface. Receiving at one extreme the mighty volume of a swift and unfailing river, and the numerous torrents that plunge into it through the clefts in its sides, it slowly rises and falls in its own solitary bed, with no visible outlet for its tributary waters. Its lofty and fretted sides, riven by the earthquakes here blanched by the ruin, there blackened by the tempest, rise perpendicularly fifteen hundred feet on one side and two thousand on the other, while from the summit the awe struck spectator beholds floating upon its surface huge masses of bitumen, thrown up from its mysterious vortex. Mount Lebanon is 9,000 feet above the Mediterranean and 10,300 above the Dead Sea, which is little more than one hundred miles distant from it. The "Coral" in the Island of Maderia is wonderful for it is the bed of a crater nearly level with the ocean; but here is a sea, forty miles distant from another sea, and upwards of thirteen hundred feet below. The unhappy Costigan the only man who has undertaken to circumnavigate this sea, and who perished in the attempt, could in one place find no bottom, and it was indicated by incessant bubbles and an agitated surface. Whether or not this be the crater of a submerged volcano, forming a subterraneous aqueduct with the ocean, who can tell! This unfathomable spot, whether or not through an extinct volcano in connexion with the depression of surface and the height of a contigious mountain forms the most extraordinary fault or fissure in the known world.

One great object of investigation will be to ascertain whether this sea and its shores are of volcanic or non-volcanic origin, and to refute the position of infidel philosophers with regard to its formation. The elucidation of this subject is a desideratum to science, and I would be most gratifying to the whole christian world. It is a mystery which has remained impenetrable since the awful moment when the waters of that wondrous sea first rose above the smouldering ruins of the vale of Siddim. The configuration of one half of its shores, and its very extent are unknown. Its waters of a petrifying quality and limpid as a mountain stream, doubtless hold within their bosom, and holding will reveal those ruins upon the non-existence of which the unbeliever states his incredulity.

Strabo, Diadorus, Pliny and Josephus among the ancients, and Maundrell Pococke, Abbe Martine, Chateaubriand, Lamartine, Stephens, and Robison, among the moderns, all differ as to the extent and many of the peculiarities of this sea. Considerable streams are said to empty into it, the very names of which are unknown. Some have heard the gamboling of fish on its surface, while others deny that any animated thing whatever can exist within its dense and bitter waters. Fruits luscious to the eye, but of nauseous taste, and crumbling in the grasp, are said to be found upon its shores. Many travellers deny the existence of all vegitation; and Chateaubriand asserts that he found branches of the tamarind tree strewn up the beach. Its southern coast is said to consist of masses of solid salt; while as far as the eye can reach from its northern extreme, it beholds only the washed and barren hills of Judea, on one side, and those of Arabia Petrea on the other. All is vague, uncertain and mysterious.

Are the questions answered; or shall a small pecuniary consideration withhold a country such as this from such an undertaking?

I admit that it is not a summer's excursion, and that British officers are said to have twice failed in the attempt. Should that circumstance deter us? I venture to say that, within the broad periphery of this land, cradled between oceans, stretches from the frigid zone to the tropics, there is not one native born or true hearted adopted citizen who will answer to the affirmative. We owe something to the scientific and the christian world; and while extending the blessings of civil liberty in the south and west, may well afford to foster science and strengthen the bulwarks of christianity in the east.—N. Y. Herald.

Baxter's Wife.

In his earliest years, Baxter avowed opinions that seemed to forbid his ever bowing to the garlanded yoke of matrimony. A singular train of providential events, however, led this stickler for clerical celibacy into a submission to the kind influences of conjugal love, and the later years of his troubled life were cheered by the glow which woman's deep and hallow attachment can so well throw upon the darkest earthly scenery. Margaret Charlton, a woman of high respectability, both as to birth, natural endowments, and the gifts of fortune, became the pupil of the venerable non-conformists. In severe affliction he administers spiritual advice and consolation; in returning health he gladly continued his friendly offices; admiration on her part gradually deepened into a softer feeling; and although a vast disparity both of age and outward circumstances seemed to forbid a union—he near fifty and she not twenty-one; he the victim of poverty, persecution, and body sufferings; she lovely, accomplish, surrounded by the elegances of life and the smiles of the world,—yet it actually took place. It is said, that Margaret first felt, or first betrayed an affection which had insensibly grown out of the communings of lofty minds of kindred mould and companionship in works of mercy, such as angels love to join in.

Her character is thus sketched in a masterly critique on the life and times of Baxter in the Edinburgh Review: Timid, gentle, and reserved, and nursed amidst all the luxuries of her age her heart was the abode of affections so intense, and of a fortitude so enduring that her meek spirits, impatient of one selfish wish, progressively acquired all the heroism of benevolence, and seemed at length incapable of one selfish fear. In prison in sickness in evil report, in every form of danger and fatigue she was still with unabated cheerfulness, at the side of him to whom she had pledged her conjugal faith, prompting him to the discharge of every duty calming the asperities of his temper, his associate in unnumbered acts of philanthrophy embellishing his humble home by the little arts with which a cultivated mind imparts its own gracefulness to the meanest dwelling place—and during the nineteen years of their union joining with him in one unbroken strain of filial affiance to the divine mercy, and of grateful adoration to the divine goodness. Her tastes and habits had been moulded into a perfect conformity to his.—He celebrates her catholic charity to the opponents of their religious opinions, and her inflecible adherence to her own; her high esteem of the active and passive virtues of a Christian life as contrasted with a barren orthodoxy; her noble disinterestedness, her skill in casuistry, her love of music, and her medicinal arts. Their union afforded to her the daily delight of supporting in his gigantic labors, and of soothing in his unremitted hours, a husband who repaid her tenderness with unceasing love and gratitude. To him it gave a friend whose presence was tranquility; who tempered by her milder wisdom, and graced by her superior elegance, and exalted by her more confiding piety whatever was austere, or rude, or distrustful in his rugged character

And the whole story stands out to observation like a green spot in the weary wastes of professional life—a beautiful boy, sheltered from storm and tempest. It teaches the nobleness of woman's character, and points out her true vocation.

JOHN WESLEY.

The charity of this eminent founder of the Methodist sect, is thus mentioned by a writer in the North British Review:

"From the moment that the Fellow of Lincoln went into the highways and hedges and commenced itinerant preacher, he bade farewell to earthly fame; and perhaps no Englishman, since the days of Bernard Gilpin, has given so much away. When his income was but thirty pounds a year, he lived on twenty-eight, and saved two for charity. Next year he had sixty pounds, and still lived on twenty-eight, he had thirty-two to spend. A fourth year raised his income to a hundred and twenty pounds, and steadfast to his plan the poor got ninety-two. In the year 75, the Accountant General sent him a copy of the excise order for the return of plate.

"Rev. Sir;—As the Commissioners cannot doubt but you have plate, for which you have hitherto neglected to make an entry," &c.

To which Mr. Wesley wrote his memorable answer:

"Sir:—I have two silver teaspoons at London and two at Bristol. This is all the plate which I have at present; and I shall not buy any more while so many around me want bread. I am sir, your humble servant, JOHN WESLEY."

"And although it is calculated that he must have given more than £20,000 away, all his property, when he died, consisted of his clothes, his books, one carriage. Perhaps like a ball burnished by motion, his perpetual activity helped to keep him thus brightly clear from worldly pelf; and when we remember its great pervading motive, there is something sublime in this good man's industry. Rising every morning at four, travelling every year upward of 4,000 miles, and preaching nearly a thousand sermons, exhorting societies, editing books, writing all sorts of letters, and giving audience to all sorts of people, the ostensible president of Methodism and pastor of all the Methodists, and amidst his ceaseless toils betraying no more bustle than a planet in its course, he was a noble specimen of that fervent diligence, which, launched on its orbit by a holy and joyful impulse, has ever afterwards the peace of God to light it on its way."

☞ If the sick wish a diseased stomach restored and impure blood cleansed without endangering the constitution, go to J. Deen, Grocer and Shoemaker, Putnam, and obtain a box of Dr. Le Roy's Sarsaparilla and Wild Cherry Pills which is the best family medicine now in use. So says Mr. O'Neil the Agent.

DR. LE ROY'S
Wild Cherry, and Sarsaparilla PILLS.

DR. LE ROY has most happily succeeded in combining Wild Cherry and Sarsaparilla with other vegetable ingredients, so as to produce a medicine at once tonic, and purgative, the only perfect discovery of the kind ever made. Their great peculiar excellence, and that which distinguishes them from all other purnatives is, that their operation is followed by no re-action. Their unrivalled purifying and purgative properties, for which they are indebted to the essence of Sarsaparilla, and other ingredients, being controlled by their highly tonic virtues, derived from the extract of Wild Cherry, they do not strain the digestive organs into action, as is the mode of operation with other cathartics, but on the contrary strengthen them into action. Thus all other purgative medicines produce more or less subsequent costiveness, and sluggisness of the gastric juice, while Dr. Le Roy's Pills leave all the machinery of the system full of life and activity, and the bowels open and natural. "Hence," writes Dr. Cheeseman, "they are the only active purgative which I can recommend with confidence, and without alarm; for they remove nothing but what ought to be removed—neither rack, nor strain—occasion no apathy or debilitation—and leave the bowels free, open, and vigorous." But the great virtue of Dr. Le Roy's Pills—the virtue which has spread their fame over the two hemispheres with a rapidity almost miraculous—lies in their purification of the blood. Here they not only stand altogether unrivalled, but fill up the measure of desire. They at once arrest the formation of bad blood, by removing all impurities from the chyle, of which the blood is formed; and moreover keep it clean, by toning and strengthing the digestive organs, so as to be able to exclude from it all matter of an inauspicious nature; and then they purify the blood already in circulation; and never cease operation until it is entirely free from every noxious particle, & full of health, life, and vigor. Original Poetry.

Written for the Western Recorder.

INCONSISTENCY OF MAN.

Alas! that man, with fires that burn
Immortal in his breast,
Should from his God and Savior turn,
And vainly seek for rest.

Should prostrate all his noble powers,
To vanity and mirth;
Delighted with the transient flowers,
That bloom upon the earth.

How like the child upon the strand,
Whose billowy ocean laves;
Tracing brief characters in sand,
That perish 'neath the waves!

Mortal, be wise! thy mind employ
In search of truths divine;
Truths that will yield thee perfect joy;
In all succeeding time.

Western Sketches.

Illinois.

This great State is destined to be all that the shrewdest calculations, or the most ardent and sanguine imaginations have ever predicted.

Two thirds of the age of a single generation, have not yet transpired since it emerged from territorial existence. Since that period, how rapid has been its progression! In 1820, it numbered scarcely a soul to a square mile, in 1830, over one hundred and fifty thousand were nourished upon its soil, the next ten years more than trebled this number, and the enumeration of 1850 will, without doubt, swell it to a million. And who, we ask, can estimate the productive facilities of thirty-two millions of acres of garden, soil, unbroken by a single range of mountains, and of inexhaustible fertility.

Our farms and villages, instead of being pent up in narrow, tortuous valleys, hemmed in by hills and elevations,—are scattered, broad cast, over the spreading table lands, with abundance of room for expansion toward any and every point of the compass. The fairest portions of the great State of New York, the valleys of the Hudson, Mohawk and St. Lawrence, and the basins of its numerous lakes are under culture, ten millions of acres out of forty-six millions of square miles! How many millions of acres will Illinois have under cultivation, when she shall have arrived at the age of New York! What State in the Union has such an amount of tillable lands as ours? Agriculture must flourish. Uncounted thousands of bushels of Indian corn were raised by our farmers,during the past year. As we journeyed through the cultivated districts, the past summer, the roads, in some parts, were lined with interminable corn fields. In Nashville we saw one piece a mile and three quarters long and ninety rods wide! The valley of the Illinois river supported thousands of acres of this useful grain—waving, in golden luxuriance, as far as the eye could reach, at certain points of observation. It would make a New England farmer's heart leap to see, in single enclosure, as many acres as there are in the whole of his rocky farm, and every part of it as smooth as his best meadow, and as rich as the soil of his vegetable patch! Men need not leave Illinois for Oregon and California in search of good land. The gigantic size of the sycamores and cottonwoods of the "bottoms," demonstrates the fertility of these extensive alluvials. Exhaustless mines of lead —the richest on the glode, endless strata of coal, salt springs, abundance of clays and hydraulic limestones add their wealth to the cultivated productions of a soil which can be made to bear almost every variety of the articles that minister to sustenance or luxury in any part of the United States, wheat and vines, corn and cotton, hemp and castor-bean, Irish and sweet potatoe, apple and peach, the hardy pumpkin and every species of melon, in luscious abundance increase our agricultural riches. And there is a ready market for what we do not consume. A gentleman of our acquaintance in the Looking-glass prairie, who has made a farm within the last seven years, tells us that six years ago, a load of marketables, which would scarcely bring five dollars in St. Louis, now commands twenty. Manufactures are contributing their share toward the increasing stores of our youthful commonwealth. True, but few of our streams like those that tremble from every upland of New England are fitted, so great are their alterations in depth and velocity, to sustain mill seats, but the steam engine is supplying the lack. Wind mills, horse mills and ox mills will not much longer saw our lumber or grind our corn. Almost every village has some one branch of the useful arts in successful operation.

Commerce lends its powerful stimulants to our expanding enterprise. Much of it is overland, and sustained, in the midst of the greatest possible disadvantages, subject to all the retardations and delays of a fluctuating climate, unwrought roads, overflowing streams and insufficent bridges. In a few years, the healthful action of the agencies of commercial enterprise, will chequer this level surface all over with "net work of iron pathways," and the locomotive never tires out or "stalls." The beautiful towns that have perched upon the bluffs that make out to the Mississippi, will become the great reservoirs of capital trade and commercial influence and importance. Chicago will become a second New York, its present ranges of temporary accommodations will give place to streets lined for miles with solid brick walls. Galena will become the great representative of our commercial importance upon the upper waters, while Quincy, Alton and Chester will vie with any cities in the Atlantic or Western States, with similar facilities in trade population and energetic development of the cumulative resources of nature and art.—Leb. Journal.

Materials for Thought.

FOREIGN RELIGIOUS SUMMARY.

"An illustration of the public feeling in India, in respect to heathenism, is found in the violent and systematic opposition to Christianity which is now arising in the minds of bigoted Hindoos. They have established societies, in different parts of India, with the avowed intention of checking the progress of the gospel, and guarding their fellow idolators against its advancing power. Nothing but a real and pressing danger could ever have aroused the torpid minds of Hindoos to enter into such active combinations."—Gleaner.

From the Calcutta Christian Herald.

"The harvest truly is plenteous, but the laborers are few: pray ye, therefore, the Lord of the harvest, that he will send forth laborers into his harvest.—Mat. ix: 37, 38.

1. The population of British India is now considered, by the best statists, to be upward of one hundred and forty millions.

2. For this population it is doubtful if there are so many as two hundred European and American missionaries; that is, only one missionary to every seven hundred and fifty thousand people.

3. If ministers of the gospel were supplied to Great Britain and Ireland in the same proportion there would be only eighteen in all England, four in Scotland, and eleven in Ireland—only thirty-three in the whole United kingdom.

4. The population of the small district in which Calcutta is situated, called the Twenty-Four Pergunnahs, exceeds the population of the whole of the West India Islands, and there are several districts in Bengal which are still more populous.

5. There are several districts in Bengal like Pubna, Rajshye, Bogora, and Mymunsing, in each of which the population exceeds a million; several large districts and populous towns, in other parts of India; several extensive dependent countries, like Dude and Gevalion; and several important neighboring countries, like Cashmere, and Nepal, which have no missionary at all.

6. There are several extremely populous districts, like Jessore, Midnapore, Dindgepore,—Bheerboom, and Burdwan, which at present have only a single missionary each.

7. The state of the people who are thus neglected is such, that there exists among them religious bands of systematic murderers, called Thugs, and other bands of men, who live by the fruits of violent burglaries, and perform religious ceremonies to Kali in celebration of their successes.

8. In the whole of the vast provinces of Bengal and Behar, it has been ascertained that the proportion of individuals who can even read is as five and a half to one hundred; and the lack of knowledge in some other parts of India is still greater.

9. A large body of the people of India are under the influence of such fearful superstitions, that myriads annually leave their families and homes, to undertake pilgrimages to distant temples, where, for the most part, the Brahmins whom they reverence live in idleness and sin; and of these pilgrims many thousands die of cold, starvation and diseases on the roads.

10. It is an ascertained fact, that in some parts of India, mothers, from a depraved sense of duty constantly sacrifice their female children.

11. So little has christian England yet fulfilled her obligations to the people of India, that her government has only within a few years ceased to support idolatrous temples, to compel her troops to pay homage to idols passing in procession, to administer idolatrous oaths in her courts of justice, and actually to teach in her colleges, together with the fallacious sciences of the Hindus,—some of the very religious errors which the missionaries have to combat.

12. The expense of the Burmese war was twelve million sterling, and the expense of the Affghan war was six millions; but not a single rupee does the government spend on Christian missions.

13. The Bible is translated into Bengali, Hindustani, Hindee, Tamul, Marathi, Urga, and nearly all the dialects of India; scriptural tracts and school-books in all these languages are now prepared, and are annually circulated in great numbers; there is a thirst for education; the English language is spreading; old prejudices are giving way; the missionary schools are well attended; and the word of God is listened to attentively by crowds, at fairs and festivals.

"The fields are white unto the harvest."—"Who, then, is ready to consecrate his service this day unto the Lord?"

According to Sale, there are four sects of orthodox Mahometans; Hanafees, Shafees, Malakees, and Hambalees, named after their founders. The Hamafees decide questions by reason; the three others by tradition. The heretical sects dispute about free-will and predestination; whether God has a corporeal nature, &c. They generally charge each other with infidelity. The Shiites, who assert that Ali was the first lawful Caliph, are divided into a countless number of sects. Mr. Foster says, that this division of the Moslems into so many sects was owing mainly to the study of Aristotle.

NURSERY SONG.

THE BIRD'S NEST.

O wha would harry the wee bird's nest,
That sings so sweet and clear,
That bigs for its young a cozey biel,
In the spring time o' the year;
That feeds its gapin darlins a',
And haps them frae the rain,
O wha would harry the wee bird's nest,
Or gi'e its bosom pain?

I wouldna harry the lintie's nest,
That whistles on the spray;
I wouldna rob the lav'rock,
That sings at break of day;
I wouldna rob the shilfa,
That chants so sweet at e'en;
Nor yet would I Wee Jenny Wren,
Within her bower o' green.

For birdies are like barnies,
That dance upon the lea;
And they winna sing in cages,
So sweet's in bush or tree.
They just like bonny barnies,
That mithers lo'e so well—
An' cruel, cruel is the heart
That would their treasures steal.

AHMEDNUGGUR.

LETTER FROM MR. BURGESS, AUGUST 19, 1847.

Baptism of a Mussulman.

It was stated in a letter of Mr. Burgess, published in the Nov. Herald, that a very promising teacher in the seminary at Ahmednuggur had given some evidence of conversion. In the present communication Mr. Burgess announces the baptism of this individual. He is a young man, about twenty years of age, a Mussulman by birth, whose mother and sister reside in Ahmednuggur, his father having died two or three years since. His name is Daood Mahammudjee. The following extract, throwing further light upon the history of this young disciple, will be read with interest.

Daood was a promising scholar in the English school, before it was united with the seminary, some four or five years ago. For two or three years he was assistant pupil in the seminary; and after Mr. Beck left us he was, for a while, the principle English teacher. For some reason, (which is not necessary here to mention,) he left our service more than a year ago; but he returned to it soon after I joined the mission, on my return from America, in April last.—He has always been remarkably correct in his deportment and faithful in the discharge of his duties.

I mentioned in my letter by the last mail, that Daood had expressed his determination to embrace Christianity. He was expecting, however, to wait for Baptism till our next communion, which will take place about the first of October. But his friends, hearing his intention to become a Christian, adopted such violent and unreasonable measures in order to prevent him, that he thought the safest and most proper course to pursue, was to receive baptism immediately, if we were willing to administer the ordinance to him and receive him to our communion. He was accordingly examined last Saturday, and admitted to church on the Sabbath following.

He appeared remarkably well at the examination. This, with the fact that his trials in breaking away from his people have been so severe, encourages us to hope much from him. Yet we have learned to rejoice with trembling. Some further account of the events connected with his conversion and baptism, will probably be made the subject of another communication. His wife is still with his mother, and has expressed her determination not to live with her husband, unless he shall return to his former religion. Yet we have not given up all hope that she may come to him at some future time. May the Lord sustain him still, and safely bear him through all his trials.

Christians in this country can have but very imperfect conceptions of the ordeal through which such a young man as Daood must pass.—They can commend him, however, to their faithful and all knowing High-Priest.

A subsequent letter from Mr. Wilder, contains the following additional account of the trials of this new convert.

This trial has been very severe indeed, both to his faith and natural feelings. The opposition of his caste and more distant relatives, he seemed able to endure with much firmness; but the tears and anguish of a venerable mother and of his wife moved him not a little. At one time he so far yielded to his mother's entreaties as to promise her, conditionally, to postpone his baptism some two months. But his pursecution became so severe that he found he must at once confess Christ, or deny and forsake him entirely. He hesitated not in his choice, but resolved to suffer with the people of God. He literally forsook all. On the day of his baptism, precautions were taken against the apprehended excitement of a mob, by the presence of several sepoys, kindly sent by the government to remain in our compound and among the audience. All violence was avoided; but his mother and wife came and renewed their tears, entreaties and anguish. From early in the morning until four o'clock in the afternoon, the mother used every argument of reason and affection, to induce her son to go with her; and when at lenght, despairing of success, she left him, often in the bitterness of her feelings dashing her aged form on the ground before him, the scene was not a little affecting. There appeared the yearnings of strong filial affection; but he remained firm, and we trust God will verify his promise by rewarding him a hundred fold, and making him the honored instrument of much good to his degraded countrymen.

MADURA.

LETTER FROM MR. TAYLOR, JULY 6, 1847.

Renunciation of Hindooism.

Mr. Taylor has had frequent occasion to speak of the disposition to examine the claims of Christianity, which he has found in the villages around Tirapoovanum. He alludes to the same subject in the following paragraph.

In my last quarterly report, I noticed a proposal from the people of a certain village to come over to us, leaving in a body their idolatry, that they might understand and embrace our religion. While I am sorry to say that their subsequent investigations result in a determination not to make any change, I still regard the serious consideration of the subject by them, and their proposition to leave the religion of their fathers and adopt what they saw to be a more rational system of faith, as an encouraging indication that the time when the kingdom of heaven shall here come with power, is near at hand.

I am enabled however, to state that persons in eight more villages have since come to us, in 3 from Romanism, and in 4 from idolatry. In two of these villages, but four families have joined us, in five of them, from five to eight families have come over; and in one sixteen. Here then, in a short time, there has apparently been a great gain; and I cannot but think there has been a real and a lasting gain to our cause. But a little experience and consideration serves to chasten those expectations which might otherwise be too sanguine.

Though on their joining us, operations were commenced in their villages, having in view their instruction and edification, neither we nor our friends in Ameria ought to be disappointed or discouraged, should they all go back to their former delusion. We do not receive them as Christians; nor do they come to us as such. They come to us as learners; and when they understand that Christianity imposes a cross on those who receive it, it will not be strange if they fall away. Coming to us as they do, very ignorant of Christianity, and destitute of its saving power, can we reasonably suppose that they will all, through great tribulation, remain steadfast in their profession? I am led to look on these villages, not as little churches of faithful disciples, but rather as convenient positions for preaching the gospel, and the people composing these congregations as far more likely to become the subjects of grace than those who stand aloof from us. Yet should they all reject that truth which brings salvation, laboring in these villages and going out from them in all directions, we may find those whom God has chosen that they may be his.

Agricultural.

[We take the following from the published Transactions of the Nurserymen & Fruit Growers' Convention, held at Columbus, Sept. 29th and 30th, 1847. [Ed.

Remarks of Rev. C. Springer, of Meadow Farm, Muskingum County, Ohio.

His soil is the best specimen of white oak clay; the forest trees were large, short bodied, heavy topped, white oaks, mixed with sugar, elm and walnut; the undergrowth dog-wood, hazel and spice; at an elevation of some fifteen or twenty feet from the water course. On this soil, after an experience with trees eighteen years of age, the following apples are found to be not worth cultivation: Rhode Island Greening, Hoop, English Winter or Red Permain, Marietta Spitzenberg or Red Calvil, Holland Pippin, or Pound Royal, Gilpin or Red Romanite, and Roxbury or Putnam Russet. The following varieties are more or less worthy of attention on such soil,—viz: Westfield or Marietta Seeknofurther, Green Newton Pippin, Feweral, Grindstone, Rockrimmon, Rawls Jennetting or Never fail, Rambo, Cooper, Summer Sweet, (1st July,) White Jennetting, (August) American Golden Russett or Little Pearmain. He has some twenty or thirty other varieties which are beginning to fruit, but the trees are not of sufficient age to form any correct opinion as to their adaptation to his soil.

The Seeknofurther bears profusely every other year, and taking the qualities of the tree and fruit together, on his soil, is decidedly preferable to any apple he cultivates; is good first of November, and keeps till March. The Cooper is good from first of October to first of December, but will keep to January. This, in soil that suits it, is, unquestionably the best apple of its season;—he has given it the last twelve or fifteen years to perhaps five hundred people, and the universal suffrage is in its favor. But owing to the rage among nurserymen and fruit cultivators for eastern or imported varieties, it has been overlooked; but all it wants is a herald. The R. Island Greening does not do well in any soil or situation in his vicinity; the R. Russet prospers on the high sandy black oak ridges, and on all alluvial bottoms, but not on his clay.

The White Doyenne Pear is the only grafted variety, out of several kinds, planted eighteen years ago, that has sustained itself against the blight. It is a regular and plentiful bearer, and among the very best of pears.

From observations he has made, he is of opinion that blight in pear trees is caused by a kind of plethory, or vegetable apoplexy. He made this suggestion several years since to Mr. Eli Nichols, of Walhonding, who is a close observer of fruits, and he sees from recent notices in the prints that Mr. N. has adopted the opinion. This plethory idea is not contrary to the frozen sap theory of Mr. Downing, but may be the cause of it; but this "theory" he does not sufficiently understand to either adopt or reject. This over charge of fluids, from too rapid growth, may expose the branches to the deleterious effect of the frosts, as stated by Mr. D., or it may be that the hot suns act directly on these plethoric limbs,—causing sudden death. Whether it be by either of these casualties, or something else that blight is immediately produced, he is satisfied, from the following facts that rapid growth, which always produces plethory, is at last the remote cause of the disease.

He planted, eighteen years since, two seedling pear stocks on a poor hard dry bank, at an elevation of about fifteen feet from the water, & some thirty rods back. These have had a slow growth, but have now got to be considerable for size, are perfectly healthy, have been bearing for a number of years, and have never shown the least symtoms of blight. The same kind was planted at the same time in rich soil, which grew as much in one year as the others did in three, but about the time they began to make fruit buds they were killed with the blight. He also planted at the same time two seedlings of a different variety on a similar poor hard point or bank at an elevation of some one hundred feet from the water. These, although of slow growth, are still thriving without any signs of blight, while some six or eight stocks of the same kind put in rich soil where they grew rapidly, have disappeared some twelve years since with that fatal disease.

He has one White Doyenne Pear tree eighteen years of age, set in the richest soil he could put it, but, although it is healthy and vigorous, yet its growth is slow, so that it secures from the character of the tree the same principle the others do from soil and situation. One of the trees above, which was killed by the blight, threw up a healthy sucker from the root, which was cut off about six feet from the ground and grafted with the White Doyenne; this has been bearing for several years, and shows every sign of health and longevity.

The practical inference from these facts, is, that if any one wishes to be successful in the cultivation of the pear, he must either select such kinds as are naturally of slow growth, or must plant them in such soils as will advance them but moderately. The Seckel is of remarkably slow growth, and perhaps no pear suffers less from the blight.

Ladies' Department.

Woman's Mission.

Woman's mission is domestic—she is the true home missionary—there she shines with the purest lustre, there her warm affections have their truest sphere of action, and there the innumerable phases of her innate loveliness and goodness are most appreciated and most observed. The domesticities of life are her peculiar charge; over them she presides with most queenly grace; and it is hers, by touching everything within doors with the magic of a wife's love, to convert the plainest, scantiest food into sumptuous fare, and the homeliest dwelling into a paradise of bliss, an Eden of unalloyed happiness.

To this first purpose ought all female education have prominent reference.—Young ladies should not be taught that to perform domestic labor is beneath their dignity or position in society.

They should be taught that nothing is undignified, nothing unbecoming, which tends to augment the happiness and promote the comfort of each member of the domestic circle—which secures to the young wife or mother the respect & confidence of those under her charge, and gives her husband to feel, while he is toiling to provide for his family, that his chosen companion is quite competent either to secure from those she employs an economical and comfortable use of the means at her disposal, or to do it herself if need be.

It matters not how wealthy or how elevated in worldly position a female may be, a just knowledge of domestic matters will always add to her true dignity and give her an additional charm in the eyes of the wise and good—for we repeat, to make home happy is woman's true mission—while the absence of such knowledge deprives her of much of her influence by materially diminishing the respect in which she ought to be held.

Tight Lacing and Red Noses.

If a foolish girl by dint of busk and bones and squeezing and bracing, secures the conventional beauty of a wasp-waist, she is tolerably certain to gain an addition she by no means bargained for, namely, a red nose, which, in numberless instances, we know is produced by no other cause than the unnatural girth obstructing circulation, and causing stagnation of the blood in that prominent and important feature. Often, in assemblages of the fair, have we seen noses, faultless in form, but tinged with the abhorred hue, to which washes and cosmetics have been applied in wild despair; but alas, in vain! If the lovely owners could have known the cause, how speedily the effect would have vanished; for surely the most perverse admirer of a distorted spine and compressed lungs, would deem the acquirement of a dram-drinker's nose too heavy a condition to be complied with.

Wear a Smile.

Which will you do, smile and make others happy, or be crabbed, and make everybody around you miserable? You can live among beautiful flowers and singing birds, or in the mire surrounded by fogs and frogs. The amount of happiness you can produce is incalculable, if you will show a smiling face, a kind heart, and speak pleasant words. On the other hand, by sour looks, cross words, and a fretful disposition, you can make scores and hundreds wretched almost beyond endurance. Which will you do? Wear a pleasant countenance, let joy beam in your eye, and love glow on your forehead?.—There is no joy so great as that which springs from a kind act or a pleasant word, and you may feel it at night, when you rest; at morning, when you rise, and through the day, when about your daily business.

Narrative.

ADVENTURE OF AN OLD PIONEER.

Mike Andrews, as he was familiarly called, though an old hunter of no small pretensions to boldness and hardihood, in pursuit of the wild game that formerly abounded in the extensive forest within the limits of what is now the State of New York, was on one occasion, rather disconcerted by the abrupt appearance of a large black bear, at a distance of some two or three hundred yards from him. At this early period, bears and wolves were but little accustomed to the intrusions of man, and of consequence seldom evinced any terror at the sight, but rather seemed to consider him as a proper object of prey. This known fact, at that time, had its full effect upon the fears of Mike. No sooner had he taken cognizance of his bearship approaching at full speed, than a natural desire of self-preservation induced him to ground arms, and endeavor to save himself by ascending a small tree, forgetting in the perturbation of the moment that this would be no security against the expected attack from his adversary. The bear, however, either did not see him, or had some other object in pursuit, for, with undiminished speed, he passed Mike at a considerable distance to the windward. Our hunter now judged it safe to alight from the tree: but instead of his supposed locality above the first branch, he found himself tenaciously embracing the body of the tree, around the root, and himself seated on the ground, with his legs and arms affectionately clasping around it. His fear had caused him to suppose he was where he wished to be. Mike used to amuse himself with relating the circumstance, not abating any part of the story that was calculated to excite mirth.

At another time, four or five years subsequently, Mike was seduously engaged in making shingles, near Carr's Creek, about four miles from the settlement where he lived. The narrow path that he had cut through the woods, for travelling to and from his work, was very solitary—not a hut or clearing was to be seen within many miles of it. It was his custom to carry with him a wallet of provisions; and remain at his solitary labor for a whole week without going home at nights—lying down by his fire, rolled up in his blanket when he slept. While pursuing his occupation, after having remained at it for a number of weeks unmolested, he descried a 'strange sail' in the shape of a large wolf. Mike was well acquainted with the habits of these creatures, and that of sending one of their gang to reconnoitre for their prey. Rightly judging himself so far from harm of this single wolf, in case of his own inoffensiveness, he instantly threw himself on the ground, and covering himself partly with chips and shavings, then passively awaited the approach of his neighbor, the wolf, who, having minutely examined the locality of the man, and the situation of all things about, he appeared perfectly satisfied, and quietly took his leave—retiring at a leisure trot, was soon out of sight. Mike having passed himself on the wolf for an inanimate prey, now briskly set about securing himself from an expected invasion from the whole party, to which this wolf belonged, resolving, if possible, to disappoint their appetites. He cut down a small sappling, cutting off the limbs about a foot from the body—this served the purpose of a ladder, by which he ascended a large tree that stood near. After gaining the first branches, he drew up the ladder after him, and dexteriously managed to cast it from him so that it fell on the ground at a considerable distance from the tree he was on; he having then ascended high into the tree, to screen himself from observation as well as immediate harm, silently awaited the result of his stratagem. It was not long ere he perceived the approach of his hungry foes, six in number, led by one, probably the same that had reconnoitred the ground. They rushed to the place where Andrews had lain, and examined all the premises—smelt his tracks on the sapling, pawed over the shavings, and finding nothing to assuage their hunger, except the residue of Mike's provisions, evident symptoms of rage and disaffection to the wolf who had so boldly marshalled them forward, began to be manifest, till at last they darted with as much ferocity and fury as so many fiends might evince, on their hapless leader, who, during the last few moments had sneaked off into the bushes, and soon punished him with death, for having deceived them. They set up a most horrible and dismal howl, and suddenly left the place and their dead companion mangled and torn. By this our friend Mike saw the fate his invention and activity had averted. Had he adopted any other plan, his death would have been certain.—A light fall of snow had prevented his former footsteps being traced either to or from the place, and hence these creatures seemed to know that their expected repast had not been prevented by its escape from the place. As soon as the wolves had gone, Mike shouldered his few moveables, and made his escape towards home, not again venturing into the depths of the forest without some means of defence.

Br. Bassett: Knowing that good news is always desirable, I thought you would be glad to hear that the Lord of the harvest has in his mercy come this way, and once more visited this part of his vineyard, and called up the attention of the people here to the all important concerns of their souls. There has been quite a number reclaimed, together with a number of young converts at one place. I have organized a new class of ten members—all heads of families, and the good work is yet going on. To God be all the glory. Yours in the bonds of the peaceful gospel of Jesus Christ.

A. P. COREY, Supt.

PITTSBURGH DISTRICT.

Susquehanna Circuit, Jan. 18, 1848.

Mr. Editor: After so long a time, I desire to say something in relation to this circuit. Br. Marple, soon after reaching the circuit last fall, experienced a severe attack of something like the pleuresy. It was thought best by the Conference, for him not to travel for a while. He is now teaching school, and I am left to do the best I can alone. I am sorry that Br. M. was not able to continue preaching, for he was well received by the people. He thinks however he will be able to resume his labors in the spring. Yet notwithstanding we have been disappointed in our expectations in respect to help, the Lord has been with us in this circuit in a special manner. Some precious souls have been converted. I held a meeting shortly after our camp-meeting, at Chest Creek, and had a precious time. The presence of the Lord was manifest. We continued two or three days, and five professed to find peace, many were revived, and we all rejoiced. Our quarterly meeting also was a good time. One was reclaimed and joined the church, and I think much good was done, though not apparent at the time. My next meeting was held at Brush Valley, and we had a most glorious time. We commenced on Saturday and continued till Monday night, during which time, ten professed to find pardon. Our Sunday night meeting was continued till day light. Many souls were awakened, & five gave us their names. May God keep them faithful till death. Thanks be to God, the work is still going on. I preached in that neighborhood since, and saw that the Lord was at work. We gave an invitation for mourners—five or six came out, and two found peace with God, through our Lord Jesus Christ. I had to leave, but the meeting was continued next evening, and two more were converted—so I understood. Let all who read this, pray for us.

I remain, your brother in the Lord,

MARTIN STEWART.

MUSKINGUM DISTRICT.

Hoskinsville, O., Feb. 2, 1848.

Br. Bassett: I would say our prospects on this Cambridge Circuit, are not what we could desire, but we have great reason to praise God for what he has done and is doing. We have had the pleasure of seeing a number of souls happily converted to God this year, and some accessions to the church. We have had a meeting in progress for some 16 or 17 days at a little class 4 miles from this place, on Mejes Creek, where we have seen the power of God displayed in a glorious manner. The meeting commenced with a prayer meeting—a protracted prayer meeting. The first three days they had no preaching. Br. Maynard then spent from Tuesday until Saturday. I was with them but two nights the first week, in consequence of affliction in my family. I then spent the next week until Friday, when I had to leave for my appointment.—I returned on last night, and tried to preach to them, and God was with us. Ten souls came forward as seekers, and the work seems to be widening. At this meeting, Methodists, Baptists, and indeed all denominations seemed to join in, and labor for God—old men of 60 years were among the subjects, who asked the prayers of the church; and it was a heavenly sight to see the old men with hoary locks, and the young men and women bowing at the same altar, some of them rising and praising God for what he had done for their souls.—One difficulty was in the way. Our house is a school-house, 24 feet square, but entirely too small. Our hopes were buoyant in regard to this meeting—but alas! we have just learned, the house was burned down after we left last night, and now we have none. Well, God will provide—and I will close by saying we have peace in all our borders. Our 2d quarterly meeting commences on the 12th of this month in Cambridge, at which we expect Br. Duling, would be glad to see you and Br. Power.—Pray for us.

Yours in Christ,

J. NICHOLS.

Bainbridge, O., Feb. 1, 1848.

Br. Bassett: Our little Zion in this part of the District is still rising above the waves, and struggling amidst the storm and surges of Infidelity. We have held several protracted meetings this winter, at which we had refreshing times. At our New Year's meeting we were favored with the labors of Br. C. H. Williams, who labored with zeal and to profit. There were 45 members reported to me when I commenced my labors on this circuit. By preaching and especially by pastoral visitation we have taken in, and gathed up wandering sheep until we number about 75, and we are still laboring and praying for better times. The revival spirit is spreading abroad through the various churches. May the Great Head af the Church speed it onward until all shall feel its power. Pray for us.

Yours in love,

NORTH ILLINOIS DISTRICT.

Lafayette, Stark Co., Ill., Jan. 12*th*, 1848.

Br. Bassett: Dear Sir, the Great Head of the church has not forgotten us here in the far west. But is visiting us in astonishing mercy. The pillar of cloud and of fire is moving onward, and the camp is in motion and getting under way.

"Lo! onward we move to a city above,
None guesses how wondrous our journey will prove."

At the first quarterly meeting on this (Lafayette) circuit, held at Weathersfield, we had a gracious season. The meeting was closed on Sunday night. Monday night I filled an appointment some three miles distant at the house of Br. J. Kilvington's which was a season of serious, and solemn interest, which induced me at the instance of Br. and Sister K. to appoint meeting the next night. Tuesday night came—the word was attended with power—several designated themselves, for prayer. I continued some two weeks, and we had a gracious season of refreshing to the church, and witnessed the conversion of some fifteen or more souls.—Blessed be God, the work is still going on. Brethren are pressing after holiness,—sinners are serious, and some anxiously enquiring what they must do to be saved. Our Episcopal Methodist Brethren united with us in the work as true yoke fellows. May the good Lord bless them abundatnly. Some of our Congregational Brethren took hold of the work in good earnest for a while with us, but it was thought best, I suppose, by their spiritual guide to have meetings of their own in the neighborhood at the same time of ours. This was the most afflicting occurrence to my mind that ever transpired during a revival with which I have had any thing to do. Their motives for this course were probably best known to God. It disturbed feelings for a while and I feared the Holy Spirit would be grieved away; but on visiting the neighborhood a few days since I was glad to find a spirit of forbearance & love prevailing. O that the spirit of love & unity may prevail in all the churches of the Saints. It looks well—and blessed be God, it feels well, and works well, when Sectarian Bigotry, envy and jealously are banished, and christians of different orders, in the unity of the Spirit labor to promote the common cause of Christ. "Behold how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity."

Br. D. Bagly superintendent of the Cherry Grove circuit, has had a gracious work going on in two or three places on his circuit, of which no doubt he will give you a detailed account. A gracious revival has also been going on, on Honey Creek circuit under the superintendance of Br. W. E. Martin. Blessed be God, we feel greatly encouraged. Some of us Itinerants in North Illinois Conference, have had to endure numberless privations, labors, afflictions, and discouragements since our organization as a Conference. Though the church has been weak and unable to render us a comforable support; thinly clad and little to encourage, except the promises of God, humbly relying on the Great Head of the church, our Itinerant brethren have faced the fierce and bleak winds and storms, incident to these Western Prairies, and pressed on through floods of difficulties with a purpose never to falter. And, blessed be God, they have not labored in vain. Oh that God would carry on the good begun work!

Yours in Christ Jesus.

Bills.—Frequently we have been requested by individual subscribers to inform them of the state of their accounts. We have thought best therefore to send bills to all who are in arrears for one year or more. Many of our friends, we know are sure pay, and do not need our promptings to induce them to do this. In such cases, the bills are sent only for their information, to apprise them of the state of their accounts.—Others there are, (we regret to say,) who after all the promptings from us, and from their conscience too, seem disposed to be slack in this matter of paying up. As in the multiplicity of our cares, we are obliged to do many things in a hurry, should any mistake occur, we will make haste to rectify it as soon as it shall be shown to us. Our friends will recollect that by announcement of the Post Master General, some time since, publishers are authorised to send bills to their subscribers without penalty or postage.

Encouraging.—We have had the pleasure of adding the names of twelve new subscribers to our list this week, whilst the number of discontinuances has been but two. Why can we not have a dozen or more every week, till we receive the additional thousand subscribers spoken of a few weeks ago? We are very thankful to those brethren who have exerted themselves in obtaining subscribers and collecting our dues. Yet there are other brethren who do not yet report progress. We want to hear from them some encouraging word. Send on brethren,—let us have the names; and if you please, the cash too would not come amiss.

Prospect of Peace!—The Zanesville Courier of Monday, has the following announcement by Telegraph.

Philadelphia, Feb. 5th, 7. P. M.

The steamer Edith has arrived at New Orleans from Vera Cruz, with dates to the 20th ultimo. Her news is highly important.

The Mexican Commissioners have submitted to the terms offered by Mr. Trist, and have agreed to a Treaty based upon his propositions!! Their acceptance, with the papers &c., have been sent to Washington, to be submitted to the Government for its action.

The M. E. Property Question.—The Editor of the Pittsburgh Christian Advocate, in his last paper speaking of the difficulty between the M. E. Church, and the M. E. Church, South, respecting the division of church property, expresses the following noble sentiments.

"According to our notions, the most desirable mode of settling the question would be by friendly negotiation of the parties themselves. And if they meet each other in the spirit of liberality and Christian courtesy, no doubt it can be done in this way; either on the basis of the plan of separation or by some substitute. If it cannot be done in this mode, our next choice would be, to submit it to the arbitrament of capable, honest and disinterested men, chosen by the respective parties.—Who would fear, for instance, to submit the matter to a few such men as Judge M'Lean, Dr. Bunting, and others, selected from the M. E. Church, the M. E. Church South, the English Wesleyan connection, Canada connection, Methodist Protestant, or indeed any other Protestant Church. As to Dr. Bunting, we all want to see him, and we might well afford to pay his expenses over the Atlantic to get the assistance of his clear head and sound practical judgment in the settlement of a matter of so much importance. Last of all, if neither of the above modes will answer, we should be in favor of submitting the case to the Courts of the United States, assured that such tribunal would be a 'lawful' one, even for Christians to appeal to, for the adjudication of such a matter. In the event of all other means failing, the M. E. Church, in our estimation, could not do a more Christian, lawful and expedient act than to request the Church South to bring suit, for the purpose of having the whole investigated and decided by so competent, disinterested and impartial a tribunal. But, as we have said, we hope the matter will be settled by 'negotiation.'"

Massachusetts.—Last year, the old Bay State appropriated $622,870, for her public schools.

Progress of the Pestilence.—Our readers are apprised that the Asiatic Cholera some time since reached Europe in its westward progress, and is now extending its ravages over that continent. It is said also to have reached England and commenced there its work of death. There is all-sufficient ground for the apprehension that it will before many weeks or months recross the Atlantic ocean, to our own shores, as in a previous instance in 1832. Should this be the case, it is not unlikely that before the present year shall close, it will spread over our country both east and west. Sanatary regulations are already urged upon the authorities of our chief cities.—This is all well enough. But it is of chief importance that all should give heed to this great providential warning, which seems to say, "Prepare to meet thy God."

We are gratified to find in the "Religious Telescope" that the following preamble and resolution in reference to this matter were unanimously adopted by the Miami Conference of the Church of the United Brethren, at its recent session.

Whereas, that scourge of the Almighty upon the nations of the earth, the Asiatic Cholera, has again commenced its fearful ravages amongst the Eastern nations of our globe, and has already progressed so far in the direction of our nation, as to warrant the expectation that we may again be visited by it, in our turn, within a few months. And, whereas, we believe that none but the Almighty can direct, control, or arrest it in its progress. And, whereas, we further believe that in addition to using all prudential means to prevent, check, or treat it successfully, we should follow the example of God's people in former times, in humbling ourselves before the Lord, by prayer and fasting in his presence; beseeching Him, that in his great mercy, he would, so far as can be agreeable to his will, spare us as a nation from this scourge, or if it may not be in accordance with his will, to spare us entirely from his judgments, which we so much deserve, that he would remember as in mercy, and chastise us as lightly as can comport with his Divine will. And more especially, that he would prepare us by his grace for whatever may await us in his Providence, and that his judgments may be sanctified to us for our good.

Therefore, Resolved, by the members of the Miami Annual Conference, of the Church of the United Brethren in Christ, assembled at Miltonville, Butler county, Ohio, January 11th, 1848, that the Governor of the State of Ohio, the Honorable William Bebb, be, and that he is hereby respectfully requested, by this body, to appoint a day of fasting, humiliation, and prayer, to be observed by the citizens of this State, for the purposes set forth in this preamble and resolution.

U. S. CONGRESS.

Tues. Jan. 25, House.—The following preample and resolution, offered by Mr. Thompson, of Pennsylvania, were agreed to.

Whereas, The great loss of life on the lakes and western waters, by means of fire, explosions, and collision of steamers and vessels within the last few years, but too clearly indicates either the insufficiency of the laws in regard to the inspection of boilers and hulls, or that they are not faithfully executed: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the expediency and necessity of any additional legislation or new regulations on the subject of the inspection of boilers, hulls, rigging, and finding of steamers and vessels, and report by bill or otherwise.

Mon. 31, Senate.—A memorial was presented from the General Assembly of Missouri, praying the organization of a Territory west of that State. Referred to Committee on Territories.

Columbian Magazine.—We have received the February number of this beautiful work. It contains a fine portrait of the Poet Wordworth, an enchanting view of Antioch and the surrounding Mountain Scenery, February Fashions, and Original Music. The contents of the Columbian are entirely original, and furnished by numerous popular writers. John Inman and R. A. West, Editors. Address J. S. Taylor Publisher, N. York. $3 in advance. Two copies for $5.

Presbyterian Almanac, 1848.—By politeness of Rev. Mr. Brown of Zanesville, we are furnished with a copy of this publication. It is issued by the Presbyterian Board of Publication, (O. S.) Philadelphia. It contains statistics of the denomination—its Domestic & Foreign Missions—Board of Education—Board of Publicrtion—Theological Seminaries—Periodicals &c. The number of Ministers reported is 1715--an increase of 63 in the year past. The number of Communicants reported is 179,453—an increase of nearly 5000. Number of Theological Seminaries, five; of Periodicals, ten.

Proposed College.

Our readers will recollect a spirited article from Br Wm. Hamilton of Gratiot, which we published recently, in favor of establishing by the Methodist Protestant Church a Collegiate Institution at some point in the central part of the Muskingum District. Br. H. it will be recollected, did rot designate any particular location for the institution, but desired to hear from brethren in behaf of different points. We are gratified to find that the appeal of Br. H. has been responded to by the Quarterly Conference of Zanesville Circuit, at its recent session in Gratiot. The folowing resolutions, introduced by Br. J. F. Bane, were unanimously adopted.

RESOLUTIONS.

1. Resolved, by the Quarterly Conference of Zanesville Circuit, in session at Gratiot, Ohio, that they regard the erection of a College by the Methodist Protestant Church, Muskingum District, as a duty highly incumbent upon said Church, and that no time should be lost in the performance of said duty.

2. Resolved, as to a site for said College we recommend to the favorable consideration of the District, the village of Brownsville, or Gratiot, on the National Road, of a high and very healthy atmosphere, being in the center of the three county seats, (Muskingum, Perry and Licking,) about 12 or 13 miles from each, and surrounded by a neighborhood considerably advanced in improvement.

3. Resolved, That if the District will settle upon one of the above villages as the most appropriate place for a College, we agree (from the confidence we have in the liberality of our neighboring circuits,) to furnish a site & erect a building sufficiently large to commence with, and ornament with trees, and fence in the lot. The District to furnish a suitable library and apparatus for the same.

4. Resolved, That we approve of the voluntary plan, at least for a commencement, and would recommend a board of managers, sixteen in number, more or less, to be appointed by the Annual Conference of Muskingum District, sufficiently contiguous to the College to meet for business, the President of the Annual Conference always being one; seven to constitute a quorum.

The Power of Illustration

An element of success in preaching and teaching: by John Dowling, D. D., pastor of the Berean Baptist Church, New York.

This is a small publication of 106 pages, which is greatly deserving of an attentive perusal by all, who would excel in pulpit exercises. To young preachers especially would we commend this useful and interesting little work, as containing directions, which, if put in practice, will furnish a never-failing fund of profitable and pleasing materials for sermonizing. The author states the subject of his work thus:—

In treating this important subject, I must be allowed to speak as a practical man. I have selected a subject, upon which comparatively but little, (in my estimation, far too little,) is said in the works, which it has been my lot to examine, on Homiletics. Rhetoric, or Eloquence.—And often has it been to me a matter of surprise, that, in the text-books on these subjects, hundreds of pages are sometimes occupied with instructions, relative to voice and manner, and action; or to argument, method, and style;—while the subject of illustration, if alluded to at all, is frequently dismissed with barely a passing remark.

In the present age of the world, originality in the enunciation of absolute truths, and especially those truths which have divine revelation for their basis, and which alone, are the themes peculiarly appropriate to the pulpit,—is hardly to be expected. If originality is now to be found anywhere, it is, not in the truths themselves, but in the almost infinitely diversified modes, that may be adopted by different men, of illustrating those truths.

Ministers of the Gospel will do well to reflect upon the just remark of the Author, in the above quotation, that the present is not the period for originality of ideas; and if they succeed in elaborating novelties, it can only be, by diversifying their modes of illustration of old truths, after the manner pointed out in this short pulpit directory. It contains the substance of an address, delivered to candidates for the gospel ministry at the anniversary of the New-Hampton Theological Institution; and is published in New York, by L. Colby & Co. 122 Nassau street.

Foreign.—The Steamer Acadia reached Boston on the 1st inst. having sailed from Liverpool on the 15th January. Many more failures in London and Glasglow are announced. A decline had taken place in the prices of both cotton and breadstuffs. It is stated that provisions were not in demand, and that the tendency of prices was downward. And yet there is said to be distress in Ireland; and some deaths from destitution have been reported. The following account of the condition of Ireland is taken from a London paper.

"State of the Country.—The most striking feature, and is no less painful than striking, is the progress of destitution apparent thro' the West and South. From Mayo the local journal brings us accounts of inquests upon not less than six bodies, in all of which the verdicts ran, 'Died of destitution.'

For five days of the last week six corpses lay unburied at Ennistynon, awaiting the Sabbath that a cellection might be made to provide coffins for them, as the deceased either had no friends, or none who were able to provide them with any. Some of those had died of destitution.

The special commission, issued to try the prisoners committed for murder and agrarian outrages in the Southern counties, was opened at Limerick on the 4th of January. The Chief Justice (Blackburne) made a charge to the grand jury free from political feeling, but expressive of the determination of the Government vigorously to administer and execute the existing laws. Several capital convictions had taken place. The new law relating to accessories before and after the fact seemed likely to prove conducive to the repression of crime, and to the restoration of tranquillity and security. Twenty-eight convicts were sentenced to transportation. Wm. Ryan a murderer, who had long defied the police, but whose arrest was mentioned by the last steamer, was convicted and sentenced to death, as were others.

The court, at its rising on the 8th, adjourned till the 10th of January. Up to that time nearly 50 persons had been arraigned, yet there was not a single acquittal; and, in almost every case, the jury found without leaving their box. The Clare commission will be taken next; after which, Tipperary. When the various commissions are ended, the judges will sit again in Limerick to try the remainder of the calendar.

The movement in favor of tenant right is prosecuted with great activity in all parts of the country. Ejectments by landlords are very numerous.

Distress appears to be on the increase, more especially in the south and west. "The applications for out-door relief," says the Sligo Champion, "are beyond all calculation. The people do not seem to think it the least disgrace to receive relief."

Religious Intelligence.—We are happy to learn of revivals in various places about this time. Brother Potter brings us a good account of the religious interest at Gratiot, in Zanesville circuit. A good work of grace was there wrought, and a goodly number were added to the church. We are disappointed in not having received from Br. Hoagland some account of his circuit, and quarterly meeting, for insertion this week. Furthermore, we have learned of the existence of religious prosperity in other circuits and places, but the brethren do not write, to give us the particulars. Come, brethren, let us and our readers be cheered with your accounts of the work of the Lord.

☞ The Legislature will adjourn within a few days. Our representatives Messrs. Randall & Culbertson, but especially Mr. Goddard, Speaker of the Senate, will accept our thanks for numerous favors in the form of public documents.

☞ The following, from the Cumberland Presbyterian, suits our latitude, and we give it for the encouragement of our readers who complain of the irregularities alluded to. We are always glad to supply missing numbers of our paper to any paying subscriber or efficient agent who will let us know.

Irregularity of the Mails.

Some of our subscribers complain that they do not receive their papers regularly. This has been the case for some weeks. But we hope they will exercise a little patience. The winter will be past ere long, when we will have good roads again. Then you will meet with no difficulty in getting the paper. You should remember that we have had a great deal of rain, and very high waters, and of course very bad roads this winter. Even we who live on the national road have not been in the regular receipt of our exchanges for some weeks past, particularly from the West. And we trust what the paper communicates to you will not lose any of its excellency nor profit you any the less, nor be a less welcome messenger, because of a little delay.—We very much regret that you do not get the paper weekly, but we know no way to remedy matters, or we would attempt it. The paper is regularly sent from the office in this place. We hope you will not lose your patience. We see that some of the editors, west, are receiving just such complaints as we are.

Colored Sons of Temperance.—The Baltimore correspondent of the National Era, states that a Division of Colored Sons of Temperance has been organised in Baltimore, and that two other Divisions are in process of formation. He adds, "Thus our colored brethren are endeavoring to elevate themselves, amid all the attempts to keep them down with oppressive laws and regulations."

News of the Week.

NEW LOCOMOTIVE.

A new and splendid locomotive, with quite a new feature in construction, from the well-known shop of Mr. M. W. Baldwin, left this city on Friday last, destined for the Madison and Indianapolis Rail Road. And, as it is the intention of that enterprising Company, by means of this engine, to supply the place of stationary engines and horse power, or inclined planes, we think it proper to give a description of its construction, as it may be interesting to many of our readers. It is a large and powerful locomotive, placed upon eight driving wheels, which are connected to a pair of inclined cylinders, fifteen and a half inches in diameter, and twenty inches stroke.—There is also a driving cog-wheel, twelve and a half inches in diameter, for propelling by a rack laid in the middle of track the whole length of the plane. This cog-wheel is on the middle of a shaft lying parallel to the axles of the driving-wheels, and midway between the back and front ends of the engine, and by a crank on each end of the shaft is connected to a pair of vertical cylinders, 14½ inches in diameter, and 14 inches stroke. This shaft is placed in a pair of strong bearings, attached to the boilers and frame-work of the engine, and raised sufficiently from the rails, and connects to the rack by a intermediate wheel, twenty-eight inches in diameter, which is capable of being connected or disconnected instantaneously to or from the rack, at the pleasure of the engineer, by means of a fifth cylinder placed horizontally on the top of the boiler; and by a crank and two rods it is connected to the ends of the intermediate shaft. By admiting steam into either end of this cylinder, the intermediate shaft and wheel are raised or lowered at the will of the engineer, and will accommodate themselves to the undulations of the rack. The driving shaft of the twelve and half inch cog-wheel is furnished, with two friction or brake-wheels, 20 inches in diameter, by which the progress of the engine in ascending or descending the plane can be instantaneously stopped, or graduated to any degree of velocity, at the pleasure of the engineer.

This machine was tried in the yard of the workshop, in the presence of a number of practical engineers, (previous to being shipped to its destination,) upon a temporary track for that purpose, and its performance gave the highest satisfaction, being entirely under the control of the engineer. It may be started, stopped, reversed, and the gearing raised in or out of the rack at pleasure, without a jar, and almost instantaneously. It was also shown that by putting the inclined cylinders, in a backward motion, and the vertical cylinders in a forward motion, that the gearing would cause the engine to slide forward on the track, while the eight driving wheels were revolving without effect in a downward and backward motion, clearly showing that by the above improvements the engine will have more than double the tractive power of any engine of the same weight. The improvement is by M. Andrew Cathcart, of Madison Ind., formerly of this city, and under whose superintendence she was built by Mr. M. W. Baldwin.—Saturday Courier.

The Mormons.

The St. Louis Republican, of the 19th inst. contains an epistle of the twelve apostles of the Mormon Church, to the saints throughout the world.—This epistle sets forth the persecutions and sufferings of the Mormons; together with instructions, and advice to the church. It is confidently expected, that at least 20,000 persons will during the coming summer join the settlement in the valley of the Great Salt Lake.—This valley is cut off from any possible settlement, by stupendous mountains, and sterile wastes, and will doubtless afford them a secure asylum for the future. The progress of these people has been incredible, as their belief is absurd. Notwithstanding the opposition they have encountered they have pushed their missionaries into every quarter of the globe, and made proselytes even in the isles of the Pacific. The new city of the Mormons is called the Great Salt Lake City, and is surveyed in blocks of ten acres; eight lots to a block, with streets eight rods wide crossing at right angles. One block is reserved for a temple, and several more in different parts of the city, for public grounds. The valley is some twenty by thirty miles in extent. The soil of the valley appears good, but will require irrigation to promote vegetation. The climate is warm, dry and healthy.—The valley is destitute of timber, but on the mountains sufficient may be found for immediate consumption, which timber is principally box, fir, pine, and sugar maple. Excellent mill sites abound, and springs, hot, warm and cold, are plenty. This strange people is one of the wonders of the present time. What will be their future destiny is a problem that time only can solve—their past history is written in blood.—Cincinnati Commercial.

A Philanthropist.—There lives in the city of Boston a man named John Augustus, who is in some respects the most remarkable man of his age. He is a mechanic by occupation, and some years since being in the police court of that city his attention was called to the case of a young man, poor, needy, and probably vicious, who was charged with a simple assault. Augustus stepped forward, offered himself as bail, took the young man home, fed and clothed him, and gave him employment. He reformed and became a good citizen. His success in this instance prompted him to further efforts, and since that time he has bailed 582 offenders, without fee or reward, and two only of them have abused his confidence He has thus saved the city several thousand dollars in fees and costs, and the risk has not been half so great as if he had endorsed 582 of the best men's notes in the city of Boston. More than two of them would have been protested.—He is a good man and a most useful citizen.—May he live long to continue his work of benevolence.—National Police Gazette.

Important Church Decision.—The case of Rev. Mr. Griffith, of the Methodist Episcopal Centenary Church, of Brooklyn, N. Y., has just been decided by Judge Edmonds commanding the defendants to admit the relator to their pulpit and parsonage. This decision has created considerable feeling among the congregation. The difficulty arose from the case of Mr. Maffitt who being countenanced by Mr. Green, the former pastor, the latter was suspended by the conference, and Mr. Griffith appointed in his place.

Texas a Free State.—A highly intelligent correspondent of the Christian Watchman, writing from Washington, thus speaks of the prospect of Texas soon becoming a free State:

"I have good reason to believe that Texas is to become a free State at no distant day. This comes to me from a gentleman in Texas, in whose meas of knowing, and ability to form just opinions, I have great confidence. He says the Germans, now coming by ship-loads, and settling under the supervision of the agents of their princes and nobles, who have obtained large tracts of land, are, to a man, opposed to slavery, and this has already been manifested in their local elections, and, indeed, that Gov. Houston was compelled, by the force of popular opinion, to divest himself of his slaves, in order to secure his re-election to the U. S. Senate.

Muskingum Improvement.—Large supplies of Groceries and Merchandise have been, and are still to be, received by the course of the river. Boats below are running regularly to Beverly, while between that point and this place, the Zanesville and Mingo Chief are making almost daily trips. Consequently the transit of goods is delayed but a very few hours, at Beverly; indeed the time lost there is quite made up by increased diligence above and below.—Zanesville Courier.

Melancholy Accident.—It becomes our painful duty, to announce the death of Mr. John Harris, of Stillwater Belmont county, by the accidental discharge of a pistol. On 23d ult., Mr. Harris, in company with a number of others, were staying at the Eagle House in this place.—According to the information we received, he was examining a six barrelled revolving pistol, when by some accident it was discharged, the ball entering the left thigh immediately above the knee. He lingered in great pain until the 30th, when he expired. He received from the hands of Mr. Edson and his kind and obliging lady, every attention which his situation required.—Fairview Visitor.

Killed.—Wm. Buffum was instantly killed by the bursting of a grindstone at the Scythe factory, at Nasonville, Rhode Island, on Wednesday morning.

Susquehanna Bank.—The Montrose Democrat says the Susquehanna County (Pa.) Bank is not broken, as reported, but that it continues to redeem all its issues as fast as presented at its counter. During a few days of the run made upon it, that paper says the Bank redeemed nearly three-fourths of its entire circulation. The notes are now bought and sold by the brokers of Philadelphia at about 60 cents on the $1.—Balt. Sun.

Burnt Up.—On Thursday last the Elkton and Port Deposit Divisions of the Sons of Temperance, accompanied by a band of music, visited Northeast, Md., and burnt the liquor remaining in the bar of Mrs. Lum, she having abandoned the traffic and opened a temperance house.

No Thanksgiving in Virginia.—An exchange paper says that "a day of Thanksgiving has never been oppointed in Virginia, by the Governor." We do hope that by the time this year rolls round, we will be able to make a different record.

Intolerance.—The Emperor of Russia has recently deprived a nobleman of all his rights to nobility, and ordained that he shall serve in the armies of Caucassus the remainder of his life, for the "crime" of leaving the Roman Catholic Church and joining the Duceaborgas, another religious sect.

It is said that at Boston the street dirt sells annually for $30,000—being vastly more than the income derived from some gold mines.

Correspondence of the New York Observer.

Ravages of the Cholera in Ooroomiah.

Ooroomiah, Sept. 1, 1847.

That awful Eastern scourge, the cholera, is again raging in this part of Persia. It is now more than two months since we heard of its prevalence at Tiflis, in Georgia. From that point it moved southward, spreading fearful destruction in the towns and districts through which it successively passed; and entering Azerbija, this northern province of Persia, and moving rapidly from place to place, in different parts of it, the disease made its appearance at Ooroomiah ten days ago. It is said also to have advanced westward from Georgia into Turkey, in the direction of Erzeroom.

This terrible disease is of a peculiar malignant type here, the present season; far more than last year, its attacks being very sudden and violent, and its work of death dreadfully rapid. This difference may be owing in some measure, to the earlier season of its prevalence here, as also to the almost unexampled heat of the weather, in these regions during the past summer; and a more important circumstance still, is the fact, that during the present lunar month, which is the Mussulman Ramazan, or annual Fast, of a month, the Mohammedans practice the most rigorous abstinence from every species of food and drink, during the whole day, and indulge their appetites to repletion, and generally to great excess during the night; an irregularity which can of course hardly fail to prepare ready subjects for disease. However much or little the ravages of the cholera may be increased by predisposing causes. it is an alarming fact, that its work of death, in our city at the present time, has hardly a parallel in the modern records of this scourge.

It is perhaps worthy of notice that devouring armies of locusts commenced their devastations at this point, a short time before the cholera appeared at Tiflis, and moved before it in the directions above mentioned, laying waste the fruits of the earth, and like harbingers of a heavier wo, ushering in the more awful judgment of cholera.

There is an atmospheric phenomenon attendent on the prevalence of this disease here, which arrests our observation. Last year, at the health retreat of our mission, which is situated 5 miles from the city of Ooroomiah and about six hundred feet above it, we had a clear sky and a bright sun most of the time during the prevalence of the cholera in this province, while the city, plain, lake and sides of the mountains below us, were enveloped, during that time, in a thick mist so dense as entirely to obstruct vision beyond a few feet.

As seen from the mountain above, it presented a dead level appearance, like the smooth surface of the sea in quiet weather—the mist rising to just about the same height as far as the eye could reach. This phenomenon is the more striking, in the commonly very clear atmosphere of Persia, where we seldom see any thing like a cloud, during many months of the year. At the present time, also, we witness the same mist, though at this season, the weather is too hot to allow it to condense so as to cease to be partially transparent, as was during the prevalence of the cholera here, in the months of November and December of last year.

What connexion, if any, this singular appearance may have with the cholera, or what peculiar state of the atmosphere it may indicate, is perhaps worthy of inquiry. The coincidence of the presence of the disease and this dense mist is at least strikingly noticeable in this country.

I write under a tent, in an elevated district on the borders of the Koordish mountains, about 30 miles west of the city of Ooroomiah, whither a part of our mission have retreated before the ravages of the cholera. The natives of this wild district are filled with almost inconceivable consternation, by the approach of the fearful destroyer. Associating it with the Plague, which desolated these mountain valleys, some years ago, they regard it as highly contagious; and so apprehensive were the inhabitants of a Koordish hamlet near which I passed with my family on our retreat, that they fired upon us when we were advancing towards their village, to prevent our approaching it.

We have strong confirmation of the fact, so often observed in India, Persia, and elsewhere, in the East, that elevated positions are comparatively secure from the influence of cholera,—a fact taat may throw light on the problem of the dense mist that I have mentioned, as occurring in connection with the disease, in lower sections. Some half dozen Koords, for instance. who went down to the city from this mountain within the past week and exposed themselves to the pestilential atmosphere there, have sickened and died of the cholera here, being seized of it on their way home or immediately after their arrival;—while no person here, not thus exposed, has been a victim of the disease. And at our healthful retreat above mentioned, the cholera has never yet appeared. We would, of course, not forget, that this disease is, in all cases, an arrow in the hand of the Lord; but like his other messengers of death, it is already subject to laws, some of which may be understood.

As ever, yours,

J. PERKINS.

Free Negroes in Louisville.—The Mayor of Louisville has given public notice that the act of the Legislature, passed at the session of 1845–6, will be enforced against all free negroes in that city, twenty days after date of said proclamation. Said law requires that any free negro coming into that State shall, if he remains thirty days, be liable to arrest, and failing to give two sufficient sureties in the sum of $500, to leave the State within ninety days, shall be sold into slavery for one year, to the highest bidder. The proclamation is dated the 4th inst.—Cincinnati Commercial.

Inundation.—The city of Montreal was inundeted on Saturday, the 25th ult. Many families narrowly escaped from their houses in boats, &c. An almost incalculable amount of distrees will of necessity ensue.

Evils of Dissecting.—Dr. Moses P. Greenleaf, aged 31 years, died in West Newton, on Sunday, probably from a poisonous humor taken in a dissecting room in Boston. He visited his patients only three days before his death.

The Disputed Territory.—The Matamoras Flag, on behalf of many citizens of that part of Nueces county lying upon the Rio Grande, petitions the legislature of Texas for a division of the county. "From the settlements on the Rio Grande," it says, "to the county seat at Corpus Christi, it is full five days journey, through a wilderness country, almost destitute of water, not a habitation in the whole distance and dangerous to travelers on account of the Indians and bands of lawless Mexicans. When persons residing on the Rio Grande border of the country are cited to appear at Corpus Christi, it takes at least two weeks to comply with the citation, besides subjecting them to the difficultics and dangers of the road."

The Approach of the Cholera.

This dreadful pestilence is making rapid strides hitherward. The last steamer left but little of its appearance in France. Two undoubted cases are recorded; and the greatest alarm prevailed. There were, also, it is stated in the last English Papers, two cases in the Harbor of Falmouth, brought in a vessel that arrived from the Black Sea. Its march has been very nearly in the same direction as in 1831. It reached both sides of the Black Sea towards the close of the last summer. It was quite prevalent at Odessa at last dates. In southern Russia, several large villages had been depopulated. In the province of Astracan, with a population of 31,000 there had been 5,900 cases and 3,100 deaths. At Saratow, there were 2,500 cases and 1,991 deaths.—In the country of the Don Cossacks, there had been 12,651 cases and 7,017 deaths! In a number of other points, it has proved equally malignant. On the 12th of October, it was known to exist in sixteen of the northern governments.—On the 17th of October, it broke out at Warsaw, and on the 30th at Moscow. It had appeared in one or two instances in Prussia and Austria; but up to the 29th of October, it had not visited Constantinople.

The course which this terrible disease is now taking, is nearly the same it pursued in 1831.—In April, of that year it was at Warsaw; in May, it reached Rigaland, Dantzinc, and in June it was in Petersburg. In August it cut down its hundreds in Berlin, and early in October it was at Hamburg. In December it first made its appearance in Sunderland, England, and before May it had spread into nearly all the towns of the kingdom. It was brought to Quebec by the ship Garrick, on board of which were 40 deaths. The Garrick reached Grosse Isle on the 3d of June, 1832, and on the 7th, the first case appeared in Quebec. On the 9th there was a single case in Montreal, and before the close of summer, it had spread over nearly the whole of the American continent.—Albany Journal.

Strange Incendiary.—The house of Mr. John Gantt, of Juniatta township, Pa., was destroyed by fire on the 21st instant, supposed to have been caused by a burning ember falling on the back of a cat, which run to the garret, where a quantity of flax was deposited, and there dropped it.

A Sad Reception.—A Mr. Morrison arrived from New Orleans on Wednesday, repaired to his home in Covington, Ky., enquired for his wife, and learned for the first time that she was dead. She had been buried nearly a week.

Banising Liquors from the Capitol.—The Washington correspondent of the New York Herald writes that "the Vice President having ordered the removal of John West and his liquors from the basement of the Senate of the Capitol, the Speaker of the House has followed the example, by ordering the Speaker of the lower House, John Foy, to evacuate the subterranean apartments where he has so long dispensed the luxuries of his refectory to the hungry and thirsty servants of the people from the other House."

This is good news. The spirits above will be improved, since the spirits below are re-moved. —Boston Signal.

Germany.—Death of the Elector of Hesse. —On the 20th of November last, his Royal Highness, William II. Elector of Hesse, departed this life at Frankfort, after a few days' illness.—The deceased was born on the 28th day of July, 1777, and succeeded to the electorate on the 27th of February, 1821. He is succeeded by his son. Prince Frederick William, born on the 20th of August, 1802, and who, since 1831, shared the reins of government with his father.

No Ice.—The ice men in the vicinity of New York are in a great state of alarm on account of the failure of their an nual crop.

Counterfeiters Arrested.—Two bold and daring counterfeiters, S. B. Norton and Tom Twitcher, were arrested at Pittsburgh. on Saturday, and are now snug in jail. A broker whom they had exchanged a lot of counterfeits with in the morning for good money, put the rest on their guard, and on attempting the same thing with another broker in the evening, they were arrested. There were found upon Twitcher $1,047 counterfeit 3's on the Commercial Bank of Cincinnati; $200 counterfeit $10's on the Lafayette Bank of Cincinnati; $10 bogus; and $20 counterfeit 10's State Bank of Indiana.

The Mormon Temple.—The Rock river Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, at their last session, appointed a committee to inquire into the expediency of purchasing the Mormon Temple at Nauvoo, for literary purposes.

Long Passages.—The ship Concord, Capt. Eleazer Scudder, is now 90 days out from Liverpool, for Boston, having sailed on the 4th of November. She was spoken when about 40 days out, by the captain of a brig who arrived at N. York, and who reported severe gales the day after speaking her. When spoken, the Concord was within 300 miles of Boston. Fears are entertained for her safety.

Fatal Accident at Wilmington.—A dreadfu accident happened at St Mary's College, Wilmington, (Del.)on Tuesday, by which two unfortunate men, Patrick McGinley and James Green lost their lives. They were excavating a sand hole, some 40 feet deep and 50 feet wide, when suddenly a mass of earth, some 60 or eighty cart loads, fell and crushed them to death. They were embanked about half an hour before they could be taken out. The Rev. Mr. Riley, Principal of the College, made a very narrow escape; standing by where the mass fell, he was thrown, by a piece of timber, a distance of 30 or 40 feet. His side and face were somewhat bruised.

A short time before, a laborer, named James McGargle, was hurt severely in the side by earth falling upon him, and was obliged to go home.

An aged man, named John Hickey. of Newburyport, when eating dinner on the 25th ultimo, exclaimed that he was choking, and died instantly.

The Cholera is throwing its appalling shadow upon Europe. It is on its eastern borders, and rapidly progressing westward. The famine lands will give it a fearful harvest. It will doubtless not spare our own country. The French government has sent three physicians eastward to watch its progress.

Dr. Hampden was confirmed in his new dignity as Bishop of Hereford. in Bow Church, London, on 13th of January, amidst a great crowd of people, by whom he was loudly cheered.

Death of a Princess.—Madame Adelaida, sister of the King of the French, died at the Tuileries on the 31st December, in the 71st year of her age. Her death, it is said, will leave a void in the Royal family for which no equivalent can be found.

Message of Gov. Shunk.

The Pittsburgh Presbyterian Advocate has the following synopsis of Governor Shunk's late Message:—

The public debt has been reduced $160,000 during the year, being now $40,628,949. Balance in the treasury December 1st, 1847, $680,000.

The Governor estimates the tolls of the public works for the present year at $ 1,700,000.

He gives it as his opinion that the permanent revenues of the State will henceforth exceed the ordinary demands on the treasury $500,000.

He endorses the existing tariff and the subtreasury, and strongly opposes an increase of banking capital.

He takes ground against the free banking principle; and opposing mining, manufacturing and similar corporations.

The Gov. approves the Pennsylvania Railroad, and notices favorably the Report of the Superintendent of Common Schools.

The State Geologist has completed his Report, and the Governor recommends its publication by the State.

The Governor advises the passage of a law securing to married women their rights of dower, he also takes strong ground against legislative divorces.

The Message was telegraphed to this city, and published on the same day it was delivered in Harrisburg.

Vacating Tavern Licenses.—Judges Parsons and Kelley, of the Philadelphia Court of Quarter Sessions, recently vacated the license of a tavern-keeper named Maison, on the ground that the house was kept open on Sunday, in violation of the Act of Assembly of 1794. Judge Kelley contended that, as artisans in every branch of business were obliged to suspend their labors upon the Sabbath, the tavern-keeper was not entitled to privileges denied to others.

Judge Parsons made the following announcement: "That if it is established that if any tavern-keeper keeps his house open on Sunday and suffers persons to congregate therein for the purpose of drinking, the fact will be considered sufficient to vacate his license."

A few weeks since, the license of Thomas Patterson was also vacated by the same Judges; the allegation against Patterson being that he sold liquors to minors in small quantities.

Loss of the Bark Helena and Six Lives. —We regret to learn that a letter was received on Thursday, by Messrs. Baxter, Brothers & Co., Dundee, from Captain McNab, of the fine bark Helena, of that port, which left the river for N. York, on the 11th December, with a very valuable cargo of bale goods, announcing the loss of the vessel. On the 15th, during a heavy gale at SSW, she got embayed by the land at the island of North Ronaldshay, and drove on shore, when the crew lost all command, and took to the boat. While in the act of leaving the ship, notwithstanding the remonstrances of Captain McNab, who used every persuasion to induce the crew to get the sails unfurled, &c., a heavy sea broke over her, and washed away boats and every thing off the deck, with eight of the crew. The Captain reached the shore in a very exhausted state, with the assistance of a boat hook. The names of the sufferers are: Robert Mackay, second mate; John Blues, carpenter; Wm. Peddie, Jas. Craig and Anthony McLauchlan, seamen; besides a passenger named Jas. Menzies. Little hope is entertained of saving the vessel or cargo. In fact, she had begun to break up previous to the despatching of the Captain's letter.—Edinburgh Witness.

A Counterfeiter Overtaken by Telegraph. —A man by the name of M. Lee came to Petersburg, and exchanged with F. S. Anthony, broker, thirty-six hundred dollars in five dollar counterfeits on the Danbury Bank of North Carolina, after which he left in the Northern cars. A description of him was communicated by telegraph, and information has been given of his arrest and commitment in Washington. All the money but ten dollars has been recovered.

Variety.

Writing Paper.

I have been asked the derivation and application of the term cap paper.

Cap, as applied to paper, is of modern use entirely, at least in certain parts of the U. States. Not more than thirty years since I was so familiar with the phrase Foolscap, that I distinctly recollect how "cap," its abbreviation, grated on my ear, upon first hearing it, as much so as "pike," for turnpike, does yet.

The question is thus shifted to what is the origin of the phrase foolscap as applied to writing paper, which has borne this name so long, that its origin is lost to most persons.

The Kings of England, from Edward I, if not earlier, granted various monopolies, either for the support of the government, or to enrich favorites. One of them was the exclusive right to manufacture paper, granted by the first Charles. On the finer kinds, as a species of notice of the monopoly, the royal arms of England formed the water mark. Vast sums were of course made upon this exclusive privilege to make and vend an article in such general use.

All these monopolies were swept away by the Parliament which brought Charles to the scaffold, and in this particular case, by way of shewing their contempt for the monarch, they directed the royal arms to be taken from the paper, as they had already been from sign posts, public halls, &c., substituting a fool, with his cap and bills, as the effigy. This was done in 1649.

Most of the manuscripts written between that period and 1660 bear, accordingly, as a water mark, a fool wearing the dress, described as his costume in the court of the British monarchs.—Cromwell, when made Lord Protector, changed the water mark by substituting a dragon grasping in his claws arrows of fire, and afterwards putting his coat of arms in its place. This still occasionally appears.

Charles II at the restoration replaced the royal arms, and enlarged the size of the sheet, which was much smaller than we see it in modern days.

In England, paper of the size which the rump parliament ordered for their journals, bearing the foolscap effigy, is still in existence, and the title, as in many other things, is still retained for ordinary writing paper, centuries after the reason for it has ceased, and now serves, as it will serve for ages, to designate all writing paper in ordinary use, as distinguished from paper designed to be folded in the form of letters.

This last class of writing paper has been reduced greatly in length and widened somewhat to adapt it for a convenient shape in folding, and still bears its original name of post paper, applied to it from the mail or post by which letters were conveyed to their address.

So recently has the United States made its own paper, that most of our early letters written in the west, even as late as 1800 bear the impress of the royal arms. St. Clair, Harmar, Wilkinson and Wayne's letters, are all of this description.—Cist's Advertiser.

A Good Joke.—Mr. Wells, of the Cincinnati Type Foundry, is a real business man, as well as a wit. Some years since he trusted a southern printer, to the amount of an office. To this time he has not received the "first red cent." A short time ago Mr. W. was looking over a southern paper, and saw the name of his debtor, and once printer, up for 'Lawyer and Collector.' He straightway made out his bill against his man as printer and sent it to him as Lawyer for collection. The person after reading the communication, wrote to Mr. Wells "that the joke was worth the money!" Our neighbor has the satisfaction of knowing that his wit has been the means of collecting one bad bill at least.—Cin. Commercial.

A Hoggish Conveyance.—A farmer of St. Albans, Vermont, recently made a grand entree into that place, mounted on a small car drawn by four hogs. He entered the town at a brisk trot, amidst the acclamations of the hundreds, who were soon drawn to witness this uncommon spectacle. After making the tour of the market place three or four times he went into the woolpack yard had his swinish cattle unharnessed and taken into a stable together where they were regaled with a trough full of beans and wash.—They remained about two hours. while he despatched his business as usual at the market when they were put to and driven home again, multitudes cheering him. This man it is said, has only had these animals under training 6 months. A gentleman on the spot, offered him $240 for the concern as it stood, but it was indignantly refused.—New London News.

Glass Bottles.—These are made with great rapidity. A workman, with the assistance of a gatherer and blower, will begin and finish 120 dozen of quart bottles in ten hours. This is 2¼ per minute. In some establishments the hands are restricted to two per minute, to prevent slighting the work.

Curious Historical Fact.—During the troubles in the reign of Charles I, a country girl came to London in search of a place as a servant maid, but not succeeding, she hired herself to carry out beer from a brew-house, and was one of those called tub women. The brewer observing a good-looking girl in this low occupation, took her into his family as a servant, and after a short time married her. He died while she was yet a young woman, and left her the bulk of his fortune. The business of the brewing dropped, Mr. Hyde was recomended to the young woman, as a skillful lawyer, to arrange her husbands affairs. Hyde, who was afterward Earl of Clarendon, finding the widow's fortune considerable, married her. Of this marriage there was no other issue than a daughter, who was afterward the wife of James II., and mother of Mary and Anne, Queens of England.

Decline of Heathenism.—Rev. Dr. Scudder, after laboring in India, a quarter of a century, says: "It is a pleasing circumstance that the abominable rites of the heathen are gradually coming to an end in different parts of this extensive country. The governor general of India has lately published a proclamation by the Gwalior Dunbar, prohibiting the burning of widows within the territories of the king of Scindah. "The political of Jeypoor, having collected the Shastrees, or priests, made inquiries of them respecting suttee, & they said the custom was iniquitous, and then this custom was prohibited by the Jeypoor government." Female infanticide is also forbidden in Jeypoor.

A Dangerous Experiment.—A young man named Grimley is now confined in the hospital, at Philadelphia, with a severe injury of the head, which he received from a woman whom he interfered to save from a terrible beating by her husband. She cautioned him to mind his own business.

The father of Gov. Shunk once kept a tollgate in Montgomery county, Pa. One day a dandy drove up, and after enquiring the amount of toll to be paid, and being informed that it was five cents, he took a half dollar from his pocket, and threw it into the mud, on the road instead of politely handing it. Mr. Shunk without saying a word went into the house, brought out his change consisting of fourty-five coppers, which he also threw in the mud, in the same place where he received the specie, and silently returned to the house. The dandy of course did not relish this much, and after some cursing and swearing, gave the whip to his horse, and drove off, leaving Mr. Shunk to gather the pennies for his trouble.

Pardoned.—President Polk has pardoned John Harding, colored, sentenced at Philadelphia, in 1846, to eight years imprisonment for manslaughter.

The Law of Newspapers.

1. Subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, are considered wishing to continue their subscriptions.

2. If the subscribers order the discontinuance of their papers, the publishers may continue to send them till all cash charges are paid.

3. If subscribers neglect or refuse to take their papers from the offices to which they are directed, they are held responsible until they have settled their bill, and ordered their paper discontinued.

4. If subscribers remove to other places without informing the publishers, and the paper is sent to the former direction, they are held responsible.

5. The Courts have decided that refusing to take a paper or periodical from the office, or removing and leaving it uncalled for, is "prima facie" evidence of intentional fraud.

Liabilities of those who take Periodicals.—This law declare that any person, to whom a periodical is sent, is responsible for payment, if he receives the paper, or makes use of it, even if he has never subscribed for it, or has ordered it to be stopped. His duty in such a case is not to take the paper from the office or person with whom the paper is left, but to notify the publisher that he does not wish for it.

If papers are sent to a Post Office, Store, or any other place of deposite,, and are not taken by the person to whom they are sent, the Postmaster, Storekeeper, &c., are responsible for the payment, until he returns the paper, or informs the publisher that they are lying dead in the office.

☞ If the sick wish a diseased stomach restored and impure blood cleansed without endangering the constitution, go to J. Deen, Grocer and Shoemaker, Putnam, and obtain a box of Dr. Le Roy's Sarsaparilla and Wild Cherry Pills which is the best family medicine now in use. So says Mr. O'Neil the Agent.

DR. LE ROY'S

Wild Cherry, and Sarsaparilla PILLS.

DR. LE ROY has most happily succeeded in combining Wild Cherry and Sarsaparilla with other vegetable ingredients, so as to produce a medicine at once tonic, and purgative, the only perfect discovery of the kind ever made. Their great peculiar excellence, and that which distinguishes them from all other purnatives is, that their operation is followed by no re-action. Their unrivalled purifying and purgative properties, for which they are indebted to the essence of Sarsaparilla, and other ingredients, being controlled by their highly tonic virtues, derived from the extract of Wild Cherry, they do not strain the digestive organs into action, as is the mode of operation with other cathartics, but on the contrary strengthen them into action. Thus all other purgative medicines produce more or less subsequent costiveness, and sluggishness of the gastric juice, while Dr. Le Roy's Pills leave all the machinery of the system full of life and activity, and the bowels open and natural. "Hence," writes Dr. Cheeseman, "they are the only active purgative which I can recommend with confidence, and without alarm; for they remove nothing but what ought to be removed—neither rack, nor strain—occasion no apathy or debilitation—and leave the bowels free, open, and vigorous." But the great virtue of Dr. Le Roy's Pills—the virtue which has spread their fame over the two hemispheres with a rapidity almost miraculous—lies in their purification of the blood. Here they not only stand altogether unrivalled, but fill up the measure of desire. They at once arrest the formation of bad blood, by removing all impurities from the chyle, of which the blood is formed; and moreover keep it clean, by toning and strengthing the digestive organs, so as to be able to exclude from it all matter of an innutricious nature; and then they purify the blood already in circulation, and never cease operation until it is entirely free from every noxious particle, & full of health, life, and vigor. For sale at J. Deen's.

THE OHIO CULTIVATOR FOR 1848.

Published at Columbus, Ohio, on the 1st and 15th of each month, M. B. Bateham, Editor and Proprietor. Terms, $1 per year—four copies for $3—payment invariably in advance.

THE fourth volume of the Ohio Cultivator will commence Jan. 1st. 1848. This paper has now become so well known that it is scarcely necessary to speak of its character, or to allude to the commendations it has received from the Public Press and other sources. The editor is determined to spare no pains on his part to sustain the reputation of the work, and make each succeeding volume more useful than the preceding one. Our motto is "upward and onward;" and the object of the "Cultivator" is not only to collect and disseminate valuable facts and information relating to practical agriculture, but to inspire 'Farmers' with more just conceptions of the dignity of their profession; to induce them to cultivate the 'Mind' as well as the 'soil,' and thus eleavate themselves to that position which it is their duty and privilege to occupy as 'American Agriculturists,'' in this age of Progress and Improvement.

With its very large list of contributors, numbering over "two hundred," most of them practical farmers in the West, the pages of the "Cultivator" will contain the results of "Experience," as well as the teachings of "Science;" and being written or selected with special reference to the climate, productions and farming of Ohio, this paper will be found more valuable than any other for the farmers of this and the adjoining States. It will contain the latest intelligence of the "Markets" of this country and England; notices of the weather and the crops; descriptions (with engravings,) of improved implements, machines, &.; instructions in gardening and fruit culture; rearing and management of domestic animals; construction of farm buildings, fences, &c.; and a "Ladies' Department" devoted to household affairs, useful receipts, &c.

The friends of Improvement in Ohio and adjoining States are requested to obtain and forward subscribers for the Ohio Cultivator. Remember that the price is only "seventy-five cents" each, when four or more names are sent by one person. All subscriptions must commence with the first number of the volume; a complete index is furnished at the end of the year. Specimen numbers and a prospectus will be forwarded to all who desire them.

☞ "Now is the time to subscribe!" Letters with remittances may be sent by mail at the risk and expense of the publisher.

Established for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge:

A Monthly Miscellany of moral and instructive information, embellished with numerous ENGRAVINGS of the various subjects treated of in the course of the year. Published monthly, in parts of 48 large octave pages each.

PROSPECTUS FOR THE FIFTH VOLUME.

For four years the Pictorial Family Magazine has been before the American public, and it is peculiarly gratifying to the Publisher to know, that his efforts to do good through its medium, have met with the universal appreciation of the public & the public prints, wherever it has found its way. It is now too firmly established upon the broad foundation of public confidence, to require a great flourish of trumpets to proclaim its continued existence, or the tricks of 'puffery' to allurethe people to its support.

To those who are acquainted with the Magazine, it is unnecessary to speak of its design & merits; to those who are not, we will make a brief statement of both. The original design of this work was a noble one, and worthy of all praise. It was intended as a vehicle for conveying solid information to that class of citizens whose circumstances denied them the privilege of drinking abundantly

MOVE ON.

The march of life should never stay—
All things should onward tend;
Man should not clog progression's way,
But strive to move and mend.
The waters move in depths of ocean,
The streams along the dales,
The rivulets with onward motion,
Through sweet and verdant vales,
Move on!

The clouds move gently through the sky,
The earth rolls ever on;
Time swiftly in its course runs by,
And years pass, one by one.
Men, too, should strive to follow them,
In their onward way,
Permitting naught the tide to stem,
But ever, day by day,
Move on!

Men may be wiser, if they strive—
More virtuous if they will;
And who, within this world, would thrive,
Must aim at higher still!
Let bigots stand by doctrines old,
The wise will pass them by,
Weak minds may cling with subtle hold,
But strong ones valiantly,
Move on!

Like waters rolling to the ocean,
Down mountains piled on high—
Like clouds forever in commotion,
That move across the sky—
Will we forever onward press,
Thus fetterless and free:
And deeming virtue happiness,
Our watchword ever be,
Move on!

Itineracy,---The Restrictive Rule.

NO. V.

Mr. Editor,—I object to the restrictive rule, because it is founded upon a false pretence. It assumes that ministers cannot be useful for a longer period than two years successively in Stations, or three years in Circuits; or that they will be more useful in fields of labor where they are strangers. Now if this be true, ministers should take such a course in every place where they labor as would keep them from becoming acquainted with the people;—visit none, and as soon as they have delivered their message from the pulpit, retire to their closets, without passing words with any person, and there remain until the next hour for preaching, and thus spend their two or three years, refusing to become acquainted with any person; for according to the assumption of this rule, it would render them unuseful. Why do not the advocates of this rule urge the necessity of this upon their ministers? Why invite them to their houses? Why wish to see them visiting their neighbors? Or do they, in reality, believe that the rule is wrong, and that a minister who is a good man will enlarge his influence and usefulness by extending his acquaintance? If the assumption of this rule is true, why did not the apostles institue for the church which they organized a traveling ministry, and give direction, that they go from place to place, and only stay in one place until the people began a little to be acquainted with them, and then journey to another? This would then have seemed that their deacons and bishops would not bear acquaintance, and would have been something like the restrictive rule. But this they did not do, and surely they would give such direction as they knew would be for the best. And are not facts also contrary to this assumption? If a man is a good man, that fact needs to be known. The people want time to prove by a man's works that he is what he professes to be, and when this is done, they must have more confidence in him than they could have in a stranger, and hence, he would have more influence over them than he could have while a stranger. This rule assumes too, that Methodist ministers, are not of sufficient talent to sustain themselves for a longer period in the same place. However true this charge upon them has been, and may be yet in relation to some who are licensed and put into the itinerancy, it is not true now, in relation to the majority. They will compare with the clergy of any church in this country, and are as well prepared to sustain themselves for a number of years in the same place.

I must object to this rule, because it tends to prevent a man's usefulness while he does stay in the same place. He labors for the wellfare of Zion. His interest is the prosperity of the church. He enters upon the work assigned him by the Conference, with the fact before him that there is no possibility of his continuing in it beyond the given period. He may see courses of influence that he could commence, which would be beneficial to the church in coming years, but being governed by the restrictive rule, he feels that the time is too limited to carry them out, and has no assurance that his successor could, or would, pursue the course which he had commenced. He sees acquaintances that he might form with a hope of reaping benefit to the church, but he knows that he must soon leave, and that if he should form them, no one can enter into his place and reap the benefit. He passes among his people and can easily form an acquaintance with the majority of the members of his church, but far beyond this it generally takes some effort to extend an acquaintance. Opportunity for so doing, must be sought, visits must be made to the families of the community. His introduction to the people is generally gained by some exertion. In many instances he must rather force an acquaintance so as to extend his usefulness. What will be the influence of a knowledge of the fact that the advantages of such acquaintance will be realized for so short a period, or never realized at all, may be readily seen, and has been felt, by, perhaps, every Methodist minister of much experience. It is something like sending a man into the western woods to make his living by farming, with the privilege of doing the best he can for three years in a place. He will fall but few trees compared to what he would if his time was not thus limited. It may be said that a man should do all he can while he does stay at all events. I answer, he does do all he can under the circumstances. He acts perfectly in accordance with the laws of mind. You set any man at work for the accomplishment of any object in which he feels but little interest beyond its permanency, and let him believe that it will be destroyed as soon as he turns from it, and see what influence it will have upon his efforts. Ministers are no more than men. They should be good men. But you send a minister into a station, or into a circuit, with the knowledge of the fact that he is to stay but one year, and he will labor the whole year in view of that fact,—or two,—or three years, and it is the same thing. Why are ministers so frequently less useful a third year on circuits than they were the two preceding? It is from this very fact that they know it to be the last year and cease making an effort to extend their influence. The fact that ministers are frequently less useful a second year in stations and a third year on circuits, is generally used as an argnment in favor of the restrictive rule; when it is really the restrictive rule which is the cause of it. The complaint is not lodged against the pulpit efforts of the brother. He preaches as well, and all are as much interested, as they were at any period after the first six sermons; but it is said that he is less useful. The only cause of this, where the man's moral character stands fair, is, that his way is hedged up by this restrictive rule. Send your ministers into their fields of labor untrammeled, and they will go to work like the agriculturist in his own forest home, with his eye upon the advantages and comforts of coming years, and they will enlarge and improve their fields of labor, overcoming barriers almost insurmountable. They will gather around them such as their talents will influence, and build up such churches as they can be useful among.

Restrictive Rule.

NO. II.

"Resolved, That it is the opinion of the Pittsburgh Annual Conference of the Methodist P. Church, that the 'Restrictive Rule' which forbids the stationing of ministers and preachers longer than three years successively on the same Circuit, and two years successively in the same Station, is contrary to apostolic usage, not necessary to an efficient Itinerancy and in many instances, is detrimental to the interests of Circuits and Stations; and consequently, the Delegates to the next General Conference should be clothed with conventional power, in view of its removal from our book of discipline."

I now propose briefly examining the several items of the above resolution. And 1st. It declares the prohibition to appoint ministers and preachers longer than three years successively on the same circuit, and two years successively in the same station, to be contrary to Apostolic usage. It has been the reflection of Itinerants ever since Methodism has had an existence, which has served as a quietus to the rising rebellion of human nature, when leaving home, friends, and temporal ease, to go from house to house, and from city to city teaching and preaching the kingdom of God, that therefore they had the illustrious and worthy example of the Apostles who received their commission immediately from the Gread Head of the Church. But while this is true, and ought still to have its influence, inducing all the self-denial necessary to faithful and efficient ministers; yet, this is not the objectionable part, neither have we any controversy on this score. But rather the difficulty lies in necessarily connecting with an efficient Itinerancy an absolute, human restriction upon the time which ministers employ with the same people. Now, I fearlessly challenge the objector to furnish a copy of such Restrictive Rule which circumscribes the labor of the Apostles. We need not be told that the Apostles removed from place to place, and that they removed frequently, and that the longest stay with any of them, of which we have any scriptural record, was three years. This is not the question. But what was it that induced their removol? Was it a rule created by a convention of the churches, or was it the circumstances of their condition, and the nature of their mission—a more effectual door being opened, and a desire to accomplish the work especially assigned them of planting churches which were to become fruitful vines under the watering of others, and the care and culture of the great Husbandman? Let it be distinctly understood that we do not desire the abolishment of our itinerancy modus operandi, and we ask for conclusive evidence (if there be such) that itinerancy and this restriction are inseperable. And we are hearily willing to share a common lot in necessary removals. But let the removal be made necessary, not by an arbitrary and tyranical rule which knows no circumstances, but let the people be represented, the minister also, and then if in the judgment of an intelligent committee a removal is necessary—if his usefulness would be increased, or if in any way the glory of God be promoted; why, Amen to it. What think you, reader, is an intelligent committee of ministers and laymen, who know the facts relative to the minister and his charge, or a lifeless, an nnthinking, and an unspeaking rule, the better qualified to judge whether or not, the minister should be removed? Is it the more in consonance with truth to suppose the Apostles acted as rational men, under the influences and direction of the Holy Spirit, or, that as idolators they bowed to a rule, the workmanship of their own hands, which would frequently require them to disregard every circumstance connected with their condition, and every prospect in reference to their usefulness?

Methodist ministers in the general, believe in the doctrine of a call from God to the work and office they assume. They are directed not only to labor, but where and how to perform the work assigned them they should not lean to their own understanding, but look to God that he might direct their steps. Is this the doctrine? Or are we called into the vineyard to pursue our own course—are we employed as stewards of the manifold grace of God to accomplish our own designs, or his who sent us? What would be the reply of the Apostles to such inquiries,—we should obey God rather than men. We should look to be guided by the Spirit into all truth, and follow the leadings of Providence to every good word and work. And if this be admitted, will it not leave us with the onlyalternative,—either to disregard divine direction, or the rule which we are now considering, which frequently conflicts with it?

We assert fearlessly that in the removing of the Apostles from place to place, they were actuated by higher considerations than such a rule, and that such a rule would have been entirely inconsistent with the pure and Christ-like motives which controlled them; and of consequence, that this rule is contrary to Apostolic usage.

Seven Years in the Itinerancy.

NO. II.

Rev. A. H. Bassett; In my last, I promised that M——— circuit should come next. I rested a few days—set out in search of my field of labor—travelled fifty miles, came to the city of W——— which was to be one of my appointments. I had been directed to call with the family of L———, who were Radicals indeed, and who resided in the city. I soon found the residence of my good friend L———, informed them that the Conference had sent me to preach for them—they received me kindly, but were disposed to joke me relative to my field of labor, as there was no society in that place, and no prospect of there ever being again. They once had a pretty good church—large enough to sustain a station preacher, but it had all gone to nothing, and mutual rights had become unpopular among the Methodists. The Conference had not sent a preacher for the last 3 or 4 years. A part of their family had joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, the balance had attached to the G——— circuit. However, the good friends gave me all the encouragement they could, said, "come on and we will do the best we can," (so they did.) Encouraged I went out among the hills of F——— Creek to hunt up the balance of my field of labor. I found about forty persons who claimed to be members of the Methodist Protestant Church, scattered over a territory of some two hundred miles, the most of whom were very poor, but apparently happy and contented.

Returned to the city to make some arrangements about moving. My good friend L——— had been at work, (notwithstanding he was a mechanic, and had to get his living by his work,) and secured me a house and became responsible for the rent. I came on and went to work in the name and fear of the Lord. I soon found a circuit of thirty places, around which I travelled once in every four weeks—making upwards of two hundred miles.

One-half of my circuit was without any road, and in some places scarcely a path. To get a road would be next thing to an impossibility. It was nothing but up and down tremendous hills, from half to a mile to the top of them. It was too hard upon the horse either to ride up or down. Thus we had to walk the greater part of the way among the hills.

Twice, during the winter I got lost, nothing could I see and hear but the melting flakes of snow, and the violent storm playing among the lofty sons of the forest, and here and there bearing down before it a sturdy oak to its resting place. The wild deer, apparently to cheer my disconsolate spirit once in awhile, would make his appearance in my path.

Upon my knees, I lifted up my cry to heaven, O, for sustaining grace. The promise came like lightning, "I will go with you," says the blessed Jesus. I arose, placed my hat upon my head, mounted my horse—on I went not knowing whither I was going. God in his providence opened up my way, and I was led to a log cabin. The following lines of poetry, with a little alteration, will express the whole scene, better than I can:

"'Twas night, the floods were out, it blew
A winter hurricane aloof:
The stranger heard my voice abroad, and flew,
He bid me welcome to his roof.
He warmed, he clothed, and cheered his guest—
Laid me on his own couch to rest."

Notwithstanding the inhabitants of this thinly settled country are poor, yet I never saw a more kind and hospitable people in all my travels.—Never was I denied a night's lodging. They took pleasure in doing the best they could. It is true, that many knew but little about the Gospel or religion,—they knew how to hunt deer.

I had understood that a gentleman in W——— had purchased a lot of land in those hills, who went to see it, but could not get near it on horseback, I thought the story could not be true, but when I came to travel through them I was compelled to believe it.

But notwithstanding the many difficulties which presented themselves, it was my soul's delight to hunt up the lost sheep of the house of Israel in this wilderness region, where Satan sat encamped, and over his subjects had thrown perpetual night—here I strove to plant Immanuel's cross, and to sow the seeds of eternal life,—praying that immortal truth might blaze and burn around these rugged hills until sin was consumed.

Ecclesiastical despotism had planted her staff, and waved her flag in triumph. I tried to sound the trump of mutual rights, and to inform the down-trodden how high his manhood was—his birth-right liberty, and show from the Gospel of peace the writ of manumission signed by God's own hand.

Many were the difficulties, and oppositions with which I had to contend, numerous were my enemies, and many were my friends—my feeble efforts were crowned with success. I received into the Methodist Protestant Church during the year one hundred and fifty persons. Left a good little society at W——— numbering twenty-two, the most of which, if not all, still hold on their way. Their numbers have increased—a permanent church has been planted.

Brother P. B. Hopper, in the Methodist Protestant thinks the Methodist preachers in this our day have very easy times in comparison with those of former years. This is true in many cases, I know it is with preachers on the eastern shore of Maryland. Step across the mountains, Brother, and travel some of our western circuits, you will find a wide difference between your country and the west. I have seen Methodist preachers in that country travel around their circuits in a fine carriage, but we cannot do it here for two reasons. Methodist preachers generally speaking are not able to get them, and in the second place, they would be of no use to many if they had, as they could not travel in them; and in some regions if a Methodist preacher had a carriage or a buggy he would not receive one cent of quarterage. Received this year clear of moving expenses and house rent fifty dollars.

Yours,
A WONDER.

The Nature of Evangelical Religion.

NO. I.

Nothing is more important than a knowledge of the nature of objects. Convinced of this, the Chemist makes his experiments, and other Philosophers urge their investigations. However great our acquaintance may be with the operations and effects of things, if we be ignorant of their attributes our knowledge is still imperfect.—To understand the nature of religion is certainly desirable, and hence it has been unfolded to our fallen world. The question comes up,—What is its nature? The gospel-mirror shows it to be pure benevolence and love. Hence the answer, religion is pure. If any system deserves this character, it assuredly does. Let the shrewdest intellect examine, nay scrutinize it, with keenest severity, and it will not find the least impurity in it. Which one of its attributes (benevolence and love) is even tainted with impurity? Infidels may find whatever faults they will, they cannot charge it with impurity, without having the voice of reason, observation and nature, to throw back the assertion as an unwarranted libel. Are we asked, who is its author? Ask the universe who created it, ask the angels on the golden plains of glory, who made them,—consult the Book of Books, of such easy access & replete with information,—and then will you learn who instituted it. Begin within the lowest ranks of humanity; go up thro' the shining order of angels, cherubim and seraphim; & when you arrive at the throne, know that He, who hides himself in its light, & stretches forth his unseen arm to the limits of space, know that He is its Author. Whose image but His does it bear? Amid the chorus of the morning stars He gave it an existence, and with Heaven's warmest wishes for its success, sent it forth to raise and cheer unfortunate fallen man. Glory be to God most high.

Again: is he not pure? Did sin ever dare approach him? Bible says not. If then he is pure, how could a system emanating from him, be any thing else than pure? If it be placed beside any other system even for contrast, compare it with all other religions—and the resplendent glories of its beams shine still the brighter. Yes, with a louder tone, it then speaks the divinity of its origin, and the purity of its nature; and as it speaks, shame beclouds the infidel's brow, and the most potent arm of opposition loses its strength.

Again: this religion is not mingled with the corruptions of the world. I admit, some have strove to unite philosophy and science with it, but this was unsanctioned by the Bible, and such efforts have ever proved unsuccessful. Some nations, (not ours thank God) have joined it in unholy alliance with the State; they supposing that the pride of power hanging its ensignia around it, the civil law could extend its feeble arm to sustain it, but still this does not effect its true character. If it receives any apparent defilement, it is through the mistaken zeal of fallible man, and does not belong to it, and hence cannot be referred to its original constitution. Now we hope from the above reasons, it will be admitted that, this religion has an exalted nature.—It is perfect purity—without any defilement. It stands upon an eminence without a rival to dispute its glory, commanding the admiration of all intelligences, and receiving the united homage of the saints on the earth, and all the hosts of heaven.

MISCELLANEOUS.

CORK.

Many persons see corks used daily without knowing whence came these exceedingly useful materials. Corks are cut from large slabs of the bark of the cork tree, a species of the oak, which grows wild in the countries south of Europe.—The tree is generally stripped of its bark at about fifteen years old, but before stripping it off, the tree is not cut down, as in case of the oak. It is taken while the tree is growing, and may be repeated every eight or nine years,—the quality of the bark continuing each time to improve as the age of the tree increases. When the bark is taken off, it is singed in the flames of a strong fire, and after being soaked for a considerable time in water, it is placed under heavy weights in order to render it straight. Its extreme lightness, the ease with which it can be compressed, and its elasticity, are properties so peculiar to this substance, that no efficient substitute for it has been discovered. The valuable properties of cork were known to the Greeks and Romans, who employed it for all the purposes for which it is used at present, with the exception of stopples for bottles; the ancients mostly used cement for stopping mouths of bottles, or vessels. The Egyptians are said to have made coffins of cork, which being spread on the inside with a resinous substance, preserved dead bodies from decay. In modern times cork was not generally used for stopples for bottles till about the close of the 17th century, wax being till then chiefly used for that purpose. The cork imported into Great Britain is brought principally from Italy, Spain and Portugal. The quantity annually consumed is upwards of 500 tons.—English Paper.

American Colonization Society--Emancipation of Slaves by Mr. Clay.

We have already copied a notice of the anniversary of this greatly philanthropic Association lately celebrated in Washington City, Mr. Clay, President of the Society, presiding and delivering a conclusive, tho' brief speech in defence of its great principles and objects. We find in the letter of Mr. Greely, editor of the New York Tribune, who was in attendance, the following interesting statements which we had not noticed previously:—Cin. Atlas.

"Mr. Clay stated that a gentleman of Alabama lately bequeathed to him (Mr. Clay) his slaves, twenty-five in number. He (Mr. C.) believed it the interest of the latter that they should be emancipated, but this could not be done in Alabama—the laws forbade it; nor yet in any neighboring State. But on taking them to Louisiana I was at liberty to emancipate them if I sent them out of the country; and I have heard with pleasure since I arrived here, that twenty-three of them are on their way to Liberia, having joyfully embraced the offer of freedom which Colonization enabled me to make them."

Early Rising.—The famous philosopher, the really great Czar Peter, of Russia, whose memory will ever be the admiration of Europe, always rose before day, and when he saw the morning break, would express his wonder that any man should be so stupid as not to rise every morning to behold one of the most glorious sights in the universe. "Men take delight," said he, "in gazing on a picture, the trifling work of a mortal, and at the same time neglect one painted by the Deity himself! For my part," added he, "I am for making my life as long as I can, and therefore SLEEP as little as possible."

☞ "Short visits are best," as the fly said when he lit on the hot stove.

☞ "I am a straight-forward man," as the toper said when he pitched into the gutter, "and 'nothing else.'"

An Eclaircissement.

Poisson, is the French for fish, and Poison, a word resembling it to the eye, is the same in French and English. This explains an amusing mistake below:

Not long after the general peace, when all classes of English travellers, learned and unlearned, polished and unpolished, flocked to the continent in search of the classical and picturesque, one of these pilgrims met a companion sitting in a state of most woful despair, and apparently near the last agonies, by the side of one of the mountain lakes of Switzerland. With great anxiety he inquired the cause of his suffering. "Oh!" said the latter, "I was very hot and thirsty, and took a large draught of the clear water of the lake, and then sat down on this stone to consult my guide book. To my astonishment I found there that the water of this lake is very poisonous. O, I am a gone man—I drank so much there is no hope for me! I feel it running all over me; I have only a few minutes to live! Remember me to ———." "Let me see the guide book," said his friend. Turning to the passage he found "L'eau du lac est bien poissoneuse"—"The water of the lake abounds in fish." "Is that the meaning of it?" "Certainly." "I never was better," said the dying man, leaping up with a countenance radiant as the sun on a fine May morning. Then extending his arm in the true Longbow style, said, "there's muscle," he cut a series of capers over the grass that would have done honor to a Vestris. "What would have become of you," said his friend, "if I had not met you?" "I should have died of imperfect knowledge of the French language."

Distressing Accident.—Yesterday afternoon, while a trial of the new locomotive "Juno," just completed at the manufactory of Mr. Ross Winans, was being made on the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, between Mt. Clair depot and the Relay house, when about three miles from the city, the coupling of the engine and tender, from some cause, became detached, and Mr. John B. Easter, the principal clerk in the establishment of Mr. Winans, who was standing immediately over the coupling, with one foot on the engine and the other on the tender, was preceipitated immediately on the rail and the tender, with its load of fuel and water, passed over him, mangling him in a shocking manner, and killing him almost immediately. Mr. Easter was a young man of more than ordinary promise, and of attainments in scientific mechanics beyond his years. He had been but a few days since elected recording secretary of the "Maryland Institute for the Promotion of the Mechanic Arts," in the organization of which he had taken a most active part. His dreadful and untimely fate will be severely felt by the institution, and amply deplored by a large circle of friends and acquantances.—Balt. Sun.

Horrible.---A man named James Kelley, while cleaning hogs at Jersey City, a few days since, was accidentally knocked into a hogshead of scalding water. He died on Wednesday evening.

Meeting House Burnt.—The colored people's meeting-house, near Elkton, Md., was burned down on Saturday last. This is the second time this church has been destroyed by an incendiary.

Prevention of Cholera.—It is an important fact that the Moravian seulement of Sarepta, on the river Volga, has again, for the second time, escaped the visitation of the cholera, whilst the disease has prevailed all around it. This is supposed to be the result of the well known temperance and cleanliness of the Moravians.

Death of Gen. Bartlett-—The New York papers of yesterday morning announce the death of Gen. Geo. Barleett, of Buffalo.

Rains.—The quantity of rain that has fallen within the last 6 months at Zanesville, is twenty-six inches and seventeen hundredths. The snow being melted and counted as rain. In August; the depth was 3 inches & six tenths; in September, 5 inches thirty-nine hundredths; in October, 4 inches eighty-seven hundredths; in December, 6 inches eighty-two hundredths; and in January 3 inches seventy-five hundredths. Taking these several depths together the earth would be covered with water two feet, two inches and seventeen hundredths in depth.

In temperature, the weather continues mild, and owners of ice houses (or perhaps more properly ice cellars) begin to fear that they will have to forego the luxury of cooling drink when the summer is upon them. The greenness of vegetable growth has not been destroyed this winter and plants in the garden are putting up a new growth.

Greens are abundant in market.—Zanes. Gaz.

Indian Printers.—The Cherokee Advocate is now, & has been for several months, entirely in the hands of Indians. One compositor is a Greek who learned the trade at Van Buren, Arkansas; the others are Cherokees, who have acquired in the Nation, east of the Mississippi.

THE AMERICAN PULPIT,

PUBLISHED MONTHLY AT WORCESTER, MASS.,

BY SAMUEL CHISM.

This publication is sent forth, with the specific object of disseminating evangelical truth. Its design is eminently 'practical,' not speculative. It will present those vital truths of christianity which are calculated to stimulate the church to her appropriate work in the evangelization of the world; and will urge the unconverted to an immediate surrender of their hearts to God, and the entire consecration of themselves to his service. It is not devoted to the interests of any particlar denomination, but aims at the present and eternal happiness of the whole human family.

Each monthly issue will contain 32 pages of matter, octavo, in new, bold, and clear type, cast expressly for this use. Two sermons will appear in each number; and the remaining pages will be filled with Skeletons of Sermons, Ministerial and Religious Miscellany, Criticisms, Biographical Sketches, etc.

TO WHOM SHALL WE GO?

ST. JOHN 6TH AND 68TH.

'To whom shall we go' in the bright days of youth,
While the heart leaps with gladness, the tongue drops with truth;
Ere the new soul its transit from glory can trace,
Or see why this world all its beauties efface?

'To whom shall we go' in the full strength of years,
When childhood, its follies, its joys, and its fears
Are all pass'd away; and the faint lines of care
Peep through the clear brow, that its deep shades must wear?

'To whom shall we go' when the twilight of age
Throws the shadows of evening o'er life's finish'd page,
When the still, dreamy waters, of Death heave in sight
And the long captive spirit prepares for its flight?

'To whom shall we go' when we're swimming in wealth;
While the cheek wears the crimson of vigor and health?
Or when with disease on some pallet we groan
Unfriended, uncared-for, unsought, and alone?

'To whom shall we go' whan the desolate mind
'Midst its own dreary ruins no solace doth find;
While deep shame and remorse envelop the soul,
And sins of ingratitude blacken the whole?

When we turn from the halls of a once happy home,
And are doom'd from its pleasures in sadness to roam;
When each sacred tie that enchains us below
Is rent by rude Death, O where shall we go?

In ev'ry condition, to whom shall we go?
In youth, manhood and age, in weal and in wo,
In joy, and in sorrow, in ease, or in pain,
Abandoned, or courted, by each fickle train?

Say shall we not go to the free, open fount,
That once issued forth on Calv'ry's Mount;
And there, undisturbed by earth's turmoil and strife,
In faith claim "the words of eternal life;" G.

Western Sketches.

From Cist's Advertiser.

Recollections of an Old Pioneer.

Mr. Cist: The decease of two of my early friends and acquaintances, as lately announced in your paper, namely, Colonels John Riddle, and Silas Dinsmore, forcible reminds me that my own life is rapidly drawing near to a close. The former I had known fifty-four years, and could even at this day nearly point out the spot on which Riddle's Blacksmith Shop stood in Cincinnati in the beginning of the year 1793. In the winter of 1792, and of that year, I first descended the Ohio, my acquaintance with Colonel Riddle was often afterwards renewed. In 1814 he was with us at the second treaty of Greenville, in command of the troops called out to defend the public property, and maintain a proper police on the treaty ground. There was present seven thousand Indians, Shawnees, Delawares, Wyandotts, Senecas, Miamies, Potawatimies, Ottawas and Kickapoos, and here the Indian warriors were first formally, and by the President of the United States, called upon to take up the hatchet & make common cause with us in the then existing war with England. My old friend Riddle personified on the occasion, the head warrior of the United States, and danced, in concert with the chiefs, the war dance with much grace and agility. The novelty of the affair produced a high degree of excitement and enthusiasm. Pape-kit-cha, or Flat-Belly, the war chief of the Miamies so far forgot what was due to himself and the assembled multitude, that he divested his person of all his clothing, and danced perfectly naked. Colonel Riddle at that time would have readily passed for a man twenty years younger than he was, such was his erect, manly appearance, and the buoyancy of his movements. A gentleman from Piqua who had lately called on him, informed me that the aged and venerable pioneer had made many inquiries of him about myself. I trust a suitable monument will mark the spot where rests the remains of this soldier, patriot, and early western adventurer.

General Harrison was the Commissioner of the United States, aided by Governor Cass, at the treaty alluded to.

With Colonel Dinsmore I became acquainted about the year 1797, in Philadelphia; he was purser of the George Washington frigate. The ship had been sent to Algiers with the annual tribute of naval and other military stores to the Dey, for let it be remembered there was a time when the United States paid tribute to all the Barbary powers, and it remained for the people and government of this, the then youngest nation in the world, to vindicate by force of arms, the freedom of the seas, against the barbarian freebooters, and by the courage, skill, and enterprise of Preble, Decatur and their associates, to compel them to abandon forever all pretensions to tribute. The Washington, after landing the cargo at Algiers, was forcibly compelled by the Dey to receive on board a large number of animals peculiar to Africa, which had been procured for the purpose of presentation to the Sultan of Constantinople, and with this cargo the ship was compelled, with the Algerine flag at her mast head, to proceed to the destined port, in despite of the protests of the commander, whose name I have forgotten. Dinsmore was a boarder in the house with myself after his return, and often used to relate the mortifying circumstances attending the voyage to Constantinople. I think it more than probable that the occurrence in question had its due weight in rousing the nation to lead the way in crushing the insolence of the Barbary powers, and finally bringing them to justice and good behavior towards all the Christian powers. Dinsmore was afterwards agent for the Choctaw Indians, and fought a duel with a relative of my own, Captain F. Johnston, of the U. S. Army, and was wounded in the arm, the use of which he never entirely recovered. During his agency in the Indian country, his great difficulty occurred with General Jackson, which ultimately led to the loss of his office, and beggared him. It is now about twenty years since I met, for the last time, my old friend Dinsmore, at the annual commencement of the Miami University, in Oxford, Butler county. Since then I had no knowledge of his whereabouts, until an account of his death met my eye in your paper. He was a kind hearted man, full of wit and repartee: witness his laconic reply to Mr. Secretary Crawford, about the course of the Tombigbee river. Colonel Dinsmore was a native of New Hampshire, and as I perceive, lived to the good old age of eighty-one.

During the last 12 months much of my leisure hours has been spent in furnishing facts and circumstances to Mr. Howe, for a history of Ohio, which he expects to have ready for delivering in the ensuing October; this, with declining health; and severe bereavement lately fallen upon me in the loss of my gifted son, Captain A. R. Johnston, of the 1st Dragoons, who perished in battle with the enemy in California, December 6, 1846, has interrupted my contributions to your Journal. I could not, however, permit the death of my two early friends to pass without this brief notice.

Your friend and obedient servant.
JOHN JOHNSTON.

Piqua, O., July 7, 1847.

Early Navigation of the Ohio.

Long before steamboats had broken, with their puffing, the solitudes of the river Ohio shores, ship vessels had passed down that stream from Marietta, and even from points higher up the Ohio.

Sea vessels were built at Marietta as early as 1801. The St. Clair, a brig of 100 tons burthen, reached Cincinnati on the 27th April of that year, completely rigged and ready for sea service freighted with country produce, and bound for the West india Islands.

Her arrival at Cincinnati was hailed by crowds assembled on the river banks, all eager to view such a presage of the growth of the west. But this was not the first sea vessel which went down the Ohio. In 1800, a schooner built at Elizabethtown, on the river Monongahela, called the Monongahela Farmer, was launched and equipped for sea service. She was freighted with seven hundred and twenty bbls. flour, at Elizabethtown, and took in at Fort Massac, on her way down, 2000 bear, and 4000 deer skins; all for the New Orleans market. She was owned in shares, by an association of neighboring farmers, and commanded by, Captain John Walker, by whom she had been built, and left Elizabeth on the 17th May, reaching Louisville on the 15th June, where she was detained on account of the low stage of water, until a rise in the ensuing January enabled her to cross the Falls, and reach Louisiana. This vessel made several trips as a packet between New Orleans and New York, making one trip from New York to the Balize, in twelve days; an extraordinary passage, being the quickest ever known at that date—1801.

Capt. Walker is yet living at Elizabeth, in vigorous health, and with the prospect of surviving many years yet.

One other statistic respecting Capt Walker, is worthy of notice. Sixty-three years ago he brought out to Pittsburgh, the first printing press for the west, being that on which John Scull, for years, printed the Pittsburgh Gazette.

What a picture of western progress is afforded in the fact that all the mighty changes which have occurred in the political, social and intellectual condition of the west have taken place within the lifetime of individuals yet alive, and who were old enough to have taken part in effecting these changes.—Cist's Advertiser.

Ministerial.

MINISTERS' CROWN OF REJOICING.

Extract of a Sermon by Rev. T. Potter, from a volume of Sermons now in press.

In conclusion, permit us once more to appeal to you, in the language of Paul's address to the Thessalonians: "For what is our hope, and joy, and crown of rejoicing? Are not even ye in the presence of the Lord Jesus Christ, at his coming?—The expression,—"crown of rejoicing"—is a singular and striking allusion to a practice, which prevailed in the Republic of Rome. When a Roman General had, by skill and valor, conquered any new counntry for the Empire, or had greatly distinguished himself by some remarkable victory; it was customary for the Senate, by and with the consent of the Tribunes of the people of Rome, to decree "a golden crown" for the triumphant General: and when, after his return to the Imperial City, he had what was called, "his triumph,"—which was a day of public rejoicing set apart for the purpose of doing honor to the General,—"the crown," decreed to him for his military achievements, was formally placed on his head; and wearing this "crown," seated in a splendid car, he was conducted through the principal streets to the Capitol, amid the shouts, applause and congratulations of the enthusiastic population, who assembled in crowds to be spectators of the General's triumph.—Such was the scene,—such the circumstances, to which the Apostle alludes, when he here speaks of these Thessalonians as "his crown of rejoicing, at the coming of Christ."—Paul was anticipating "a public triumph," when he should go up to meet his Lord on the Judgment-day. He was looking forward to that day, when, he anticipated, that he should come into the presence of his Divine Master,—not alone, but in a crowd,—thronged about with a numerous company composed of those, for whose salvation he had longed and labored, while he lived on earth. He was expecting, that these Thessalonians would form, neither the least numerous, nor the least conspicuous portion of that holy, happy throng, that should accompany him in his triumphant appearance before the Divine throne. Hoping for, what he so much desired, that they would be found "in the Lord" on that great day, and that "saved in the Lord," they would be owned and proclaimed by the Sovereign Judge, before the assembled millions of the Universe, as the undoubted seals of his Ministry,—the legetimate fruits of his Evangelical labors, Paul assured himself, that they would bring upon him the approval, the applause, and the acclamations,—of God, of Angels, and of the myriads of Beings from all worlds, that would cover him,—as with "a triumphal crown,"—with glory and honor, amid the delight of which he should revel in the the raptures "of rejoicing, as in one eternal public Triumph!"—We too, My Hearers, as well as Paul, are ambitious to have "a Triumph," on the last great day:—and shall we not have you in our train, to grace our appearance in the presence of the Lord?—Alarmed at your danger,—yet are you "the Hope" of our Ministry; your conversion to God would indeed be "our Joy;"—and saved in the Lord,—saved finally—will you be "our Crown,"—our "Rejoicing Crown," when Christ comes to Judgment? O when we approach "the great white throne," among a company of the heirs of salvation, whom we have been instrumental in saving, to present them as the trophies of our Evangelical labors;—will our hearts be then rejoiced at seeing you in our triumphant band?—Alas!—alas!—as we enter into the august presence of our approving Sovereign Christ, "on his throne of glory," and look around us, encompassed about by a cloud of witnesses to the success of our prayers and persuasions;—shall we be damped, amid our delight, by finding you missing?—And when we, and our company of saved ones, approved and applauded by our smiling Lord, are waved away to his right hand, to take our place in the triumphal procession, at the head of which the King of glory will, at the close of the Judgment, lead up the whole host of redeemed, to the highest heaven;—Beloved Brother, will you and will you, Dear Sister, be seen at a distance,—far, far on the left hand, awaiting the withering words,—"Depart ye cursed?"—"Knowing therefore this terror of the Lord, we would persuade you to flee from the wrath to come!"

TEMPERANCE SOCIETIES.

A Compendium from "A succinct History of the Origin, Principles, Objects and Progress of Temperance Societies in the U. States."

At the beginning of the present century, careful investigations made at different times and places, brought to light the alarming facts, that two-thirds of our pauperism, nine-tenths of our crimes, two-thirds of our cases of insanity, and an annual expense of from one hundred to one hundred and twenty millions of dollars, are to be traced immediately or remotely to the moderate or immoderate use of ardent spirits. It was found that the ravages of intemperance had extended, not only to our sanctuaries of religion, our legislative halls and judicial courts, but that the freedom and the purity of the elective franchise were endangered; & investigation had not only disclosed these important facts, but had also proved to the full satisfaction of every candid mind, that the use of ardent spirits as a common drink adds nothing, either to the happiness or the physical energies of man, but is directly subversive of both. That the almost inevitable tendeney of moderate drinking is to produce and perpetuate drunkenness; for though it is true that every moderate drinker does not become an habitual drunkard, yet it is equally true that every habitual drunkard was once a moderate drinker.

The first "American Temperance Society" was formed in Boston, in 1826, the Pledge was, not to use distilled spirits, nor to provide them for the use of others; and, to discountenance the use of them in the community. The signing of this pledge was the only term of membership.—It was a simple pledge of honor, rarely violated: a voluntary association with only this one bond. Its objects to include in its kindness and charities all forms of human woe: to dry the tear of anguish, to bind up the broken-hearted, to feed the hungry, to clothe the naked, to release the captive and snatch from the grave of infamy the victims of a degraded appetite. With these objects in view, temperance societies commended themselves to all, of every religious creed and of every political party, by their freedom from every thing which is not compatible with the most enlarged philanthropy as well as with the most enlightened patriotism,—seeking only to remove and prevent wretchedness—and to secure the full measure of their country's glory and prosperity—in the face of the sun.

Millions of reports, essays, addresses, circulars, &c., &c., were published and circulated among all classes of the community, carrying convictions to hundreds and thousands of minds, and inducing them entirely to abandon the practice of using ardent spirit as a common drink. Agents were sent every where and paid wholly by voluntary contributions.

The New York State Temperance Society accomplished as much or more than any other State Society. The concerns of the society were managed by an Executive Committee consisting of seven persons. It was formed in January, 1829. Pledges were signed openly in the primary societies. A thousand copies weekly of the 'Journal of Humanity,' a paper published under the direction of the American Temperance Society, was contracted for. In the course of a year and a half, every county had a county society,—and about seven hundred out of the nine hundred towns a town society. As yet, however, the great mass of the people was uninfluenced; but the organization had become so far perfected, that by means of county and town societies, it was found practicable to reach every family in the State.

The families of the State were near four hundred thousand in all. In each of these a concise, plain, kind circular was deposited. In 6 months one hundred thousand persons of all ages, sexes and conditions signed the pledge of total abstinence, and were enrolled as members of temperance societies, in the State of New Uork alone. The 'Temperance Recorder,' was commenced in March, 1832. About fifty thousand copies were issued monthly—five hundred thousand up to December of that year. These papers were freely distributed not only in the State of New York, but also in every part of the Union, carrying light and conviction to multitudes of minds.

The whole plan was:

1. The National Society, called the American Temperance Society.

2. The several State Societies, auxiliary to the National Society.

[Note.—The term auxiliary here means nothing more than engaged in the same work by a common bond, which is the pledge before mentioned. No auxiliary society is called upon or is bound to give any money. All expenses are defrayed from voluntary contributions or donations.]

3. County Societies, auxiliary to the State Society.

4. Town Societies, auxiliary to county Societies.

5. School District Societies, auxiliary to town Societies.

Soon there were eight or ten Temperance Newspapers in the United States, (i. e. in A. D. 1832,) circulating from twenty to twenty-five thousand copies weekly, in addition to the gratuitous distributions mentioned.

The whole number of temperance societies was (in 1832) probably between four and five thousand—members, from five hundred thousand to eight hundred thousand. The State of New York had one thousand two hundred societies, and two hundred thousand members. One thousand five hundred distileries had been abandoned. One hundred and fifty innkeepers refused to be any longer ministers of death. Four thousand merchants ceased to traffic in spiritous liquors.—Probably as many as sixty thousand farmers, and as many mechanics had their labor performed without giving ardent spirits.

[We regret to find that the above article is incomplete, the remaining portion not having come to hand. Will our correspondent find it convenient to forward if he please, at his leisure, what is lacking? Ed. W. R.]

Abroad and at Home.

A gentleman who had been conspicuous in aiding a missionary collection, was met the following day by one of dissimilar habits, who chided him for the absurd eccentricity of which he deemed him guilty, in giving to such an object, and in such profusion. It was preposterous, he said, to be sending heaps of money abroad, to be spent no one knew how, while there were so many unemployed starving poor of——. "I will give—dollars to the poor of——, if you will give an equal sum," said the Christian friend. "I did not mean that," replied the objector—"But," continued he, "if you must go from home, why so far? Think of the miserable poor of Ireland." "I will give—dollars to the poor of Ireland, if you will do the same." "I did not mean that either," was the reply. No, it is neither this nor that, which this class of objectors exactly mean; but, simply to veil their criminal parsimony by excepting against the proceedings of liberal men, whom, if they could not condemn, they must, for very shame, in some degree imitate.

Ladies' Department.

Recipe for Finishing a Young Lady.

Take a daughter of a person who has some money, but not much information, and if she be an only child, so much the better for your purpose. Stuff her with plum cake and praise her till she is nine; then teach her the horn-book, and let her practise for three or four years at such reading as may be selected for her by Mary the maid of all work—the said Mary taking especial care that Miss is her confident in all her little matters in the sweethearting line. When she enters her thirteenth year, send her to Miss Diddlefidget's "Establishment" to be finished. Here she must read a little and spell some, but avoid every thing like grammar as a vulgarity and a plague. Put her up to "woolly-woo, parley-woo" a little, and she is 'Frenchified. Strum her up six octaves and a half of the pianer, and down again, and make her look charming at the harp, and she is musi-ked. Inform her that Tamerlane succeeded Charles the Twelfth as Emperor of China, and that Julius Cæsar defeated Oliver Cromwell on the banks of the Macquarrie river in Nova Zembla, and she is completely hostorified. Tell her that Chimberraco is a great salt lake in Arabia, and that the Po is a burning mountain in Arabia Felix, and let her give a whirl or two to the globe, and point out the longitude of the Arctic Pole, and the latitude of the equator, and she is geographied. Make her waltz for three hours in a week with a French valet out of place, and she is 'attitudinized.' The other accomplishments may be obtained for money, without any exertion on her part. So much for "heddication."

Pugnacity in Embryo.—"That's right—slap your mother's face—naughty ma!" "Pull John's hair—so you may. See there he has a handful!" "Pull pussy's tail—how she mews! shaw! it does not hurt her!" He's sharp to look out for himself—how cunning he is in getting the best one—trust him to take care of number one." "He's a sly little rogue—was not that a real trick? Willy will know how to get out of a scrape." "What a story that child has made up—she'll make a first rate romance writer."

Look at children reared under such tuition as this, after they had ceased to be "funny because they are so little."

Lay it down as a rule, never to smile, nor in any way show approval nor merriment, at any trait in a child which you should not wish should "grow with his growth, and strengthen with his strength."—Mrs. E. C. Allen.

Miscellaneous.

JOHN QUINCY ADAMS.

We remember once, when conversing with an old Carolina planter, about the great men of our country, being struck with a remark which he made about this venerable man.

"Sir," said he, "John Quincy Adams carries his doctrines into life, & by his life proves them. He does. You don't find him preaching, and not practising; but you do find him practising & not preaching. In this, consists his greatness. For this, posterity will rank him as the man of our day.'

"He Does."

And this remark was made when the newspapers of the South were hottest, against Mr. Adams, and when he, too, was pouring out his strongest protests against Southern domination, & meeting Southern action by a proud defiance, and masterly eloquence. Yet the sensible slaveholder saw clearly his position. He felt that Mr. Adams was a true man, and, at once, and heartly designated his great merit, and his future position.

How emphatic & how true! Find Mr. Adams where you will, and he is doing; doing the duty before him; doing it, be it large or small, an affair of the nation, or an affair of the town, as thoroughly as if he had nothing else to do. No weather, no ordinary, nor extraordinary excuse, keeps him from whatever post present duty may assign him. He is ever in his seat in Congress; no call of the roll finds him away. He is punctual in attending at the moment, to whatever business he undertakes. He is always in his pew at church on the Sabbath. Thus occupying his proper position, Mr. Adams is sure to remember to do—his present duty, and this makes him the mighty man he is.

He does.

And the effect of his doing—so simple, so direct, so christian—must win its way to the public heart, and go far towards influencing it rightly. Mr. Adams, in grain, is a thorough republican. He has no tawdry theories to please the many. He acts out, as our Carolina friend says, in life what he professes or preaches. Hear what one, able to discern, writes of his every day, domestic habits:

"My first visit to the venerable patriot was on a pleasant morning in August, in company with a spirited Teacher's Convention; numbering about one hundred gentlemen and ladies, from various States, who went in a body to pay their respects to Mr. A. He gave us a simple, hearty welcome to his mansion, the same plain, ancient, two-story house, which was occupied by his distinguished father.

The feeble old man, in plain dress, meets us at the door, shakes hands with all, invited us into his spacious, but now crowded parlor, kindly says he is glad to see us, wishes he had seats for all of us to sit down—'is very happy to see so many gentlemen, and especially happy to see so many ladies, who are engaged in the good work of instructing the children of the country.' And he playfully added, with a smile, 'gentlemen, I have always found it pleasant to have the good opinion of the men, but still more gratifying to have the good opinion of the women.'

After a few moments spent in conversation, singing, looking at the busts and portraits of Washington, and other worthies, adorning the entry and parlors, we partook of a refreshing draught of cold water—the simple beverage which has given him strength for so many years—and commending him, in our hearts, to God, we took our leave, thankful for the privilege we had enjoyed.

I spent the succeeding Sabbath at Quincy, and observed that this fervent octogenarian, with a small and feeble frame, walked twice to meeting. His house stands about a Sabbath day's journey from the synagogue. He walked without a cane, looked out all the hymns, without glasses, and stood during all the singing, and during all the prayers. So constant is he that his neighbors remark, 'If the President is not at meeting, when in town, we know he must be sick.'

Second Visit.—Mr. Adams keeps (apparently) no servants. He delights not to be ministered unto, but to minister. Call at his house, and you find he is himself as one that serves. Ring or knock, and he comes himself to the door, extends his hand, and without the palaver, conducts you to a chair, in the sitting room or parlor, and treats the humblest caller as an equal."

He is, himself as one that serves! And is not this true independence? He delights not to be ministered unto, but to minister! And is not this pure christianity? He treats the humblest celler as an equal! And does not this prove him to be a true man? These "little traits"—should they not be called great—show at once the secret of his success, and the source of his influence. The man who does whatever may be requested of him when it should be done, will never fail to make his mark upon society.—Examiner.

Dr. King's Visit to the Pope.

The following is an extract from a recent letter received at the Missionary Rooms, from Dr. King, to which we alluded in a late notice of his presentation to Pius IX.

"I have just been presented to the much celebrated Pope Pius IX., who is a very dignified and interesting man; I neither kissed his toe nor his hand, nor did he kiss mine; but he bowed to me very politely, and I to him. Several who were presented at the same time with me, being Roman Catholics, knelt down very devoutly, and kissed the cross on his foot. He has much benignity marked in his countenance, and I should judge from his appearance that he has a good degree of decision and firmness. He was born on the 12th of May, 1792, and is, of course, about two months older than myself.

He is certainly a very remarkable man; but I think we must wait a little longer, before we give a decided opinion with regard to his object in certain measures he is adopting.

I have also had an interview twice to-day with a priest who is an intimate friend of the Pope, goes hand with him in his plans of reform, and is one of the most influencial men in Rome. His name is Ventura. I had a letter of introduction to him, thro' some of my Paris friends. This morning I had a long conversation with him on various subjects which interest the heart of every Christian; and among others, that of religious toleration. He said to me, what I afterwards told him was worthy to be written in letters of gold, that "the only evangelical means of propagating Christianity, is the preaching of the word of the gospel," (L'unico mezzo evangelico da propagara il Christianismo e la predicazione o la parola del Vangelo,) that is, as I understood him, the gospel either preached or read.

Padre Ventura says the Pope is not afraid, is decided, and will go on with what he has begun. Padre Ventura is also of the same age with myself. He appears to be a very intelligent man, and I am told here that he is a very powerful speaker.

When I left him, he embraced me in the most friendly and affectionate manner. The second time I called, he gave me some very beautiful medals, one af which had the figure of St. Peter on the one side, and of St. Paul on the other, another of the Virgin Mary, &c., all of which had been formally blessed by the Pope.

Another very interesting personage I have seen to-day is the Cardinal Mezzofanti, who speaks fifty different languages. I was introduced to him by Padre Ventura, and conversed with him in five or six different languages, but principally in Arabic, which he speaks very fluently. On my expressing a desire to have his autograph, he retired and wrote the following lines in English:

"Great many tongues resound among mankind,
Their number overwhelms the power of mind;
Here under English lines I write my name,
I like that noble language, dear to fame.
I. MEZZOFANTI."

Tobacco.

Samuel Hick was visiting a poor aged widow. After encouraging and praying with her, he put sixpence into her hand,—the sum total, it is believed, he had upon his person at the time.—She appeared overpowered with gratitude, and he was deeply affected with the manner in which it was expressed. It suddenly occurred to him, and he internally accosted himself—"Bless me, can sixpence make a poor creature happy?—How many sixpences have I spent on this mouth of mine in feeding it with Tobacco! I will never take another pipe whilst I live—I will give to the poor whatever I save from it." From that hour he demed himself. It was not long, however, before he was seriously indisposed. His medical attendant, being either inclined to try the strength of his resolution, or supposing he had sustained some injury by suddenly breaking off the use of the pipe, and would therefore derive advantage from its re-adoption, addressed him thus:

Phys.—"You must resume the use of the pipe, Mr. Hick."

Sam.—"Never more, sir, while I live."

Phys.—"It is essential to your restoration to health, I cannot be answerable for consequences, should you reject the advice given."

Sam.—"Let come what will, I'll never take another pipe: I've told God so, & I'll abide by it."

Phys.—"You will in all probability die, then."

Sam.—"Glory to God for that, I shall go to heaven; I have made a vow and I'll keep it."

His medical adviser found him unflinching in the face of danger and of death; and as he recovered from his illness, he more readily attributed the prolongation of life to the honor which God had conferred upon him for his self-denial, than to the most efficacious medicine that could have been administered.—Star in the West.

The Colored Race in the west Indies.

The Chief Justice of Dominica, Glanville, is a mulatto; Sharp, the Attorney General of Bardadoes is a mulatto; Garroway, Judge of the Court of Appeals in Barbadoes, is a mulatto; the Governor of Nevis is a mulatto; thirty-two editors of Newspapers in the British West India colonies are negroes and mulattoes; twenty-one magistrates are mulattoes; in all the legislative councils and Houses of Representatives, there are no less than seventy-two mulattoes and two negroes making laws for their former masters—the whites. Two-thirds of the army or garrison in those colonies is already composed of African soldiers, commanded by white officers. The church is also adundantly supplied with black and mulatto clergymen; the jurymen are almost composed of negroes and mulattoes.—Dr. Costa's Facts for the People.

MUSKINGUM DISTRICT.

Woodsfield Ct., Feb. 3, '48.

Br. Bassett: Through your excellent Recorder I wish to inform our worthy President, and friends in general, how we are getting along on this (Woodsfield) ct. I commenced my labors on the ct. the second Sabbath after the rise of Conference. I found many kind friends with whom I labored three years since. But alas! some are gone home to heaven. They are present no more in our assemblies to cheer us. A few restless souls have left;—O may they be saved, is my prayer. Some one or two more are on the fence and have been there I fear till they have lost all the religion they had. God save us from their reward. Thank heaven's King we have some prosperity. Our first quarterly meeting was held at Jackson's school-house: Brother Remsburg was with us, preached twice. God bless him wherever he goes. No conversions—four joined. On Christmas day we commenced a meeting in Lewisville. But little done—hope some good will result from it yet. Next came on our New Year's meeting. This was held at the Jackson school-house, it being the time of my regular appointment there; this meeting continued ten days—seven or eight conversions—nine joined the church. Our second quarterly meeting commenced on the 23d of January and continued till the 29th; this was at the Nob meeting house. Here we had a hard battle with the powers of darkness, but the victory turned on Israel's side. "Thanks be to God who giveth us the victory." Some nineteen or twenty were soundly converted. The aged, middle aged, and the youth were seen to bow the knee to the Prince of Peace. An old lady, seventy-three years old, was made to rejoice in a sin-pardoning God, for the first time in all her life. Truly she came in at the eleventh hour. O may she receive a crown. There were fifteen joined the Church.

We have received in all 28 since Conference God grant that they may prove themselves worthy of a crown of life, is the prayer of their servant. Amen. NAT'L. LINDER, Superintendent.

[Two or three unfortunate errors, having been pointed out to us by Br. Catlin, in his letter as published in our paper two weeks ago, we think best here to insert it again, taking care to follow the sense of the original. Ed.]

Georgetown Ct., Jan. 27, 1848.

Br. Bassett: I would say through your valuable paper, to our worthy President, Brother Clancy, and the friends of religion, that we are still trying to live though we are surrounded with many things to discourage us. We have held our first quarterly meeting and two protracted meetings. At our quarterly meeting, the church was much revived. The second meeting was held at Harrisville. There we were compelled to close on Monday night for want of help, just when we think that good might have been done. Not many of our brethren were there from any other part of the circuit. Had not the world a hold upon our friends, how much better would a general turn out make our meetings. A general interest is beginning to appear. The membership is beginning to act their part. Our congregations have increased three fold. We are looking for a revival. May God send it. Our second quarterly meeting will be held at Georgetown, commencing on the 19th of February next. We invite Brothers S. W. Laishley, S. Lancaster, and all others of our brethren that can come. Come brethren and help us. We need help from heaven and earth. S. CATLIN.

Mt. Vernon, Feb. 7th, 1848.

Br. Clancy: As a superintendent under your jurisdiction it becomes my duty to report to you the state of my charge. (Licking Circuit.) I reached my appointment the first Sabbath after the rise of Conference, and preached in this place, and continued my labors with but little success; untill the close of the year 1847, when I commenced a protracted meeting in this place, which continued four weeks. The result was that the Chuch was much revived, and many experienced the pardoning love of God, to the number perhaps of thirty five. Twenty gave their names to the Church. Our congregations are large, and attentive. The Church in this place is looking forward with anticipation of better days. Our second quarterly meeting commenced on Saturday, 22 inst., at the Ebenezer appointment and is still in progress. Up to this time there has been a good work at this meeting, some ten or twelve have experienced the pardoning mercy of God, and others are seeking for the same blessing. O may the great Head of the Church still bless as with His presence.

Yours,
J. M. WINN.

Br. Bassett: We have delayed writing, hoping to have had something of special interest to communicate, but not any thing of the kind has yet occurred. We entered upon our labors the 1st Sabbath after the rise of our Conference, feeling as much dependent upon the all-sufficient arm of God's grace as we ever did, believing that the set time to favour Zion throughout our entire district was near at hand, and hoping that Miami circuit would participate in the gracious blessing. We have general peace, and during our first qr. and some two protracted meetings since, the Lord visited us in great mercy and the church was much revived. We are still in the use of the means looking for more prosperous days. Pray for us that our faith fail not.

DAVID MOORE.

Green Co., O., Feb. 5, 1848.

Dear Br. Bassett: I have concluded that it is time for me to give some account of myself, as Conference Missionary, to the brethren in the Ohio District: you will please to publish the following. I was prevented from regular labor for several weeks after Conference, by having to move. I then attended the first quarterly meeting with Brother White in Xenia, and also the first quarterly meeting in Lebanon. At this, I took cold, and was under the necessity of taking medicine several weeks, during which time, I received a pressing letter from Brother Rose to come and assist him in holding protracted meetings at three places on Springfield circuit; the Saturday and Sabbath before Christmas, at Clifton; on Christmas, at Pleasant Hill, seven days; here souls were converted and the members powerfully revived; coldness between some of the brethren, gave way to the fire of divine love, and some nine or ten added to the church.—Praise ye the Lord. On New-Years'-eve we went according to appointment, to Harmony—held a watch-night—had a blessed season—continued until Monday night. The good Lord blessed his children here. I then returned home and attended the two last days of the Bellbrook meeting, an account of which glorious revival, you have already published. Having promised Brother Warrington to assist at a protracted meeting on the Lebanon Mission, to be holden at Morrowtown, on the Little Miami Railroad, eight miles from Lebanon. I went on the 21st January to Lebanon according to agreement, to meet Brother W., but he and Brother Evans were both engaged in a protracted meeting at Middletown: Brother Evans came home that night and informed me next morning that it was thought best for Brother Warrington to continue the meeting at Middletown, and for me to go to Morrowtown alone: I did so, and commenced on Saturday, two o'clock: the Lord blessed the word—at night the house was crowded. The Lord did help me again. Arrows of conviction flew, and many saw their condition. On Sabboth the house could not contain the people,—the weather being pleasant, those outside listened at the door. The Lord was in his word in power. A local preacher of M. E. C. preached for me at 3 p. m., and again at night. I followed him with exhortation, and five came forward to the altar of prayer. I continued to labor in our morning meetings and every night without any more ministerial help, except an exhortation or two from a New Light Brother, until Wednesday morning, at which time I organised a class of eight members, all from the world except Brother Brown and wife, who had been members of our church in Indiana. I was now so hoarse that I could not preach. I therefore set off for Lebanon to get help, and when I got there, neither of the brethren had got back from Middletown. They were sent for the next day, and Brother Warrington and I went back to commence again, and continued until Thursday, and five more were added, and two or three professed to have received pardoning grace. All glory be given to God, that it has pleased him to bless me with strength of body and mind to labor thus in the seventieth year of my age. O! brethren, do help me to praise the Lord.

Brother Young, our President, and Warrington are still protracting the meeting, and will, I believe, enlist more soldiers for Jesus. May the good Lord be with them, in the power of his converting grace.

I would here state that I had written to Brother Fowler, that I would be in his circuit on the 29th of January, but the brethren in Lebanon would not hear to my leaving Morrow. I hope Brother F. will excuse me.

Yours, as ever, in the sweet bonds of the gospel of Jesus.
A. M'GUIRE.

N. B.—I will write soon to Brother Fowler, or if he will let me know when his quarterly meeting is, I will try to be with him.

Wabash District.

Cicero Ct., Jan. 31, '48.

Br. Bassett: The Lord is beginning to revive his work at several appointments on this circuit. Last year owing to the ill health of Brother Patee this circuit was without regular preaching most of the year, and as might be expected, the ch. in some places suffered very much, but a few were faithful and continued to pray and hope for better times, and their prayers are beginning to be answered.

I commenced my regular labors on the circuit at our first quarterly meeting, where we had the very acceptable and useful labors of our beloved President, Brother J. Shipp, and Brother John Alter. At this meeting the society which (owing to difficulties not proper to mention) was in a very languid state—was greatly revived—the Lord poured out of his Spirit abundantly. The brethren and sisters were constrained to shout aloud the praises of God, and as the fruit of this meeting, five have been added to the society in that neighborhood. On New Year's day we commenced a meeting three miles north of Boxley Town, at which we were left destitute of ministerial assistance. But the Lord was with us, and though the meeting held only two days, yet the little church was greatly revived, and nine have since been added to them, with a fair prospect of more.

I have just returned from a two days' meeting on Indian Prairie, where I had the labors of our excellent Brother H. Beal, and Brother J. Rice, a worthy local preacher of Logansport circuit. Here we have formed a little society of good materials. Our meeting was a very good one but no accessions.

Since I commenced my labors on the circuit, 26 have been added to the membership of the ct. Our second quarterly meeting will be held at Morris' school house, 3 miles below Andersontown, on White River, embracing the first Saturday and Sabbath in March. We invite all the brethren without distinction to come over and help us. Brethren pray for us.

Yours, in Christ,
S. W. WIDNEY.

NORTH ILLINOIS DISRICT.

Princeton, Ill., Jan. 20, '48.

Dear Br. Bassett: Inclosed I send you the name of one new subscriber with the cash. The Lord is graciously reviving his work in almost all of the charges in this (North Illinois) District. We have never been so greatly blessed and prospered since the organization of our Conference as at present. To God be all the Glory.

I forbear giving particulars, hoping that the superintendents of the different cts. and missions, will send you a full account of the work of God amongst them. This they should not fail to do.

Yours, in the gospel of Christ,
P. J. STRONG.

Burlington, Des Moines Co., Iowa, Jan. 31, '48.

Dear Br. Bassett: I wish to inform you that we are prospering on this circuit. Since I have come to this circuit, I have taken in nine members, the best of materials, and quite a good state of feeling generally on the circuit. And one thing more in this, Des Moines county—Temperance principles are flourishing to quite an extent.

Yours, in gospel bonds,

Weeping Willows in England.

Our readers will remember the pathetic language of the 37th Psalm, "By the rivers of Babylon, there we sat down; yea, we wept when we remembered Zion. We hanged our harps upon the willows in the midst thereof." By "the rivers of Babylon" are meant the streams of the Euphrates: and a Turkey merchant named Vernon, then resident at Aleppo, transplanted the weeping willow from the banks of the Euphrates, brought with him to England, and planted it at his seat in Twickenham Park. This was the origin of all the weeping willows in our gardens and pleasure grounds. How pleasing is the reflection, that such an incidental circumstance should furnish us with collateral proof of the unimpeachable veracity of Holy Writ. And ought we not to regard every weeping willow that comes under our observation as an illustration of the authenticity, as well as of the accuracy of the song of the captive Israelites, as handed down to us in the Holy Bible?

Drowned.—At Cincinnati, on Sunday, a Mr. Sweeney, of Pitts. returning from a trip to New Orleans, fell or stepped overboard by accident and sunk before help could reach him.

Bible Cause.—If we remember correctly, it is now full thirteen months since there was held an aniversary or public meeting of the Muskingum County Bible Society. We respectfully enquire whether the interests of so important and noble a cause are going to be treated with neglect, in this large, populous and wealthy County of Muskingum. It is true that since the last anniversary, the President of the County Society Rev. Mr. Culberson has been called away by Death. But we respectfully enquire are there not those surviving who are authorised and competent to appoint a meeting, and wake up a public interest in this neglected object? We trust that our inquiry will be responded to. And that by another week we shall be authorised to announce that something is to be done. Furthermore, what has become of the Agent of the American Bible Society for this State, Rev. Mr. Strickland? Last winter he designed visiting our County but did not find it convenient to come. Has he forgotten the Muskingum Valley, or is he sufficiently employed elsewhere? Hope to hear from him soon.

Religious Services, &c.—On last Sabbath morning, we had the pleasure of hearing a sermon in the Presbyterian Church, by Rev. Mr. Bartlett, agent for the American Board Com. for Foreign Mission, after which, we are happy to learn he received within a few hours, contributions amounting to $180 in behalf of Foreign Missions. Br. Kingsbury, Pastor of the Presbyterian Chuch, assisted by Rev. Mr. Little of Granville, is holding evening services throughout this week. And we are glad to learn that much religious interest has been excited, and that the friends of piety, are looking with some confidence for a revival of religion. Furthermore, we understand that a gracious work has been for some time in progress in the Methodist Episcopal Church, Zanesville, and also in one of the Baptist Churches in that place. O that the work of the Lord may advance in all the churches.

☞ New Subscribers this week, 13. Discontinuances, 4. Since New Year's day, our list has taken a start. Keep it advancing, brethren, agents. We are very thankful to every one who helps the paper along. We are daily expecting to hear from other brethren, who will certainly try and do their part in this matter.

The resolutions provide that gold medals be devised and struck, and presented to each of the two commanding generals, in honor of their skill and services.

A motion to engross the bill was lost. Yeas,—23. Nays,—42.

Historical Lecture.—We had the pleasure of attending on Monday evening last the Lecture of Mr. Storer in the Lutheran Church, Zanesville, on the Journeyings of the Israelites through the Wilderness to the Land of Promise. He exhibited by the Magic Lantern, forty-three paintings, representing scenes and views of various localities spoken of by sacred writers, in Egypt, Idumea, Palestine, &c. Many of the views were very interesting, especially in connection with the description given by the Lecturer. We were particularly struck with a view of the Ruins of Thebes, and two views of the City of Petra, the Lecturer repeating the predictions of the sacred prophets which have been so strictly and signally fulfilled. The Views and Lectures of Mr. Storer are instructive as well as interesting, and as he gives evidence of being a gentleman and a christian, we trust that wherever he may exhibit, he may find favor with community and receive a liberal patronage.

Missouri Conference.

The last number of the 'Methodist Protestant' gives the proceedings of the Fourth Annual Conference of the Missouri District, Methodist Protestant Church. The session was held at Pilot Grove, Cooper county, Missouri, October 4th, 1847. The names of fifteen ministers are given as connected with the Conference. The number of members is not given, but there is said to have been an increase of 155 members in some six circuits and missions named. The name of the President is John Curlton. There are seven circuits and two missions embraced in the District. Next Conference to be held at Pisgah Camp Ground, Green county, Mo. on Thursday, Sept. 21, 1848.

We should like to know whether or not our respected cotemporary, (and who is the 'official') acknowledges the valid existence of the Mo. Con. We were aware that preparatory steps were taken about four years ago for setting off from the Arkansas Conference, a Missouri Conference.—And we were in expectation that the new Conference if organized would report itself by representative, or at least by letter, to the ensuing General Conference of 1846, agreeably to rule of Discipline, page 69. "Every Annual Conference which shall organize during the interval of the General Confereuce, shall report in writing the facts of such organization, and the proofs and evidences thereof, to the succeeding Gener. Conference." Not a word was communicated to that body, and no information whatever could be obtained from the proposed Missouri Conference, by those who diligently sought to procure full statistics of the church. The General Conference therefore did not recognize such a Conference as Missouri Conference, but placed a provision in the Discipline that the Illinois District should embrace "all that part of Missouri not included in the Arkansas District." What is still further a little strange, we see by the published Minutes that a petition was presented from a commitee of the Methodist Protestant Church in St. Louis, which has heretofore been recognized and supplied by the Illinois Conference, asking to be taken under the care of the Missouri Conference, which was done, and a minister accordingly appointed thereto. Mark—this was not a proposition from the adjoining Conference, or the President thereof, but the application of an individual church itself, without regard it would seem, (unless we lack further information) to the process required by rule of Discipline.—Now we shall be gratified to learn of the existence of a prosperous Conference of our connection in Mo. But we are not satisfied that due regard has been had to the rule of Discipline, thus far, in the organization and proceedings of the Conference said to have been organized in that State. If we can learn that all has been made right, we will gladly concur, and make the same known to our readers.

☞ What has become of the Pittsburgh 'Western Weekly?' Our exchange was requested, by sending us the first two numbers, since which we have seen no further numbers, though we noticed the publication favorably, and have regularly sent our paper. If the "Weekly" has so soon come to nought, we can only regret it. If it is still published, we are treated with a courtesy (?) rarely known to the brotherhood of the press. We trust however, we shall soon find all right again.

National Era.—This publication was commenced with the year 1847, under the patronage and on the responsibility of a committee of the American and Foreign Anti-Slavery Society, who employed Dr. Bailey as its Editor, having the pledged support of certain liberal ones of the anti-slavery men. We are gratified to see it announced in the last number of the Era that already the enterprise has been so successful that Dr. Bailey becomes proprietor of the establishment and assumes the responsibilities of the publication; the funds heretofore pledged by its friends, to be appropriated to other kindred objects. The gifted Whittier still continues his services as Corresponding Editor. The National Era, as an anti-slavery press at the seat of government, is doing immense good, and we wish it continued success.

Van Court's Counterfeit Detector.—We have received the February number of this publication. It is issued monthly, in pamphlet form, with a convenient marginal index of the States. Engravings of the various coins, with the value of each, are appended, which is quite an improvement. The price of the Detector is only $1 per year in advance. Seven copies for $5. Address, J. Van Court, Quarry St. Philadelphia. For the information of those who have on hand notes of banks recently broken, we here insert the following from the February number.

Recent Bank Failures.—There has recently been a good deal of anxiety respecting the condition and safety of many of the country banks, especially the New York State Banks. But the actual failures, so far, consist of the following, with about their present rates of discount.

Thanksgiving in Pennsylvania.—The Editor of the Episcopal Recorder thinks that the present Governor of Pennsylvania is the first that has had the boldness and christian magnanimity to appoint a day of Thanksgiving to Almighty God. He adds:

The House of Representatives in the present State Legislature is the first that has ever adopted the regulation of having prayers offered to the Almighty every morning before they enter upon the responsible duties of their vocation. We regard these as omens for good, and cannot doubt that the public recognition of God by our Legislators will tend to soften the asperities of party, and remind them of a tribunal to which they are all amenable.

"Unity of Methodism."—The leading editorial in the Pittsburgh Christian Advocate of the 9th inst. is a somewhat lengthy article on the above topic, designed chiefly to promote "amity" and good understanding between the Methodist Episcopal and Methodist Protestant Churches. We have heretofore repeatedly had reference to the liberal views and positions of our excellent Br. Hunter of the Pittsburgh Christian Advocate. And with great pleasure we give place below to the chief part of his last article alluded to above, hoping that our Methodist Episcopal and Methodist Protestant friends will not fail to read it. We rejoice that our brother of the Advocate finds it in his heart to advance such noble sentiments, & that so far as we learn, they find favor with his brethren in church fellowship; and we are sure that the same will be cordially responded to by every true hearted Methodist Protestant. Let us have the 'gospel unity' spoken of by Br. Hunter. Here follows the article from the Pittsburgh C. Advocate, with the omission of one or two paragraphs.

It is objected that our former remarks, by implication, deny the 'validity of orders' in the Methodist Protestant Church; and, consequently, unchurch the whole ministry and membership, after the fashion in which churchmen leave all the "sects" to the "uncovenanted mercies of God." This we take to be the substance of the objections urged in the article signed "Agape," in the Methodist Protestant of January 15th, and also in others. We can scarcely think that our language, fairly interpreted, warrants such an inference. Particular expressions, perhaps, isolated from their connections and qualifications, might mislead to the conclusion that we denied or doubted the validity of Methodist Protestant orders; but it does not seem to us a legitimate consequence of the whole article. Touching this point, however, we think it ought to be regarded as sufficient that we disavow plainly and unequivocally any such sentiment. We never thought of it for a mement; and it never occurred to us while writing the article. Furthermore; in what we have said on this subject, we are to be regarded as speaking for ourselves merely, and not for the Church to which we have the honor to belong; though we have no evidence that what we have said meets with disapprobation: but we think we would not be going too far to say now, that we have no knowledge of any doubt in the Methodist Episcopal Church touching the validity of Methodist Protestant ordination. The genuineness of Methodist Protestant orders is freely conceded, both in our theory of Church government (bad as some of our Methodist Protestant brethren think it) and in our practice. We commune with Methodist Protestant ministers and people without hesitation, and they with us; and we do not re-ordain ministers who come from the Methodist Protestant Church to us. All this we think is sufficiently explicit, and needs no Church action to make it more so. The question of 'unity' (or if the word is liked better, 'amity') is, as we conceive, a distinct point, with which the validity of orders does not 'necessarily' connect itself; and in this case 'orders' are happily not involved. We speak as a Protestant to Protestants—as a Methodist to Methodists. We have nothing to do, at present, with Roman Catholic or High Church notions of 'orders' and Church organization. These out of the question, we think it will not be difficult for any one to conceive that 'unity' may be broken—that 'amity' may be lost between two distinct Church organizations, without the loss of valid orders on either part. So, at least, it seems to us; and if we are in error, we will strive to lie open to conviction. For instance, assuming the validity of orders in the Brinsh Wesleyan body, in the Methodist Episcopal Church, and in the Canadian Wesleyan Church, is it not possible that something may occur to interrupt their harmony and brotherly intercourse with each other? Here is a breach of the unity of the spirit and of the bond of peace. But it is not to be presumed that either one would deny the validity of the orders of the other. Such a case of disunity has indeed occurred. The English body and the Canadian body had an interruption of Methodistic fellowship for several years—their relations to each other were not amicable—they existed rather as rivals than as co-workers. Happily the breach is now healed, and they again proclaim their unity before the world. But during the continuance of the schism, did either doubt the genuineness of the other's orders? We never heard of it. The question of the validity of orders, and the question of unity, we regard as wholly distinct; and with this view of the subject we wrote the former articles, which seem to have startled our Methodist Protestant brethren, in whose minds the same distinction was not made.

Unity, such as we advocate among the Methodist ecclesiastical bodies, comprehends not merely 'oneness' of doctrine, and oneness in the family features and spirit of Methodism, but also 'acknowledged brotherhood and friendly co-operation' in performing the great mission of Methodism. This acknowledgement of brotherhood, or fraternal recognition, may be made in various ways. Some of these have been adverted to by various writers, such as the mutual courtesies exercised by members, ministers, societies and conferences towards brethren of the other Church. These acts, it is said, are 'Church acts,' and, therefore, indicate the unity of those who perform them towards one another. We are ready to admit that they do indicate fraternal feeling: and we value them highly on that account. But, still, it seems to us that they are not the highest kind of Church action which the subject admits of, and demands. We want the unity to be mutually recognized by the 'highest authorities' in the respective Churches—the General Conferences. This, and only this, in our estimation, is an adequate outward expression of the existence of unity of spirit. Unity of spirit may possibly exist without it: but it wants the external sign and seal of the internal grace. It should not only exist, but it should be 'visible'—known and read of all men—and to be so, it must be declared in the most unequivocal manner, and by the highest authorities in the Church. "Lose no opportunity," said Mr. Wesley, "in declaring that the Methodists are one people throughout the world."

We were a little surprised at first that we should be so much misunderstood by some Methodist Protestants; but being misunderstood, we were not surprised that a little sensitiveness was manifested, on account of the position in which, it was suppposed, we had placed the Methodist Protestant Church. It was natural that brethren should feel sinsibly language which they understood as a denial of their orders. And on this account we are prepared to excuse the employment by some of them of language rather calculated to open anew the old sores than to heal them. If it is indispensable to the reconciliation of the two bodies, and to the formal declaration of unity, that confessions and humiliations are to be made by either, as intimated by one writer, then we are persuaded the matter is at an end. It can never be done. If it is necessary for the Methodist Protestant Church to confess that she was wholly in the wrong in the old controversy, and in forming a distinct ecclesiastical organization, every Methodist Protestant will admit that there is no hope of an acknowledged unity. On the other hand, if it is demanded of the Methodist Episcopal Church to confess that she 'persecuted' the Methodist Protestants out of her pale,—in other words, expelled them for "opinion sake,"—there is also an end of the matter. This will never be done. If the parties, however, are sufficiently pacific in their feelings towards each other, and sufficiently impressed with the importance of fulfilling the almost dying injunction of Mr. Wesley, and above all, the dying command & prayer of the Saviour, to be one, and to 'declare' it before the world, and are willing to "let by-gones be by-gones," then have we some encouragement to plead with both parties for both a real and a formal unity—the unity of the heart—of the spirit—and the outward manifestation of it in the accustomed mode wherein distinct Methodist bodies declare their unity to the world. Nothing short of this external sign can give completeness to the unity. Till this is done, whatever else may precede, there is something wanting. That there may be unity of spirit without the customary external sign may be possible, as there may be regeneration without baptism. But as Christ has appointed baptism to be the outward sign and seal of the inward grace, so has he appointed the outward visible fellowship of the Church to be the sign of the grace of unity.

Unity in our apprehension, may exist as perfectly in two or more distinct and independent Church organizations as where there is only one, provided these organization are substantially one in doctrines, spirit, &c., and take the proper means to set forth before the world their fellowship.—There may be "schism in the body" when there is only one organization, and there may be gospel unity when the organizations are plural. But we must insist on the importance of 'exhibiting' this unity by suitable means. This, it seems to us, has been too much overlooked by the Protestant Churches, to their reproach.—Many of them are sufficiently one in sentiment and spirit, and sufficiently fraternal in their feelings to have fellowship one with another, but they do not set it forth with sufficient explicitness. The exhibition, the declaration of fellowship is not so much with them Christian duty as Christian 'courtesy.' Perhaps the palpable perversion of the doctrine of unity by Rome, in making oneness of Church organization an essential feature of it, may have had a tendency to drive Protestant Churches to the opposite extreme, and not only to induce them to undervalue unity of organization, but also the unity of the spirit and the proper manifestation of it. We would be happy to see the unity and its manifestion which we advocate extended wider than the Methodist family of Churches. We advocate it for all truly Protestant Christendom. But if it cannot obtain even among Methodist bodies, what hope for those who are farther apart? We trust the Methodist bodies will set a suitable example to others in this matter. And there is hope. It is well known that the Methodist New Connection and the old Methodist body in Great Britain have been recently, probably are still, negotiating the matter of their fellowship. The Canada and the British body are once more at one. There is a general movement towards each other—an approximation—with some exceptions, such as that of the Methodist Episcopal Church and the Methodist Episcopal Church South. But even here the prospects of unity are brigher than they were a few months ago. Hope on the part of its advocates begins to revive. "That they all may be one: as thou, Father, art in me and I in thee, that they all may be one in us: that the world may believe that thou has sent me."

We hope to be understood in all this matter as speaking simply our individual opinions, though we are not aware that they are disapproved by our readers.

Liberality.—The last number of the "Family Quarto," gives a statement by the Pastor of the Presbyterian Church of Zanesville, respecting the finances of said church. His salary is paid quarterly in advance, besides which the congregation, have contributed one thousand dollars the past year for other purposes in promotion of the interests of Christ's kingdom, at home and abroad. This is indeed creditable. And as it is written, 'The liberal soul shall be made fat;' and 'He that soweth bountifully shall reap also bountifully,' we doubt not that our neighbors over the way who are zealour to do good, will have treasure in heaven. How many churches fall short of sustaining their pastors, and do little or nothing for the cause of Missions, and other worthy objects! Would that they might be stirred up, by the example of the Presbyterian Church of Zanesville.

Sears' Magazine.—The February number possesses rather unusual interest. Its various topics are quite instructive and interesting. Of the embellishments, several views in Palestine are very good. Every body, send for Sears' Magazine, N. York. $2 per annum in advance.

Biographical.

Written for the Western Recorder.

MRS. MARY BONER.

Br. Bassett: It becomes our painful duty to record the death of our much esteemed Sister, Mary Boner the wife of James Boner, who was attacked with typhus fever some 3 weeks before her decease, which took which took place on the 2nd of January, ult. Through all her last affliction she manifested the patience and meekness of the christian, frequently giving indications to her surrounding friends and neighbors that all was well. She had been a professor of religion for some forty years. A large congregation attended her funeral and a suitable discourse was delivered by the Rev. George Reed. She has left a husband and ten children to mourn her loss, but their loss is her gain.

JER. JACK.

Bucyrus, O. Jan. 24, 1848.

Miss J. (clever and beautiful as she is,) tells a pleasant anecdote of a servant to the geologist of a country seminary, who, in describing to her master how she had stoned a cow out of the door-yard, said: "I saw her come in, and I threw a specimen at her, and she went right off."

"I urge you to the giving of your hand without yor heart? the selling of your beauty for fine gold? Never! If they ask it, do not do it, if they smile upon you, turn away! if they flatter, do not listen! if they threaten do not yield! Go down to the grave single, if heaven raises you up no friends, but go not to the altar with falsehood upon your lips." [Ellen Pickering.

News of the Week.

English and American Expenses of Government Contrasted.

For the following particulars in relation to the expenses of Great Britain and the United States, we are indebted to the statement of the London Dispatch, recently published. The subjoined table shows the amount per annum paid to those who govern:—

American.	per annum.
President,	£6,000
Vice President,	1,000
Secretary of State,	1,000
Secretary of Treasury,	1 000
Navy Depar ment,	3 400
Post Office Department,	600
Total,	£13,000
English.	per annum.
To the Queen and her relations,	£76 000
Three Secretaries of State and under Secretaries.	29,000
Lords Commissioners and Secretary's Treasury,	16 000
Admiralty Department,	13 000
Post Office Department,	10 200
Total,	£818 900
American expenses,	13 000
Difference,	£805 900

In the United States, with the exception of the President during his term of office, and a few military offices, all public officers must furnish their own dwellings, and their own tables, from their own salaries. The President is provided with a house and furniture, but must pay the expenses of his table out of his own funds.—English public functionaries are furnished lodgings, rent free, and tax free, and on retiring from office are entitled to a pension.

In the United States such as one person holding a plurality of offices is unknown. In England it is different. One man here may hold and receive the emoluments of half a dozen appointments. For instance, Lord John Russell, Prime minister, held the office of 1st Lord of the Treasury, Commissioner for the affairs of India, one of the Ecclesiastical commissioners, and Commissioner of the Royal Hospital, Chelsea.—Emoluments, of £15 000. Marquis of Landsdowne, Archbishop of Canterbury, Sir Charles Wood, Lord Campbell, and many others, who hold a plurality of offices of enormous salaries.

Attrocious Murder.—A most cool-blooded murder was perpetrated in St. Louis on the 25th inst. by a young man 22 or 23 years of age, named Baldwin. The name of the murdered man was Mathews, the brother-in-law of Baldwin.—They had arrived in St. Louis on the steamer Laclede from Arkansas, the residence of Mr. Mathews, where Baldwin had been on a visit.—Mathews was returning with Baldwin to see his father in-law, who lives near Jefferson City, Missouri.

Mathews had with him $500, which is probably the cause of Baldwin's atrocity. The murder was perpetrated in the suburbs of the city.—Walking together, they stepped aside into a stone quarry, and out of which Baldwin came up in the rear, and placing a pistol near the head of Mathews, fired. The unfortunate man immediately expired. B. secured the money, his watch and key, and started immediately for the residence of his father. Through the indefatigable exertions of spirited officers, he was arrested about twelve hours after he arrived home.

When arrested he confessed the crime, and gave his father directions to have his clothes sent to St. Louis. The old man, near seventy years of age, remarked to him: "You will not need them my son; you will go to St. Louis prison, and then to the gallows."

The parting scene between this young man and the family is said to have been heart-rending. The mother's love, superior to her judgment, seemed to believe her son innocent though he had confessed his guilt. It is said, that he had always sustained a moral reputation—not addicted either to drunkenness or profanity.—Greenville Jour.

A very Sudden Death.

Mr. Wm. Hayden was found dead in his bed, at his residence in Covington on Monday morning. It is thought he died in a fit of epilepsy, as he was found upon his face, and his features greatly distorted. He was a young man of respectability and of good habits, and his sudden death is deplored by a large circle of friends.—Cin. Com.

Another Dreadful Steamboat Disaster.

We regret to have to announce the total loss of the beautiful new Green River and Louisville packet, Major Barbour, accompanied with the loss of from five to eight lives. The Major Barbour started from this place on her second trip to Green River, on Wednesday afternoon last, with a full freight and a number of passengers, and on the morning following, (Thursday,) about 4 o'clock, when about three miles below Hawesville, she came in collision with the steamer Paul Jones. The shock was so severe, & the injury the Major Barbour sustained was so great, that although she was immediately headed for the shore she sunk to the hurricane decks when she was a considerable distance from shore. From five to to eight persons are reported as drowned.—We were enabled to hear the name of only one—Mr. Allison, of Henderson, Ky., the second clerk. —Louisville Courier.

The growth of different sections of the United States is thus stated:

In. of the Eas. States	(in 10 years,)	16½	per ct.
" " United	"	"	33	" "
" " Western	"	"	74	" "
" " N. Western	"	"	108	" "

In the North-west, then, lies the great growth of the United States, as compared with European nations, and in the Valley of the Mississippi, nearly the whole of it.

S. B. Clerks.—Of twelve boats arriving at St. Louis last week, I observe three of their clerks are "gentlemanly," five "obliging," one "obliging and attentive," and three "attentive" simply. One of these last is incorrectly classified. It should be retentive, as I gave him six dollars to collect for me at St. Louis, more than four years since, and the money is as absolutely lost to me as if it were sunk in the Mississippi.—Cist's Adv.

Clericyl Wit.—As the Rev. Mr. Field, formerly of Westminister, Vt., went to give his vote at an election, a man of opposite politics expressed surprise at seeing him there, and to confirm his objection quoted the remark of the Saviour, that his "kingdom was not of this world." "Has no man a right to vote," replied the witty clergyman, "unless he belongs to the kingdom of Satan?" [Northampton Courier.

Variety.

The Scriptures as a Specimen of Literature.

BY E. C. COGSWELL.

In simplicity and purity of style, and in originality of sentiment, the Bible stands unrivaled. Its purity and eloquence are unsurpassed by any productions ancient or modern. Its material for the exercise of deep thought, for cultivating the taste, for invigorating the imagination, and for eliciting the best feelings of the soul, is rich and exhaustless. Its weighty doctrines, the hopes it enkindles, the fears it arrays, alike prove its divine original.

No human composition is so exquisite as always to please. Its stores of wisdom are quickly exhausted; the eye soon perceives the end of created perfection; but the beauties of the Bible are none the less lovely, though the charm of novelty may have passed away.

He who can read the inspired narration of Moses with diminished interest, can have no beauty in his own soul. Cold must be that heart which does not kindle at his eloquence, and melt at his pathos.

Moses's account of the Creation is unique. It is abrupt, simple, sublime. The volume of destiny is suddenly thrown open; time is proclaimed; creation arises; and a new race of intelligences appear on the scene. The Almighty voice is addressed to Chaos. "Confusion hears it, and wild uproar stands ruled." The waters subside; the verdant landscape is seen; songs burst from every grove, and start, bright rolling, silent beaming, are hurled forth from the Almighty's hand.

The story of Jacob's darling boy, dressed out in his coat of many colors, sold into Egypt by jealous brothers, rising to be second in power in that mighty nation, saving by his foresight a famishing world, especially the chosen people of God, and dying the most beloved of princes far surpasses the sublimest conceptions of poets or novelists.

The style of Moses as a Historian, is the best model, both in the vigorous and the sublime, the pleasing and the tender. His history is clothed with the grace of eloquence, the charms of poetry, and the fasinations of fiction.

Poetry is the breathing out of that principle which is deepest and sublimest in human nature; the expression of that aspiration for something more powerful and more thrilling than ordinary life affords.

The Bible is replete with poetry. The Hebrew poets rouse, warm, and transport the mind in strains the sweetest and boldest that bard ever sung; in numbers, the loftiest that imagination ever dictated. No poetry extant equals that which comes to us from the rapt pariach of Idumea, and the inspired prophets of Salem; from the schools of Bethel and Jericho. The Bible is the prototype; the unrivaled model and inspirer of all that is elevated in poetry. It has been a fountain from which later poets have drawn their richest thoughts, their boldest figures, their grandest imagery.

The Psalms of David are an elegant specimen of poetic literature. The character of their diction and expression is vivid, the thoughts animated, passionate. They communicate truths which philosophy could never investigate, in a style which uninspired poetry can never equal. The Hebrew literature itself contains nothing more lovely.

Among the prophetic writers, Isaiah stands unrivaled. His language possesses surprising beauties. His triumphal song upon the fall of the Babylonish monarch is replete with imagery, diversified and sublime. The conception is bold, the characters are introduced with wonderful art. Nothing is wanting to defend its claims to perfect beauty. In every excellence of composition, it is unequaled by any specimen of Greek or Roman poetry.

The strains of Ezekiel break forth like the gushing of a mighty fountain. He is deep, vehement, tragical. He rouses every energy of the soul; overwhelms the mind by his bold figures, abrupt transitions, fervid expressions. But he who astonishes us by his graphic images, possesses, at the same time, the loveliness of the sweetest poet. For invigorating the imagination, for giving energy of thought and boldness of expression, the writings of Ezekiel are unequaled.

The Bible has stood the test of ages. No closeness of inspection, keenness of investigation, or strictures of criticism, have been able to defeat its claims to the highest excellence of language. Here the man of taste may find every variety of material to discipline the mind, enrich the imagination, and polish the taste.

Of the men that have shed a lustre over ages and nations, the purest and the noblest are those who have been most deeply imbued with the literature of the Bible. The divines of the seventeenth century, those gigantic pillars of English literature, have been celebrated for their love of the excellence of scripture composition. At this fountain the most distinguished poets and orators have drank deepest. What but the literature of the Bible has rendered immortal the writings of Milton and Young? or those of Chatham and Burke, the models of modern eloquence? What else has given interest and power to the writings of Jones, Butler, Hall and Edwards, the admiration of every scholar? It is the literature of the Bible which has sent out a redeeming influence through our whole literary system—an influence which pervades and strenghens the public mind. There is a spirit in the literature of the Bible, before which the lurid fires of impure passion, kindled at the shrine of heathen literature, go out. The whole atmosphere of the Bible is pure and salutary; its clime a region of strong thought; the place for giant minds to thrive in. It is an exhaustless treasury of truths—

> "Truths that have power to make
> Our noisy years seem moments in the being
> Of eternal silence; truths that wake
> To perish never."

Let the Bible be studied in its original, as we study the Iliad of Homer, or the history of Livy, and giants in intellect will rise up, to surpass the loftiest geniuses of past ages. Let the student study the incomparable histories of Moses and Luke, and the sententious writings of Solomon —men of wonderful grasp of mind, of strong massive style, of deep reflection—also the writings of Paul, another name for the perfection of condensed eloquence—the unrivaled poetry of David, Isaiah, Ezekiel, Habakkuk; and he will find such a discipline adapted to indurate his mental constitution; to give it muscle and energy; to gird the intellect with power; and to aid him in concentrating its energies so as to bring vast regions at once to the mind; to comprehend almost the infinite in the finite, as the "cope of heaven is imaged in the dew-drop."

Such is the literature of Scriptures. Written by its numerous authors, during the space of fifteen hundred years in the sands of Arabia, in the deserts of Judea, in the rustic schools of the prophets, in the sumptuous palaces of Babylon, in the bosom of pantheism and its sad philosophy, the Bible comes to us the oldest offspring of sanctified intellect, the highest effort of genius, the effusions of truth and nature, the overflowings of genuine feeling, the utterance of undisguised sentiments. It is essential truth, the thoughts of heaven. This volume was conceived in the councils of eternal mercy. It contains the wondrous story of redeeming love. It blazes with the lustre of Jehovah's glory. It is calculated to soften the heart; to sanctify the affections; to elevate the soul. It is adapted to pour the balm of heaven into the wounded heart; to cheer the dying hour; and to shed the light of immortality upon the darkness of the tomb. The force of its truth compelled the highly-gified but infidel Byron to testify that,

> "Within this awful volume lies
> The mystery of mysteries.
> O! happiest they of human race,
> To whom our God has given grace
> To hear, to read, to fear, to pray,
> To lift the latch, and force the way;
> But better had they ne'er been born,
> Who read to doubt or read to scorn."

The English Duke.

A correspondent of the New York Commercial Advertiser thus describes "Chatsworth," the residence of the Duke of Devonshire:

This, I believe, is acknowledged to be the most splendid mansion in England. It is in the Grecian style, of Portland stone: it fronts about 760 feet; and the windows are of plate glass, equal in size to many in Broadway, and most of the frame work is richly gilded. The private entrance, which was built a short time before the visit of the present queen, is an elegant arch of stone, with iron gates covered with gilding. On ringing a bell a servant in livery made his appearance, and conducted us across an open quadrangular court into a spacious hall, paved with Italian marble, the wall being of the same rich material. Soon the housekeeper made her appearance, a very lady-like person, and by her we were conducted over this immense residence.

The flight of steps which we ascended in proceeding from the hall to the grand staircase, passes between walls of variegated alabaster, and being ornamented with balustrades, has made a magnificent effect.—From the entrance hall we passed through the picture gallery, the door of which is highly polished oak, inlaid in the most beautiful manner. One thousand paintings of the best masters enrich the gallery. I shall not attempt a description, for were I able to write one, it would swell this letter to a greater length than your columns will allow.

The chapel is in keeping with the building. The panel work is of cedar, & as we entered gave a most delightful fragrance. The whole is richly ornamented. The ceiling, and every part not otherwise decorated, are embellished by the pencils of Verrio and Laguerre. The ornaments in wood are said to be the work of Gibbons; the rich altar was sculptured by Cibber.

The next room looked at was the 'Velvet Chamber,' appropriated to Queen Victoria when she visited Chatsworth in 1843. The walls are covered with crimson velvet, bordered with gold; the ceiling is of stuccowork, covered with gilding;—the floor is of polished inlaid oak; the paintings are very good; the furniture of crimson and gold. In one corner is an elegant rosewood piano, obtained for her Majesty's use.

The next apartments were a suit of rooms, the rooms of which are covered with rich embossed leather, finely gilt. In these were the coronation chairs of several of the former kings of England, which came into possession of the Duke of Devonshire by his being the Lord Chancellor at the time of the coronation.

The library is only excelled by one other in the kingdom. The rooms appropriated to sculpture contain some of the finest pieces of statuary in the world the door cases and tables are of alabaster from the Peak of Derbyshire.

The rooms are so constructed that on any great occasion a suite of apartments can be thrown open to the length of six hundred feet. The park, jets of water, fountains, &c., are on the same scale with the building. The 'conservatery' is a glass structure, containing 78,000 square feet of glass, and is kept warm by pipes equal to the length of six miles; it is 330 feet long, 130 feet wide, and 65 feet high. The immense 'hot houses' is filled with all the tropical fruits which the wealth of the Duke has enabled him to obtain; and so anxious is he to excel all others, that no price, however high, prevents his obtaining what is made known to him as worthy of a place in this depot.

The Duke has been visited by the Emperor of Russia and by other distinguished men, and by them his house and grounds have been enriched with many valuable and costly presents.

I Will Give Nothing.

"There is that scattereth, and yet increaseth; and there is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty."—Prov. xi. 24.

A minister, soliciting aid toward his chapel, waited upon an individual distinguished for his wealth and benevolence. Approving the case, he presented to the minister a handsome donation, and, turning to his three sons, who had witnessed the transaction, he advised them to imitate his example. "My dear boys," said he, "you have heard the case; now what will you?" One said, "I will give all that pocket will furnish;" another observed, "I will give half that I have in my purse;" the third sternly remarked, "I will give nothing."

Some years after, the minister had occasion to visit the same place, and, recollecting the family he had called upon, he inquired into the actual position of the parties. He was informed that the generous father was dead; the youth who had given all his store was living in affluence; the son who had divided his pocket money was in comfortable circumstances; but the third, who had indignantly refused to assist, and haughtily declared he would give "nothing," was so reduced as to be supported by the two brothers.

The above anecdote is a striking illustration of the words of Solomon. Men of property should contribute largely; they should recollect that they are responsible to God for the use they make of their fortune, and that he will hereafter call for the account.—Lon. Chris. Witness..

"How do you feel with such a shocking looking coat on?" said a young clerk, of more pretention than brains, one morning. "I feel," says old Roger, looking at him steadily, with one eye half closed, as if taking aim at his victim—"I feel, young man, as if I had a coat on which has been paid for—a luxury of feeling which I think you will never experience."

An Interesting Theme.—There are three sorts of folks in the world—yes, four: Those who know one thing; those who know everything; those who know nothing; and those who glory in it.—The first are the hobby riders—the one idea men; the second are the quacks; the third are the unbelievers in the second; and the fourth are unalloyed fools—twenty-two carats fine.

Twelve Inconsistencies.

1. To hear a christian man say, he very much desires to know how matters are going on in the religious world, and yet he will not take a religious newspaper.

2. To see a christian man of a family, with a large plantation, and extensive stock; one of good trade or a lucrative profession, and not take a religious newspaper.

3. To see a christian man at every monkey show, or farcical exhibition of every wag who may advertise that he will make people laugh, for the cheap sum of one, two, or even four bits, & yet too poor to pay for a religious newspaper.

4. To see a christian man lay by money, in order to catch a good bargain which may chance to come in his way, and still too poor to pay for a religious newspaper.

5. To see a christian man dress his children in fine or superfine clothing, and still plead too poor to pay for a religious newspaper.

6. To see a christian man take a half a dozen, or even one newspaper, filled with all sorts of trash and falsehoods, and yet too poor to take a religious newspaper.

7. To see a christian man spend time enough in one week in gossipping, and things as bad or worse, if industriously employed to pay for, and yet he can't take a religious newspaper.

8. To see a christian man of wealth, read regularly a poor man's and what is worse, a minister's paper, and hear him say he is too poor to take a religious newspaper.

9. To see a christian's family, reading novels and miscellanies and attending parties at great (or even no) expense, and have no religious newspaper for them to read.

10. To see a christian man lay up money and property for his children, and plead too poor to pay for a religious newspaper.

11. To see a christian man exhibiting to his friends and visiters, his fine farm, stock, orchards —his new and splendid assortment of goods— his furnished office or shop, as the case may be, and have no religious newspaper to exhibit.

12. I cannot endure to hear a christian man boasting of his liberality to the church, and the institutions of the church, and not pay for a religious newspaper.

And finally for a "Baker's dozen"—I cannot, above every other inconsistency, endure to see a christian man take, and regularly receive, but never pay for a religious newspaper.

These things are so obviously inconsistent, that when I approach men, to try and convince them of the wrong, I feel that I almost offer an insult to their intelligence and christian fidelity. But I must never mind that. I must be faithful to my God and my brethren.—Cumberland Presbyterian.

Br. T. Bland, F. M. B. has had our paper nearly two years and a half, and paid for one year. If he settles up, we will discontinue as requested, at the middle of present volume. $3 more will satisfy us, if paid now.

OLIVE BRANCH.—We are requested to ask discontinuance of the paper sent to Rev. W. M. Edwards, formerly of Hawkinsville, Va., now of Milledgeville, Ga., until again ordered.

We are informed, that John Pavy, Moons Mill, Ohio, does not take his paper from the post office. He owes us for nearly two volumes of our paper. Will Br. Channell or Br. Webster attend to this case, and report to us?

Br. Fowler, wo will agree to what you propose.

Rec'd. of Br. W. G. Fowler, by Br. J. M. Johnson, $1,25 from Joel Williams, which we have paid over to Br. C. Springer.

Br. E. Comly having removed from Hartford, Ill., we have been revised to discontinue sending his paper, till he gives us notice of his present address.

Br. L. Ensminger, some months ago, you requested us to send the paper of T. Dill, to East Liberty, instead of West Liberty. The P. M. now notifies us that the paper lies in the office, uncalled for, and that he has no knowledge of such a man. Please, Br. Ensminger, tell us what this means.

The Law of Newspapers.

1. Subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, are considered wishing to continue their subscriptions.

2. If the subscribers order the discontinuance of their papers, the publishers may continue to send them till all cash charges are paid.

3. If subscribers neglect or refuse to take their papers from the offices to which they are directed, they are held responsible until they have settled their bill, and order their paper discontinued.

4. If subscribers remove to other places without informing the publishers, and the paper is sent to the former direction, they are held responsible.

5. The Courts have decided that refusing to take a paper or periodical from the office, or removing and leaving it uncalled for, is "prima facie" evidence of intentional fraud.

Liabilities of those who take Periodicals.

The law declare that any person, to whom a periodical is sent, is responsible for payment, if he receives the paper, or makes use of it, even if he has never subscribed for it, or has ordered it to be stopped. His duty in such a case is not to take the paper from the office or persons with whom the paper is left, but to notify the publisher that he does not wish for it.

If papers are sent to a Post Office, Store, or any other place of deposite, and are not taken by the person to whom they are sent, the Postmaster, Storekeeper, &c., are responsible for the payment, until he returns the paper, or informs the publisher that they are lying dead in the office.

TO THE AFFLICTED.
READ AND BE WISE.

ALL those afflicted with that most distressing disease the PILES, can obtain certain relief, and in nineteen out of twenty cases a positive and permanent cure, by calling at S. B. Johnson's Agency, Putnam, and obtaining a box of Johnson's Vegitable Pile Ointment. This remedy has been in use in this vicinity for several years. And it is admitted by all who have tested its virtues to be superior to anything of the kind ever before offered to the public. A large number of certificates, from those cured by the use of the Vegitable Ointment, could be given in proof of its virtues, but it is deemed unnecessary.

S. B. JOHNSON.

Putnam, April 17, 1848.

☞ If the sick wish a diseased stomach restored and impure blood cleansed without endangering the constitution, go to J. Deen, Grocer and Shoemaker, Putnam, and obtain a box of Dr. Le Roy's Sarsaparilla and Wild Cherry Pills which is the best family medicine now in use. So says Mr. O'Neil the Agent.

DR. LE ROY'S
Wild Cherry, and Sarsaparilla PILLS.

DR. LE ROY has most happily succeeded in combining Wild Cherry and Sarsaparilla with other vegetable ingredients, so as to produce a medicine at once tonic, and purgative, the only perfect discovery of the kind ever made. Their great peculiar excellence, and that which distinguishes them from all other purnatives is, that their operation is followed by no re-action. Their unrivalled purifying and purgative properties, for which they are indebted to the essence of Sarsaparilla, and other ingredients, being controlled by their highly tonic virtues, derived from the extract of Wild Cherry, they do not strain the digestive organs into action, as is the wo'o of operation with other cathartics, but on the contrary strengthen them into action. Thus all other purgative medicines produce more or less subsequent costiveness, and sluggishness of the gastric juice, while Dr. Le Roy's Pills leave all the machinery of the system full of life and activity, and the bowels open and natural. "Hence," writes Dr. Cheeseman, "they are the only active purgative which I can recommend with confidence, and without alarm; for they remove nothing but what ought to be removed—neither rack, nor strain—occasion no apathy or debilitation—and leave the bowels free, open, and vigorous." But the great virtue of Dr. Le Roy's Pills—the virtue which has spread their fame over the two hemispheres with a rapidity almost miraculous—lies in their purification of the blood. Here they not only stand altogether unrivaled, but fill up the measure of desire. They at once arrest the formation of bad blood, by removing impurities from the chyle, of which the blood is formed, and moreover keep it clean, by toning and strengthening the digestive organs, so as to be able to excrete from the matter of an unnutricious nature; and then they purify the blood already in circulation; and never cease operation until it is entirely free from every noxious particle, & full of health, life, and vigor. THE OHIO CULTIVATOR FOR 1848

Published at Columbus, Ohio, on the 1st and 15th of each month, M. B. Bateham, Editor and Proprietor. Terms, $1 per year—four copies for $3—payment invariably in advance.

THE fourth volume of the Ohio Cultivator will commence Jan. 1st, 1848. This paper has now become so well known that it is scarcely necessary to speak of its character, or to allude to the commendations it has received from the Public Press and other sources. The editor is determined to spare no pains on his part to sustain the reputation of the work, and make each succeeding volume more useful than the preceding one. Our motto is "upward and onward;" and the object of the "Cultivator" is not only to collect and disseminate valuable facts and information relating to practical agriculture, but to inspire 'Farmers' with more just conceptions of the dignity of their profession; to induce them to cultivate the 'Mind' as well as the 'soil,' and thus elevate themselves to that position which it is their duty and privilege to occupy as 'American Agriculturists,' in this age of Progress and Improvement.

With its very large list of contributors, numbering over "two hundred," most of them practical farmers in the West, the pages of the "Cultivator" will contain the results of "Experience," as well as the teachings of "Science;" and being written or selected with special reference to the climate, productions and farming of Ohio, this paper will be found more valuable than any other for the farmers of this and the adjoining States. It will contain the latest intelligence of the "Markets" of this country and England; notices of the weather and the crops; descriptions (with engravings,) of improved implements, machines, &c.; instructions in gardening and fruit culture; rearing and management of domestic animals; construction of farm buildings, fences, &c.; and a "Ladies' Department" devoted to household affairs, useful receipts, &c.

The friends of Improvement in Ohio and adjoining States are requested to obtain and forward subscribers for the Ohio Cultivator. Remember that the price is only "seventy-five cents" each, when four or more names are sent by one person. All subscriptions must commence with the first number of the volume; a complete index is furnished at the end of the year. Specimen numbers and a prospectus will be forwarded to all who desire them.

☞ "Now is the time to subscribe!" Letters with remittances may be sent by mail at the risk and expense of the publisher.

A NEW AND IMPROVED VOLUME FOR 1848

SEARS' PICTORIAL FAMILY MAGAZINE,

Established for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge:

A Monthly Miscellany of moral and instructive information, embellished with numerous ENGRAVINGS of the various subjects treated of in the course of the year. Published monthly, in parts of 48 large octavo pages each.

PROSPECTUS FOR THE FIFTH VOLUME.

For four years the Pictorial Family Magazine has been before the American public, and it is pecuniarly gratifying to the Publisher to know, that his efforts to do good through its medium, have met with the universal approbation of the public & the public prints, wherever it has found its way. It is now too firmly established upon the broad foundation of public confidence, to require a great flourish of trumpets to proclaim its continued existence, or the tricks of 'puffery' to allure the people to its support.

To those who are acquainted with the Magazine, it is unnecessary to speak of its design & merits; to those who are not, we will make a brief statement of

POET'S CORNER.

DAILY WORK.

BY CHARLES MACKAY.

Who lags for dread of daily work,
And his appointed task would shirk,
Commits a folly and a crime.
A soulless slave—
A paltry knave—
A clog upon the wheels of time.
With work to do; and store of health,
The man's unworthy to be free,
Who will not give,
That he may live,
His daily toil for daily fee.

No! let us work! We only ask
Reward proportioned to our task;
We have no quarrel with the great—
No feud with rank—
With mill or bank—
No envy of a lord's estate,
If we can earn sufficient store
To satisfy our daily need,
And can retain
For age and pain,
A fraction; we are rich indeed.

No dread of toil have these frames of ours,
We know our worth and weigh our powers,
The more we work, the more we win;
Success to trade!
Success to spade!
And to the corn that's coming in!
And joy to him who o'er his task,
Remembers toil is nature's plan;
Who, working, thinks,
And never sinks,
His independence as a man!

Who only asks for humblest wealth,
Enough for competence and health;
And leisure when his work is done,
To read his book,
By chimney hook,
Or stroll at setting of the sun,
Who toils as every man should toil,
For fair reward, erect and free;
These are the men—
The best of men—
These are the men we mean to be!

From the Western Citizen.

SLAVERY.

Away with this blot on our nation's proud honor;
Away with this scourge from the land of the free;
Away with this fiend, till our nation's proud banner
Shall wave, pure and spotless, o'er land and o'er sea.

Away with this monster—away with this demon;
Away with this fiend from fair Liberty's shore;
And on our bright nation forever let Freedom
Her life-giving influence unceasingly pour.

Away with this fury, this vile man-tormentor;
Away with this sev'rer of all human ties;
Away with this peace-breaker, foul pain inventor;
Away with this causer of crime, sin and vice.

Away with this breeder of strife and dissention;
Away with the demon from this our fair land;
Away with this fiend which surpasses extension,
And from this republic erase his foul brand.

Away with this tyrant—away with this monster;
Away with this fiend from America's plains;
Far away from our country we'll drive the usurper,
And o'er our bright nation let Liberty reign.

Then away with this blot on our nation's proud honor;
Away with this scourge from the land of the free;
Away with this fiend, till our nation's proud banner
Shall wave, pure and spotless, o'er land and o'er sea.

Itinerancy,---The Restrictive Rule.

NO. VI.

MR. EDITOR,—The so frequent change of ministers, required by the restrictive rule, renders them less interesting to a community, than they otherwise would be. They must be, and are, regarded more in the light of transient visitors; and the citizens can not feel the same interest in forming an acquaintance with them, or in giving them a support, that they would do if the time of their stay was not thus limited. The idea with community, is this; if we do take some pains to become acquainted with Methodist ministers, they will be gone before the acquaintance is properly formed, and it is not worth while for us to trouble ourselves about them. But let them become citizens of any place, without being under this limitation, and they will then stand upon an equality with other ministers. The time was when there was but little difference; the country being new, there were but few settled pastors. Mostly all ministers were travelling ministers. But now other churches have their settled pastors in almost every neighborhood, and the attention of the greater portion of community, is directed to them, to the neglect of such transient visiters as Methodist itinerants.

It also renders a minister less interesting to his own church. They do not regard him as their preacher, but as one of which the Annual Conference has given them the use for one year; and they cannot have that tender regard for him that would be excited by the hope that he may be their paster for years,—that tender regard that they would have if the Annual Conference would give him to them to esteem and retain without arbitrary limitation. Take a Presbyterian congregation, who are blessed with an ordinarily good preacher, and you find his members taking an interest in him that is rarely found among Methodists. They will go farther to hear him preach, do far more for his support, are hardly ever known to leave his ministrations to hear other preachers, and there is no one that they would sooner hear than their old pastor. I do not see any other reason for this difference between Presbyterian and Methodist congregations than the shifting nature of our minstry; and I doubt, very much, whether any person, who thinks upon this subject, can see any other cause for it. Our system keeps up a distance between our preachers and members. There is not existing the tender relation of pastor and people. They must regard him more in the light of a hireling, and stranger, than as one of the family.

The restrictive rule cultivates in the church a spirit of novelty. It accustoms our people to hearing a variety of preachers, and naturally leads them to desire a change, for the sake of variety;—not a variety of truth, but a variety of preachers. And it is but little matter how much variety of truth is presented, as the preacher brings forth from the sacred treasury, things, both new and old, if there is not a variety of preachers, it does not please the morbid taste created by our system of change. In most cases our people are pleased with the preacher for a few weeks or months at first, because he is a new preacher; a new voice, new looks, new gestures, and perhaps new measures; and with many, the cry is, O! what a fine preacher! But they have heard him a few Sabbaths; and it is an old voice, old gestures, old looks, and old measures: O! I do wish the year was out; I am so fond of hearing a new preacher; I do wish we could have a change every three months. Such a person does not like the preacher for the truth which he preaches, but for the strangeness of his voice. It arrests his attention and keeps him awake; therefore he wants a new preacher. He has been gratified in this so much that he is far more pleased with the newness of the preacher than he is impressed with the importance of the truth. The tendency of this system is to make our people listeners of the sound and not to the sense, and fonder of novelty than they are of vital piety. The human intellect, acts in the science of religion, as it does in any other science. The more a person indulges in light reading, commonly called novels, the greater desire for it he has. The more a man attends the theatre and witnesses plays, the more he delights in it. So, the more you indulge the novelty of church members, the more you cultivate the desire for something new. So, under our course of training, it is not strange that our members leave their own church, or congregation, whenever there is an opportunity of hearing a stranger in a sister congregation, or that they suffer a little distance, or inconvenience to prevent them hearing the preacher they have heard a half dozen times, or that they desire a change every year if not in their power to have it every three months. He that can succeed in interesting such a people for three years, under such an arrangement, under a different one, would be to them an interesting and useful minister for a lifetime.

So, it invites dissatisfaction upon the part of the people with their preacher. He is sent to his field of labor, in most cases, a stranger. Some may have heard him preach a few times, or had some farther acquaintance with him. But the great mass of the people he is to serve know him not, and are not prepared to judge of his motives. While he is a stranger, it is natural for them to look with a jealous eye upon all of his conduct. Any thing that he may do that his members do not sanction, in the place of being promptly told to him, is withheld, and harbored in the mind, having its distinctive influence, when it is likely that with the privilege and desire of continuing the relation for years, all such little difficulties would be promptly settled; but now they fester, during the whole year, into mighty reasons why the preacher must not stay on their circuit even a second year.

PRUDENTIA.

At Home.

Restrictive Rule.

NO. III.

"Resolved, That it is the opinion of the Pittsburgh Annual Conference of the Methodist P. Church, that the 'RESTRICTIVE RULE' which forbids the stationing of ministers and preachers longer than three years successively on the same Circuit, and two years successively in the same Station, is contrary to apostolic usage, not necessary to an efficient Itinerancy and in many instances, is detrimental to the interests of Circuits and Stations; and consequently, the Delegates to the next General Conference should be clothed with conventional power, in view of its removal from our book of discipline."

2. It is not necessary to an efficient Itinerancy. What is implied in an efficient Itinerancy? The question relates directly to the removing of ministers, the reasons inducing, and the end to be accomplished by it. In reference to the removal of ministers, I have only to say, I do not desire a settled ministry. And in the manner of re-appointing, I desire no change. As it now is,—the people asking, the minister consenting, and the Conference confirming—perhaps it is as near right as we can get it. But the reasons inducing the change and the end be to accomplished by it, is that which presents itself for consideration in answer to the inquiry proposed. The glory of God in the salvation of souls is the avowed and uncontroverted end of our labors. And the reasons directing to the course which will most speadily and fully accomplish this end, will furnish the best exposition of an efficient Itinerancy. And here I repeat that a probability of extensive usefulness, should be the predominant consideration in the appointment and continuance of a minister. This consideration has efficiency directly in view. And what are the circumstances, out of which such a probability would arise? After the qualifications of a minister are such as enable him rightly to divide the word of truth, it is then essential that he be acquainted with the people to whom he ministers, in order to give each a suitable portion in due season.—It is then necessary that he have the confidence and affection of his people,—that he is worthy of this, there is a partial warrant furnished in that the Conference appointed him, but this exercise is secured and promoted by personal acquaintance, he practically proving himself deserving it. Again, there are different grades of talent, each of which may be especially suited to certain conditions and characters of the various charges to be supplied—all of which are frequently met in direct opposition by the demands of the restrictive rule. In reference to a minister's qualfications, the fact known that he is to remove positively at a specified time, presents a temptation to neglect that diligent application to study which should characterize every minister, further than what is barely sufficient to meet the demands of the time specified, and then to his next charge he may commence and not only sing the same song, but he will sing it to the same tune. Let not those who are acquainted with the facts on this score, imagine it a supposition founded on improbabilities. The reverse is true. As to acquaintance, the rule allows a man to remain just about long enough to become acquainted. This may be as long as some would be wanted to remain. Well, if so, let it be regarded as the voice of Providence to remove them, that their room may be filled by those who are of the right stamp. But there are those, who, by being extensively acquainted with their flock, realize therein a very decided advantage in giving efficiency to their labors. Besides, with this latter class, it is by this acquaintance that they secure the confidence and affection of those over whom they watch. This rule also occasions frequent and unnecessary pecuniary disadvantages. Making a considerable outlay of the pittance received in meeting the expenses of removing from one place to another, when God and the interests of his cause, not only do not demand, but forbid it. And this is a consideration of the more importance, when we consider how stinted the salary is, of even those who are best paid. And does not this bear upon an Itinerant's efficiency? No man can devote himself as successfully in any cause if his energies are paralized by pecuniary embarrassment. But what has this rule done to give efficiency to our operations, that any should contend for it as necessary? It has in its stated and frequent removals implanted and cherished such a desire for novelty in our people, that there is not that stability and regularity in our congregations, as a general thing, that there is in other denominations which might be named. And to this same desire for novelty, we trace the fact that many of our aged and experienced men would be literally rejected if sent to many of the appointments, while the services of young and experienced men are called for, merely because they go farther in pandering to suit this vitiated taste. Consequently those men, whom we need to give ballast to the vessel by their wisdom and experience, are forced out of the ranks, and their places filled by the weak and incompetent; which is giving efficiency to the itinerancy with a vengeance. But it has been asked—'why should we exchange a certainty for an uncertainty?—It has worked well, and we know not how it would operate if changed.' This we deny in toto. It is not exchanging a certainty for an uncertainty, neither has this rule ever worked well. To say that the Itinerancy has worked well, is quite a different matter; but that it would not have worked better, had it never been clogged with this rule, is what I do not believe, and what I think cannot be proved. To exchange for an Itinerancy unrestricted by such a rule, would not be a new experiment. It has been tried and the results are convincing and satisfactory. The Apostles tried it. So did their successors in the christian ministry down to the days of Wesley, wherever there was an instance of the Itinerant mode of operating. But we have a modern instance that must be regarded as furnishing clear and decisive evidence to the point. I mean in the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. Their regulations are precisely the same as ours, with the exception of the restrictive rule. This they have not. And their system has not resolved itself into settled pastorates, as some profess to conceive it necessarily must. There is but one or two such relations recognized by them in the entire west. And there is perhaps no denomination in existence whose history gives more unmistakeable evidence of efficiency in their mode of opperations. Success, great and glorious has attended them.

From these and such like considerations, I conclude most unhesitatingly that this rule is not necessary to an efficient Itinerancy.

The Nature of Evangelical Religion.

NO. II.

Having given in my former treatise of this sublime subject, what appears to me to be the prominent attributes it possesses: the question presents itself at once, does it produce any fruits? Answer: Abundant. What, then, are its fruits? Benevolence in the christian soul which is "created anew in Christ Jesus unto good works," runs out in sympathy for "the fatherless and the widow in their affliction." Were I asked, what constitutes the most ennobling characteristic of man, I would answer, Benevolence. Does not this render him a blessing to his race? Yes, it elevates him in the scale of being, and when his body has obeyed the laws of mortality, it crowns his name with an imperishable halo. Benevolence! It is this that makes his existence like the river that fertilizes the country through which it passes or flows. It is this that brightens the languid eye, and strengthens the fainting heart: that cheers the disconsolate, and lights up the lamp of joy in the cottage and the dungeon.—Yes, this noble disposition—this sublime attribute—the most inestimable gem in the crown of man's character—"is the praise of angels, the honor of God." If we imitate the life of Jesus Christ in any thing, it is when we practice benevolence.—The loveliest feature in him was benevolence. He sacrificed the anthems of the glorified for the scoffs of sinners;—He resigned his throne and became an inhabitant of earth, "his footstool," because he was benevolent. He underwent sufferings; he endured privations and pains; pangs unutterable, all, all this sacrifice of happiness with the father, to redeem man from the obloquy of sin; because he was benevolent. Are you incredulous as to its benignant displays (reader of this humble scrawl?) Go back to Bethlehem,—see it there shining in that infant's eye. Go to Gethsemana: go to Calvary. And as you stand on its rugged brow, oh, behold the tragic scene!—Ah, shrinking back methinks you exclaim, Why hangs he on the cross? Methinks the heavens are clothed in blackness—and the sun is shrouded in obscurity! Oh, why? The trembling earth responds: Jesus dies! But why? Because he is benevolent. This, the only cause, all nature—and all heaven, harmoniously echo. How passingly pleasing then the reflection, that every benevolent act of ours out of a pure motive, makes us like unto the embodiment of grace and virtue, the Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. How happyfying the reflection when we have relieved the sufferings of our unfortunate fellow man by acts of Samaritan kindness: we have gladdened the destitute in not only "a cup of cold water, but in food and raiment, thus imitating in our sphere, our benevolent Christ. Thus bringing forth the fruits of evangelical religion, "having the promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come."

Narrative.

The Minister's Feast.

BY LYDIA JANE PIERSON.

The Reverend Mr. N—— was a man of excellent temper, but he was eccentric. He was a powerful preacher, and his ministration was blest to the reformation of many in his parish.—At the age of thirty-four he became enamored of a rich parishioner. Well, the marriage was consummated, the bride's portion paid; and the husband, as husbands in their first love are apt to do, consented to the humor of his wife, and accompanied her to several festive parties given by his wealthy neighbors in honor of his marriage.

The happy couple were sitting together in their comfortable parlor one evening towards spring, the reverend gentleman studying the Venerable Bede, and his wife equally intent upon the plate of the latest fashions, when she suddenly looked up with an expression between hope and fear, and thus addressed her companion:—

"My dear husband, I have a request to make."

"Well, Nancy, any thing consistent."

"You do not imagine that I would make an inconsistent request, surely?"

"No—not a request that you consider inconsistent. But come, what is it?"

"Why, my dear sir," and her voice trembled a little, "we have been to several parties among the neighboring gentry, and now I think that to maintain our position in society, we should make a party too.."

The minister looked blank.

"What sort af a party Nancy?" he said at length.

"Why," she replied, "such a party as those we have attended. We must make an elegant dinner, and have dancing after it."

"Dancing! in a ministers house!" ejaculated Mr. N——.

"Why, yes certainly," replied his wife, coaxingly. "You will not dance, the party will be mine; and then we have been to similar parties all winter."

"True, true," he muttered, with a perplexed air, and sat silent for some time as if considering. At length he spoke. "Yes, Nancy, you may make a party, give a dinner, and if the guests desire it, you may dance."

"Thank you, love," she cried, putting her arms around his neck.

"But I have some stipulations to make about it," he said, "I must select and invite the guests and you must allow me to place some of my favorite dishes on the table."

"All as you please love," she answered delightedly, "but when shall it be?"

"Next Wednesday, if you please."

"But our furniture and window draperies are very old fashioned. Is it not time we had new?"

"I should hardly think it necessary to refurnish our rooms, Nancy. All our furniture is excellent of its kind."

"But our smooth carpets, white draperies and cane chairs have such a cold look, do consent to have the rooms new fitted; we can move these things to the unfurnished chambers."

"And of what use will they be in those rooms which we never occupy? Besides, it is near spring, and to fit up now for winter is superfluous."

"Well, I would not care," she persisted, "only people will call us parsimonious and ungenteel."

"Oh, if that is all," he said, "I will promise to expend a thousand dollars on the evening of the party, not in furniture, but in a manner which will be far more grateful to our guests, and profitable to ourselves, and which shall exonorate us from all imputation of parsimony; and you may expend in dress, eatables and desert, just what sum you please."

And so the colloquy ended. He resumed his studies, and she gave her mind to the consideration of the dress which would be most becoming; and the viands that were most expensive. The next day she went busily about her preparations, wondering all the time how her husband would expend his thousand dollars; but as she had discovered something of the eccentricity of his character, she doubted not that he meant to give an agreeable surprise; and her curiosity grew so great that she could hardly sleep during the interval.

At length the momentous day arrived. The arrangements were all complete, and Mrs. N—— retired to perform the all-important business of arraying her person in fine attire. She lingered long at the toilet, relying on the fashionable unpunctuallity of fashionable people, and when the hour struck, left her chamber, like Judith of old, gloriously, to allure the eyes of all who should look upon her, and full of sweet smiles and graces notwithstanding the uncomfortable pinching of her shoes and dress. Her husband met her in the hall.

"Our guests have arrived," he said, and opened the door of the receiving room. Wonderful! wonderful! What a strange assembly!—There were congregated the cripple, the maimed, and the blind, the palsied, the extreme aged, and a group of children from the alms-house, who regarded the fine lady, some with wide open mouths, others with both hands in their hair, while some peeped from behind furniture, the covert to which they had retreated from her dazzling presence. She was petrified with astonishment; then a dash of displeasure crossed her face, till having run her eyes over the grotesque assembly, she met the comical grave expression of her countenance, when she burst into a violent fit of laughter.

"Nancy!" at length said her husband, sternly. She suppressed her mirth, stammered an excuse and added:

"You will forgive me, and believe yourself quite welcome."

"That is well done," whispered Mr. N——.

"My friends," said he, "as my wife is not acquainted with you, I will make a few presentations." Then leading her towards an emaciated creature, whose distorted limbs were unable to support his body, he said, "this gentleman, Nancy is the Rev. Mr. N——, who in his youth travelled and endured much in the cause of our common Master. A violent rheumatism, induced by colds contracted among the new settlements of the west, where he was employed in preaching the Gospel to the poor, has reduced him to his present condition. This lady his wife, has piously sustained him. But she is old and feeble now, as you may see."

Then, turning to a group with silver locks and threadbare coats, he continued, "These are soldiers of the Revolution. They were all sons of rich men. They went out in their young strength to defend their oppressed country. They endured hardships, toils, and sufferings. such as we hardly deem it possible for men to endure and live; they returned home at the close of the war maimed in their limbs, and with broken constitutions, to find their patrimonies destroyed by fire, or the chances of war, or their property otherwise filched and wrested from them. And these worthy men live in poverty and neglect in the land for the prosperity of which they sacrificed their all. These venerable ladies are the wives of these patriots, and widows of others who have gone to their reward. They could tell you tales that would thrill your heart, and make it better. This is the celebrated and learned Dr. B——, who saved hundreds of lives during the spotted epidemic. But his great success roused the animosity of his medical brethren, who succeeded in ruining his practice, and when blindness came upon him, he was forgotten by those whom he had delivered from death. This lovely creature is his only child, and she is motherless. She leads him daily by the hand, and earns the food she sets before him. Yet her learning and accomplishments are wonderful, and she is the author of those exquisite poems which appear occasionally in the ——— Magazine. These children were orphaned in infancy by the Asiatic cholera, and their sad hearts have seldom been cheered by a smile, or their palates regaled by delicious food. Now dry your eyes, and lead on to the dining-room."

She obeyed, and notwithstanding her emotions, the thumping of course shoes, and rattling of stricks, crutches and wooden legs behind her, well nigh threw her into another indecorous laugh.

To divert her attention, she glanced over the table. There stood the dishes for which her husband had stipulated, in the shape of two monstrous homely-looking meat pies, and two enormous platters of baked meats and vegetables, looking like mighty mountains among the delicate viands that she had prepared to do the table honors; but her husband, after a short thanksgiving to the Bountiful God, addressed the company with "Now, my brethren, help yourselves and one another, to whatever you deem preferable. I will wait upon the children."

A hearty and jovial meal was made, the minister setting the example; the old soldiers became garrulous, and each recounted some wonderful or thrilling adventure of the revolutionary war; and the old ladies told tales or privation and suffering, and interwoven with them the histories of fathers, brothers, or lovers, who died for liberty.

Mrs. N—— was sobbing convulsively, when her husband came round, and touching her shoulder, whispered—

"My love, shall we have dancing?" That word, with its ludicrous associations, fairly threw her into hysterics, and she laughed and wept at once.

When she became quiescent, Mr. N. thus addressed the company.

"I fear, my friend, that you will think my wife a frivolous inconsistent creature, and therefore apologize for her. We were married only last fall, and have attended several gay parties, which our rich neighbors gave in honor of our nuptials, and my wife thought it would be genteel to give a dinner in return. I consented on conditions, one of which was I should invite the guests. So, being the professed minister of Him who was meek and lowly in heart, I followed to the letter his command. 'But when thou makest a feast, call the poor, the maimed, the lame, the blind,' &c.; you all recollect the passage. Mrs. N——, not knowing who her guests were to be, is highly delighted with the ruse I have played, and I do not believe there has been so noble and honorable a company assembled this winter. My wife desired new furniture, lest we should be deemed parsimonious, and I pledged myself to expend one thousand dollars in a manner more pleasing to our guests, and which should obviate any such imputation."

Then addressing the children, he said:

"You will each be removed to-morrow to excellent places, and if you continue to be industrious and perfectly honest in word and deed, you will become respectable members of society. To you, Dr. B——, under God I owe my own life. I did not know your locality, neither had I heard of your misfortunes until a few days since. I can never repay the debt I owe you, but if you and your daughter will accept the neat furnished house adjoining mine, I will see that you never want again. To you patriot fathers, and the nursing mothers of our country, I present the one thousand dollars. It is just one hundred dol. to each soldier, and soldier's widow. It is a mere trifle. No thanks, my friends. You, Mr. N——, are my father in the Lord. Under your preaching I first became convinced of sin, and it was your voice that first brought me the words of salvation. You will remain in my house. I have a room prepared for you, and a pious servant to attend you. It is time you were at peace, and your excellent lady relieved of her burden." The crippled preacher fell prostrate on the carpet, and poured out such thanksgiving and prayer as found way to the heart of Mrs. N——, who ultimately became a meek and pious woman, a fit helpmate for a devoted gospel minister.

Remarkable Accident.

A tragic occurrence took place on Saturday afternoon at the country residence of G. G. Howland, Esq., resulting in the instant death of Jas. J. Brown, aged 24 years, son of Mr. Jas. Brown of the firm of Brown Brothers & Co., and son-in-law of Mr. Howland, which was attended by circumstances of very distressing as well as extraordinary character. Young Brown was exercising himself in a swing, while two sons of G. G. Howland, Esq., one aged about 12, and the other about 14 years, were amusing themselves by firing of a small cannon about three inches long mounted on wheels. As the boys fired it off, Mr. Brown, for the purpose of contributing to their amusement, would at each discharge, drop himself from the swing, exclaiming, "I am shot."

At length he suggested to the boys that, in order to produce a louder report, they should put something additional into the cannon. They put in accordingly two duck shot. On firing it off, it wheeled, and the shot struck Mr. B. He fell from the swing, and exclaimed as before, "I am shot," and never spoke again. One of the shot struck and severed the jugular vein; but the boys supposed that, as before, he had only fallen for their sport, and he consequently laid some seconds before the boys, led by curiosity, approached him and found him weltering in a pool of blood. He endeavored to speak to them, but could not more than partially articulate the word "carry," before he parted with life and all the world holds dear.—N. Y. Post.

OFFICE HUNTING.—Mr. Marcy, of the War office, is a wag, every body knows. The death of Mr. Beasley, Consul at Havre, having brought the usual number of applicants for the succession in hot haste, all of whom from New York were eager to get the Marcy influence. A few mornings since, the correspondent of the Baltimore Patriot says, on coming out of his house he saw before him a score of New York faces, and exclaimed—"halloo! who's dead?"

FAITHFULLY, FAITHFULLY.

TUNE,—"Joyfully," &c.

Faithfully, faithfully, soldier fight on,
Soon will the vict'ry through Jesus be won;
Never a battle your leader has lost,
Faithfully, faithfully, stand to your post.

Tempest-tost mariner, unfurl thy sails;
Jesus will fill them with heavenly gales.
Soon you'll cast anchor in heaven's broad bay,
Faithfully, faithfully, hold on thy way.

Faithfully, faithfully, pilgrim press on;
Soon will your wearisome journey be done,
Soon will you reach your bright home in the skies,
Faithfully, faithfully, press to the prize.

Faithfully, faithfully, mourner pray on;
Soon will the clouds that hang o'er thee be gone:
Soon will thy darkness be turn'd into day,
Faithfully, faithfully, watch thou and pray.

Watchman of Zion, oh lift up thy voice;
Say to the faithful in Israel rejoice:
Call the poor sinner from ruins dread verge,
Faithfully, faithfully, God's message urge.

Letter from a Dutchman.

MR. BASSETT:—Me no sleep yet!—A lie told by an Englishman, is it so bat, as if it wore told by a Duchman? You say, "yes!" Vell then, if a Duchman should tel de trute, is it not wort as much as do it cam from an Irishman? Me dink so.—Vell den, look out—de Duchman come againe mid more facts:—me vill drete on facts.—Mr, Bassett, you know de world looks for breachers to be de rite sort of men; & vat me rite now is 'bout breachers. And you Breachers, me want you to rede dis, and if me hit you, dont git mat, but ment your ways.—Some may say, vill a dum Duchman undertake to rite bout breachers?—Why not? He dat dink himsel grate mongst you, let him come your sarvant. Vell den day be our sarvants; and have we not a rite to tel dem some ding? Yes! me say. Day stop not a minet to tel me, when me do ronge; and me must tak it, and not marmur one bit. Vell, now is my time. Eaquil rites!—me brace my Got for eaquil rites:—now me com, Mr. Bassett. Me dink mony of our Breachers hafe looked at de falts of oders so lange, dat day hafe firgot demselves and dare calling. Me ask, vat is dere calling? Here de Saveour,—vat dos he say? "Go breach me gospel to every Greachur!" Dis is not, go trade horses mid every greachur, like some are trying to do! My harte almost bleds, ven me se a breacher com out de Stand, and begin dalking bout trading horses rite off.—Me gia your case:—may be, a brudder in de Charch hav one beest, twenty yeare old perhap and fat. A Breacher come lang and seed hir, and say, now for a bargan! But de mence tel him, dat beest would not suite him,—it was too old. But de Breacher say,—Dont care for dat;—gust sel it to him; "but stop,—fore his life of him dont tel me hir age." So he bout hir far vary littel Pose den, he traded it of, and he sold de one he gatts far it, for fifty Dollars;—vill not de infidels, and all de wickad cry out, your breacher be a horse-jockey? O how dos dis sound,—"your breacher be a horse-jockey!"—Here, O Breachers,—you dat are gilty,—your hearers say you ar a horse-jockey! How can you bare dis name! O quit your horse-trading. an breach more. O min Got mak breachers ole rite!—Vill not de Annle Conferences se to dis? The Budget.

The Failure of Fourierism.

We hear little now of the communities or Phalanxes, of the Fourierites. Most of them, we suppose, have been dissolved. No attempts are made to establish more.

Although we have always thought this plan of reforming society based upon erroneous doctrines we have believed that its advocates were animated by a sincere and praise-worthy zeal for the good of mankind. And as we could not see that much evil could result from the pursuit of good, we did not feel disposed to oppose these enterprises but rather to allow them a fair trial.

This fair trial we suppose they have had; tho' their advocates deny it. They allege that one experiment failed for want of capital, another for want of proper men to manage it, another from stubborn characters of some of the persons who composed the phalanx, and who could not be moulded into perfect pieces of machinery and made to move in straight lines or curves as was necessary to the perfect operation of the whole. One failed, according to Horace Greeley, (a man, we believe, who lives and toils chiefly, if not solely, with this object only, the good of mankind,) because fools and knaves could not be kept out of it.

All these excuses are fatal admissions. Such difficulties will always interfere with such attempts. They are inevitable attendants upon human nature. They will influence society always, and those communities whose system of organization, cannot bear up against them, must dissolve.

We trace this Fourierite system to that great error of the school-men of all ages—the theory that society is based upon a social compact, the terms, conditions and relations of which were all nicely adjusted when men entered into it. Aside from the inconsistency of such a theory with facts, it is a mere supposition, useless and not only useless but pernicious. For the Fourierites and all other Socialists are evidently influenced by this pernicious error—by the notion that there was in effect, such a compact, that society as it now exists is the result of it, that the principles of the compact were wrong, that all human inequality of good and evil is the consequence, and that if the compact had been formed on correct principles there could not be so much evil in society; and so they very naturally set themselves about making a new and correct compact, confident that by excluding all evil from the fountain, they will make the stream pure and perfectly healthful.

Now the truth is that society is, has been and always will be, just whatever the conflicting, confused, or discordant influences of the wisdom of the wise, the folly of the foolish, the selfishness of the selfish, the philanthropy of the unselfish, the bad passions of the bad, the virtues of the good, the might of those mentally or physically powerful, and the weakness of those mentally or physically feeble, shall make it. In the early ages of the world ignorance, passion, force had almost unrestrained control, in all communities. The chosen people of God were the only exception—and they were an exception only so far as their Divine law-giver restrained among them, ignorance, passion and force.

In modern times and enlightened nations, intelligence, virtue, religion, and the elevation of the people generally to various degrees of mental and moral strength, have counteracted more or less the influence, and restrained more or less the rule of ignorance, passion and force. Alas! that even now these evil spirits hold us so much in their power! Alas! that war, that avarice, that oppression, that inhumanity, in so many forms, still attest too often, that they control us still.

But God rules, and man is the earthen vessel, shaping in His hands. Light, truth, religion have exalted mankind much—and will, assuredly, work on, by little and by little, till they accomplish their perfect work. They will do it the sooner, the more men labor to assist them; and to do this is the highest duty and the noblest work. Let no one like the Fourierites—dissatisfied with this slow and humble labor, and impatient of enduring any longer, the evil and wretchedness that are in the world—abandon this way of doing good, and rush into the Sisyphian labor of reorganizing entirely the structure of society.—That labor will be lost—though it be a labor of love. And though impetuous benevolence may with difficulty brook the thought of deferring the removal of Evil and Misery, until slow toil and the gradual increase of knowledge and religion shall effect it, yet God, whose will and power to remove Evil and Misery are greater than ours, has thus far, thought it right to work in this way; and we may be content to follow the guidance of His wisdom, and assured that our power cannot do more than His.

THE TELEGRAPHIC SYSTEM.—The network of telegraph is fast extending. The stock is profitable, and the holders are reaping the reward of their enterprise, and extending it, and inducing others to extend its range. A line is contemplated from Montreal to unite with our lines to New York and the West. One from Toronto to Montreal is resolved on. The Board of trade at Montreal are also about to petition government to erect a line from that city to Halifax, thus giving the first news by the English steamships that touch at that point on their way to Boston, and furnishing the first intelligence from Europe to Montreal, & when the other proposed line is completed, to Albany and New York by, the way of Canada. One effect of this multiplication of lines is to put them beyond the danger of being wantonly cut, in order to prevent the transmission of intelligence. Communication can be made instantaneously by the most circuitous routes.

A NEW THOUGHT ABOUT EXPLOSIVE COTTON.—We see by the Democratic Pacifique of Paris, that the European governments are in no small trepidation about the discovery of the new explosive cotton. It puts a terrible power in the hands of the people, which can be manufactured very easily, and concealed in spite of police researches. The French government wished to suppress it. but it found that it would have to suppress so many materials—all kinds of acids, cotton, hemp, paper, &c., that it would be impossible. Revolutions no doubt will be greatly facilitated by this invention, and it comes at a time when reform ideas agitate the masses more deeply than ever before. The fact is that the Kings and rulers of the world will have to undertake the work of elevating peacefully the oppressed and miserable masses, or take consequences far more serious than have heretofore fallen upon them for the neglect of their duty.

SHOCKING ACCIDENT.—Mr. Hezekiah Floyd, a farmer, a short distance West of Middletown, Frederick county, Md., on Friday night week, whilst on his way home, missed his way and stepped off the road into a culvert, a precipice of some fifteen feet; in the fall one his legs was broken and dreadfully fractured between the knee and ankle.

DROWNED.—At Cincinnati, on Sunday, a Mr. Sweeny, of Pittsburgh, returning from a trip to New Orleans, fell or stepped overboad by accident, and sunk before help could reach him.

To correct the disorders of the mind, no one is either too young or too old; and he who pretends that time for reflection is not yet come, or is past, is as he who says, that the time to live well and happily is not yet come, or is quite gone.

Itinerancy,---The Restrictive Rule.

NO. VII.

MR. EDITOR,—If it is true, that ministers have different talents, and that different places require different talents,—or that every man's talent is not adapted to the same place,—it is then true, that there is not a Methodist Church, subject to the restrictive rule, that can expect any thing more than to be frequently supplied with a minister, whose talents are not adapted to their community, and who cannot be useful among them. According to our system, changes must be made once in so long a time. These changes, made necessary by law, make others necessary to give place for such as the law removes. So that to maintain this system, it necessarily produces many more changes than what would meet the letter of the law. When the appointments are all filled, one change, required by this rule, makes another necessary, and that requires another, and so the members of a Conference are slid round on the scale, until many a worthy brother is removed from his field of labor, for a reason no better than to give place to some one else, or to fill the place of some one removed by the law. Now who does not see, that such a rule must be a very great, unnecessary inconvenience, to a stationing committee, to the whole Conference, and to the whole church? If in stationing the preachers, they were left to have their eye upon their usefulness, and the welfare of the church, and not upon an arbitrary, blind law, that never was of any use, and never will be, would it not be much better? But the advocates of this rule would be a little consistent if they would make it a point never to complain when they are lodged in appointments, or receive preachers, that they do not like. They ought to expect to be dissatisfied about half the time. And those uniting with the church, tho' we hold out to them the assurance that we are a free people, & that they can have a voice in choosing a preacher, &c., yet, if they look at this subject, they must come in expecting to realize this dissatisfaction, and learn to distrust our assurance, finding that we are bound by an arbitrary, tyranical law. Now, who would prefer to do so, or feel it to be a duty to support such an arrangement? It may be answered, that many have united; but it may be answered, too, that with this difficulty removed, many more would unite with us.

Such a rule is niconsistent with the genius of our free institutions. In our economy, all the departments of the church have their rights secured to them, and they are left free to act in view of the greatest good. But in Article 10th sec. 7 of the Constitution, we find a little tyrant, set up over the interests of the ministry, with unlimited power to control all circumstances, and all necessities, and all pleas; tyrant like, hearing none of them, but moving churches, Conferences, ministers, and people, all by its arbitrary sway; and the power to resist it is left no where but in a general convention of the whole church.—Here the power is reserved to hoist this monarch from his throne, and leave our institutions consistent with themselves, and our people to act, free and independent of all law but the law of right, and from all control, but such as is founded in the word of God and liberty. Why did not the framers of our constitution, have an eye to this, when they broke away from the anti-republican institutions to which they had been subject? But so it is:—reforms are hardly ever presented, by the first projectors of them, perfect at once. They may present many things that are good,—sometimes very many,—but generally leave much more to be presented. Forming a new church, too, from a part of the old one, the people then, may not have been willing to have an itinerancy different from what they had in the old church. But the infant church is growing up to manhood, and seeking to loose the imperfections of the child. We may now be prepared to throw off this yoke of bondage also. Many portions of the church are now ready, and they indulge the hope that all will soon be ready to throw it off, and leave us free to act in accordance with christianity and reason.

This arbitrary rule, is not only inconsistent with a representative form of government, but to carry it out successfully, you must go back to the arbitrary power of the Methodist Episcopal Church. There the appointing power, like the whole genius of the government, is arbitrary; and it does not matter so much, whether it is lodged in a restrictive rule, or in a bishop; neither the people nor the preachers claim any right to influence the appointment. To submit to such a government, the governed must feel, and act, willing to submit to the products of that government, and make themselves satisfied with their destiny. This will be the natural consequence of willingly consenting to be governed by arbitrary power. So an observer may readily discover a disposition, in both the clergy and laity of the Methodist Episcopal Church, to make themselves satisfied with whatever it pleases their master, the bishop to bestow upon them. And this is seen, not only in the appointments of the preachers, but in every department of government the itinerant bishops and presbyters rule, and it must be the pleasure of the people to obey. This they have learned. And so, in most cases, whatever preacher is sent to a congregation, he is, in their estimation, the best and most talented preacher that ever was; or at least, they will so profess to others, and thus be at peace among themselves. They have learned to be controled. But our government does not so teach our people. Our clergy and laity exist as one sovereignity. Our people are taught that their voice is to be heard in every department of government; that their representation thro' their delegate is to be regarded; and if they do not obtain the preacher that pleases them, they will let it be heard throughout the community, to the injury of the preacher and themselves too. They profess that the government is liberal, and they have a right to be heard. When that right is seemingly violated, or neglected, they will use the liberty to complain. And where a tyrant like law, such as this, crosses the genius of a free government, making so many changes necessary which are contrary to the wishes of the people, it must produce frequent dissatisfaction and consequent injury. That our people will not willingly submit to appointments made by the Annual Conference contrary to their wishes, and sustain the preacher in community by speaking well of him, as will the members of the Old Church, is evident to all observers. And I think that we, as a church, have lived long enough now, to see that this arbitrary rule, brought away with us from the Old Church, does not belong to us, but to them,—if it can exist any where—and that there we should have left it, and never have introduced it into the ungenial clime of a free government; but have left our Annual Conferences free to direct the labors of the ministry according to the greatest probability of good,—according to a conviction of duty, and the openings of Divine Providence.

Restrictive Rule.

NO. IV.

The third and remaining particular of the resolution declares that the restrictive rule frequently proves detrimental to the interests of circuits and stations. These interests as the term is here used, refer principally to the spiritual prosperity of the churches. And what is necessary in order to this spiritual prosperity? First and mainly, the power and demonstration of the Spirit of God,—to convince of sin, of righteousness, and of a judgment to come,—also to change, renew, sanctify, and save; by enlightening, quickening, sustaining, and happifying. And then to realize such results as,—converts multiplied, believers rooted and grouned in love, and God's name glorified in the church proving the light of the world and the salt of the earth. But the days of miracles are past, and if we would rationally and scripturally look for this the prime requisite to spiritual prosperity, we must look for it in connexion with suitable, faithful and zealous efforts on the part of those engaged as co-workers with God. Whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty, & continueth therein, he being not a forgetful hearer, 'but a doer of the work, this man shall be blessed in his deed.' (Isa. 1, 25) They who adopt the language of the Psalmist, saying, 'Thou shalt guide me by thy counsel,' as to where, when, and how to perform the work assigned them, may expect the divine blessing to attend them, and shall not be disappointed.

But wherein do the changes made necessary by this rule alone, conflict with the above sentiments, which will certainly be admitted as truth by all? Has it been shown that these frequent and certain removals present a temptation to neglect that diligent application to study, which is necessary to make the minister a workman needing not to be ashamed? Then so far as this tempation has been entered into, so far has the rule proven detrimental. And altho' the detriment from this consideration cannot be exactly estimated, all who are acquainted with the facts in the case, will agree that it is incalculably great. And is it true that these changes, being so frequent, hinder the securing of that thorough acquaintance which is necessary, if the minister would adapt his discourse to the necessities of his congregation? Then is it true that the interests of such congregations realize detriment from such changes because they prevent their necessities from being fully met. So in reference to every other instance wherein these removals prove detrimental to the interests of the Itinerants, for to the churches is it said, 'all are yours, Paul, Apollos and Cephas,' and that which operates against the one, must necessarily prove detrimental to the other. We are as Captains and Companies called into the field to go forth under Christ the great Commander-in-chief, (not the rule) to war against the Prince & hosts of darkness. It is the business of ministers, as under officers, to train and discipline the troops, and to lead them forth to the engagement. And is it good war policy, just in the heighth of an engagement, when the walls are being scaled, and the enemy successfully routed, &c., &c., in obedience to an order, not only not received from the commanding officer, but conflicting therewith, to set about exchanging the officers, and thereby divert the attention of the soldiers from the conquest about to be made; instead of continuing the charge until the victory is won?

But those who are in the oppposition, ask for facts and instances demonstrating the truth of our position. In answer to this call, we ask the history of any circuit or station which has had experience sufficient to test the influence of these arbitrary removals, and we feel warrantee in assuring ourselves that in every such history faithfully given, we will have an instance of undeniable facts attesting the truth of this third item of the resolution, that in many instances it (the rule) is detrimental to the interests of circuits and stations. If then, 'it is contrary to Apostolic usage, not necessary to an efficient Itinerancy, and in many instances proves detrimental to the interests of circuits and stations; are not these considerations of sufficient moment to induce the church, as soon as possible to expunge it from the discipline? Some, no doubt, as heretofore, will raise the cry of alarm at the idea of commencing to find fault with our constitution and discipline. Their imaginations are fruitful sources, furnishing fearful results which must necessarily be realized as the consequence. But as bishop Asbury said to his travelling companion who was greatly dreading the crossing of a rapid stream which was full of ice, 'Let us not cross the river until we come to it.' These fears & alarms should receive no more attention now, than similar ones did when raised by the friends of Episcopacy previous to our organziation. Our discipline as a whole chalenges the christian world to furnish a document that will compare with it. But yet, it bears some marks of its having but a human origin. This outraging rule is one of them, for the removal of which, some of my reasons for wishing it, are now given.——Let the end the resolution contemplates be realized,—that the Delegates to the next General Conference be clothed with conventional power, in view of having this tyrant rule routed from the station it has filled for more than three years:—Or that the advocates of the rule present us with arguments fairly meeting and outweighing what has been, and may be presented against it.

Respectfully, &c., JOS. BURNS.

Some Notice of J. B. on the Restrictive RULE.

MR. EDITOR,—No. 1, upon the "restrictive rule,," having just caught my eye, I have concluded to give it a passing notice, as perhaps Joseph might think hard if he should be neglected altogether, as he has chosen to challenge controversy, in the majesty of his might. And it is nothing more than likely, Mr. Editor, that yourself and readers will become wearied, before he shall get through, and especially if he is as full of writing as he is of speech making, when at Conference. He says, 'I am aware of the contrariety of sentiment there is entertained upon this subject, and consequently cannot hope for universal reception at the present.' As much as to say but before this series of communications shall come to a close; with the sword of reason the Captain-in-chief and the whole army of the opposition shall be slain and vanquished, and a Brown, a Springer, and a Reeves shall humbly sue for quarters at the hands of the great champion against the "restrictive rule," JOSEPH.

He says further, 'I am aware that many of our ablest men are not only opposed to the change desired, but they appear determined to sustain the rule with all their influence against all argument however convincing and facts demonstrating the contrary never so clearly.' Come brethren, some of you "able men" according to this statement, must be considered rather "hard cases" if you will not listen to reason, and then when your minds become convinced have moral honesty and courage sufficient to acknowledge your errors and come out upon the side of truth and Joseph.

"Neither do I think the reason which is urged by some of the oldest and best men to be worthy of their intelligence or of sufficient moment to induce continued silence on the subject"—that is to continue to adhear to the principles which they advocated in the convention which framed the constitution of the church and of which this objectionable "section" forms a part; now you old and good brethren these principles to which you have adhered for so many years are unworthy your intelligence, you must give them up, as you see they are utterly overthrown and demolished by the sweeping argument of Joseph. You must have been convinced long before this, that the church cannot prosper under them, seeing that with the blessings of DIVINE PROVIDENCE and these cherished principles of yours, she is not so strong neither is she in so flourishing a condition as she was when you were driven by Episcopal power, to assemble yourselves in the city of Baltimore, in behalf of your brethren in a conventional capacity, to form the organic law upon which our beloved church has remained unmoved and unshaken until the appearance of No. 1, upon the "restrictive rule" by JOSEPH.

At last, ye hoary sages of the church, hear his bold and sweeping argument; against our present system of itinerancy, "I honestly believe that to remove the rule would not only not destroy, but that it would give efficiency to our itinerancy:"—that is his simple opinion, against the wisdom and experience of the church, from its organization up to the present time—so much for that.

For instance, to allow brother J. ROBINSON to remain in Allegheny station for the next twenty years, according to Joseph he would be an active and efficient itinerant, and so on throughout the district in all the circuits and stations not a single change made for the next twenty or fifty years to come. This would be a wise and glorious system of Itinerancy!

OHIO DISTRICT.

NOTICES OF REVIVALS.

Revival intelligence—Union Circuit—Lebanon Station and Mission—Sixth Street, Cincinnati—George Street Mission—Elm Street Mission—Revivals in other Churches—Remarks on necessity of revivals.

BROTHER BASSETT: As you are very desirous of obtaining revival and other intelligence concerning the prosperity of the church, for the readers of the Recorder, I have concluded to address you a few lines on these topics, the result of my own observation in a recent trip to the Queen City. I hope I shall not be deemed as stepping out of my own sphere in noticing the labors of other brethren.

Every lover of our church will be graified to learn, that there is an apparent and almost general awakening to the necessity and importance of revivals of religion. It appears to me, that the moral lethargy that has for so many years paralysed the various churches in our denomination, is now giving way to a zealous and energetic course of religious action. There has not only been an earnest desire manifested for a revival of the work of God by many ministers in the Ohio District, but they have made great efforts to accomplish this desirable end, and as the result of their labors, in many places there have been recently, and are now, in progress, interesting and powerful revivals.

You have had lately several pleasing communications on this subject, and, no doubt, you will yet have a greater number. Union circuit, Lebanon station and Mission, Sixth street station, George and Elm street Missions, (Cincinnati) yet have to report progress. Good old Union, as she is termed, is arousing herself, and bursting the chains of her bondage. Brother Stephens is enjoying, at several of his appointments, gracious seasons of love; conversions and accessions to the church cheering his heart.

Having occasion to visit Lebanon, I was delighted to find brother Evans engaged in a protracted effort, in which he experienced the outpouring of the Spirit of God. The meeting commenced on the 29th of January, and is still progressing. The result thus far, is glorious:—fifty accessions, and about thirty conversions. This station has been prospered beyond the most sanguine expectation of its warmest friends. Although in its opening history doomed to pass through a bitter and unrighteous ordeal of persecution and slander, yet has it signally triumphed, and is now enjoying the pleasing fruits of religious prosperity. It will not be amiss, probably, to give a brief statement of its history. The Lebanon brethren were organized as a Meth. Protestant Society on the 17th of September, 1846, the number then being sixty-one. From that time they have harmoniously prospered, numbering at the present no less than two hundred and twenty members. Since the organization, there has been twenty removals by certificate and death, making the number received since the organization two hundred and forty-seven. They have erected a neat, well constructed, and tastefully finished church, at a cost of three thousand five hundred dollars, with a basement above ground, intended for a lecture and class rooms. The size of the building is forty by sixty feet, thirty-eight feet in height, not including the steeple, a plain but handsome spire. Taking it altogether, it is one of the most neat, yet beautiful, churches I have ever seen. The congregation is large and attentive; and this year, under the untiring exertions of the Author of "Questions and Answers," cannot but prosper abundantly.

On the Lebanon Mission they have also brightening seasons. Brother Warrington when he commenced his labors, entered upon an uncultivated field, so far as Methodist Protestantism was concerned, but by earnest efforts he has succeeded in organizing two or three societies, numbering thirty-five members, the prospect still flattering. If this field of labor had been earlier cultivated, I have no doubt that it would now have been one of the most interesing circuits in the Conference.

At Cincinnati the prospects are cheering—Sixth street is crowded every Sabbath with a large and very interesting congregation. Brother Stockton is not only drawing a great assembly, but I may venture to express myself,—one of the most intelligent in the city. Well does he sustain his reputation as one of the most pious, liberal, and eloquent ministers in the West. He lives and breathes in the pure element of christian love; and this being the great theme of his pulpit efforts, its heavenly feeling will be infused into his congregation, which no doubt will result in a powerful revival of religion. Spring is already opening with its music of birds and fragrance of flowers: the sower has gone forth bearing precious seed, and soon he will return, doubtless ladened with golden sheaves. Let Sixth street support her minister in his efforts, and it will not be long before a larger church will be demanded for its great and increasing congregation.

George street Mission has erected her large church of which I made mention in your paper some time ago, forty by sixty-five feet, a monument and an ornament to the cause of Methodist Protestantism. The basement is neatly finished in which they now worship; and the upper room is progressing to completion. I do not know of a basement room more convenient and better finished, and enjoying a freer circulation of pure air. Brother Dalbey has increased the membership to seventy-two. Lively and prosperous is George street Mission, and I do not know, from what I can learn and have observed, of a field of labor more promising for a rich and golden harvest.

Elm street Mission is still marching forward in its career of usefulness. Here they have had an interesting revival under the labors of Rev. T. Finkbine, and W. Warrington. Peace and love unite the society in sweet and tender feelings. Not a jarring string interrupts their harmony The number of members is now ninety-four, & the future bright and cheering.

In Cincinnati there are in progress several interesting and powerful revivals. Our Methodist Episcopal, Presbyterian, and Baptist brethren, have taken in several hundred members, and the gracious work is still spreading and increasing in interest,

I would remark, in conclusion, that if the ministers of the Methodist Protestant Church would engage more fully and energetically in the great work of saving souls—if they would bring all the energies of their minds and bodies to the accomplishment of this purpose, great and glorious success would crown their efforts. Brethren, we have been slumbering too long; the harvest has been great and promising, inviting us to put in our sickles and reap abundantly, yet we have been satisfied with gathering a few sheaves, and some of us, unfortunately, have not of late added a solitary star to adorn the crown of our immortality. Come, let us rally our strength, getting first the missionary fire to glow and burn in our own hearts, and go forth in the strength of God and a righteous cause, to sow universally the seed of divine truth, and we shall reap the fruit of our labors.

From my own observation, and from what I have learned from several undoubted sources, there is, apparently, a concerted effort made by our enemies to retard the success, and prevent the triumph of our free and righteous principles. Though villified, abused, and opposed in a manner that would have better suited the dark ages of the world than the enlightened era of the nineteenth century,—let us return good for evil; yet at the same time, let us go forth energetically and uncompromisingly, and by the help of God plant our banner, and rally around its sacred folds, in every section of the country. It is this that we want, this that we must have to ensure our success—great and practical piety, the principles of love displaying themselves in our actions and words, and burning in our hearts; and glowing, fervent, continuing zeal in the promulgation of heavenly truths, and the righteousness of our cause. The season is inviting; hundreds are inquiring into the nature of our government, and inviting to fields of promised usefulness. Let us be active, then; and remember that an advantage lost, an opportunity to do good neglected, can never be recalled with the same prospect of success. Strike, then, "while the iron's hot."

West Milford, Va., Feb. 3d, 1848.

BR. BASSETT: For the first time since Conference, I take up my pen to let our worthy President and the rest of the friends of Zion know how we are getting along on Clarksburgh Circuit. I got to my appointed field of labor in about nine days after the adjournment of Conference. Preached my first sermon the second day after my arrival. From that time to the present, with the exceptions of the last twelve days I have been trying to attend to the regular labors of the Circuit, but have labored a great part of the time in considerable pain. About the time I came home from Conf., I was attacked with the Erysipelas, which first made its appearance on one of my limbs; it continued to spread, and made its appearance on other parts of my body, as well as my hands, producing great soreness and pain. I was compelled to stop traveling for a while. I am now under the Doctor's hands and am mending tolerably fast. I think from appearance I shall recover before a great while and be able to resume my labors.

As it regards the state of the church here, I would just say it is not as prosperous as I would wish to see it. It does seem to me that some of our church members on this circuit do not prize religion as highly as they should. But while some of our members are cold and indifferent, and some a little like the Laodicans neither cold nor hot, we have others that are trying to work out their salvation with fear & trembling. If this was not the fact it would be a bad chance for the church in time of a drought.

Our second Quarterly Meeting for the present Conference year commenced the fifteenth day of February, on the waters of Ruting Creek. Bro. Walker from Buchanan Circuit was with us, and preached with life and energy. Several of the unstationed ministers of the circuit were in attendance with us, and appeared to get into the spirit of the work. At this meeting we had a pretty good state of feeling among the members. Our lovefeast was a good one. During the meeting two came forward as seekers of religion, but did not profess to get converted. With the exception of one or two classes. I think we have peace all round the circuit. My prayer is that God would revive his work.

Yours in Christ, H. REGER.

Extract of a private letter to Br. T. Potter, dated Pittsburgh, Jan. 10. 1848.

"Yesterday evening, I preached for Br. Robinson, in Allegheny. A good work there. About a dozen seekers forward to the altar of prayer, and among them one Indian.

BR. BASSETT: The Lord is powerfully reviving his work in Fairmont. We will give the result when our meeting closes.

Truth.

Truth nestles in the delicate flower of the valleys, and sits sternly on the rugged cliff; she dwells with the pebbles of the brook, and presides among the starry hosts; she whispers in the breeze, and thunders in the storm; she is the spirit of the warbler's song, and the soul of the hurricane's blast; her dominion defies the power of the microscope in the minutiæ of creation, and the expanded view of the telescope among the mighty and the distant. But beautiful is the transition of Truth from the material to the immaterial—from the physical to the spiritual. By her instructions manifested in the former, the soul is disciplined and enabled to look upward to the presiding Genius of the Universe—to draw the curtain, and see and feel the realities of the timeless future—and to discover the laws of the Divine Government, conformity to which is indispensable to the triumph over the woes of time, and the highest enjoyment of the soul in eternity.—Herald of Truth.

WATER IN LEAD PIPES.—The associate editor of the Christian Citizen, published in Worchester, Mass., in noticing his recovery from a severe illness, says:

"As it may be a benefit to our readers, we take this opportunity to state, that the sole cause of all the illness we have suffered during the past year has been the use of water pumped from a well through a lead pipe. With almost every particle of food and drink we have taken into our system for more than a year, we have taken by this means, small particles of one of the worst mineral poisons; and the result has been days and weeks of the most intense suffering. In some constitutions this poison does not act for a long time, and upon some no ill effects are observable for years. yet we think the risk is too great to justify any one, who has regard for his health, or that of his family, to use water that has been in contact with lead. A friend of ours has entirely lost the use of his hands from the same cause, and been unable even to hold a pen for more than five months: and we could cite similar cases. We trust however, that a word to the wise will be sufficient."

MOBILE AND OHIO RAILROAD.—A railroad from Mobile, Ala., to the mouth of the Ohio river, has been in contemplation for a year or two past, and a charter for it has now passed the Alabama Legislature, 78 to 13. It is an immense undertaking, and though it would be exceedingly profitable if the country through which it passes were thickly settled, it can be scarcely sustained while the country is filling up.

WESTERN REGORDER.

PUTNAM, OHIO:

Thursday, February 24, 1848.

The Zanesville Courier has intelligence by Telegraph that Hon. John Q. Adams, was struck with paralysis on the 21st inst. whilst in his seat in the House. Both Houses at once adjourned.

The Courier by the same medium, has further intelligence that a treaty of peace has been concluded with Mexico. Hope this is true.

☞ New Subscribers this week, 7. Discontinuances, 3.

☞ The post office address of Rev. J. B. Peat, publisher of the Secred Melodeon, and Superintendent of Richwood Circuit, Ohio District, is Scioto Bridge, Delaware co., Ohio.

☞ Our Dutch brother hopes that our readers will excuse any defects in his orthography, and that "de breachers" will give none the less heed to his sage counsels.

☞ A meeting of the Board of Directors of the Muskingum county Bible Society, is announced to be held this evening, at the house of Mr. Fillmore, Zanesville.

☞ The weather has been remarkably mild for many days past. The verdure begins to appear, and if we only lived in Frogdom, we should have music plenty.

FIRES.—We think it remarkable that so few disasters by fire have occurred during the present winter season, now so near its close. Incendiarism, we trust, is on the wane.

☞ We direct attention to the prospectus of a Daily paper to be issued from the office of the Pittsburgh Christian Advocate, during the session of the General Conference. We think it an excellent idea, and have no doubt that the enterprise will be well sustained.

FOR OREGON.—In the last number of the W. C. Advocate, is the announcement of two itinerant ministers of the M. E. Church, who have reached the western frontier of Missouri, and are in waiting to join the first company of emigrants for the Territory of Oregon. They are anxious to set off early in the spring.

ARRIVAL.—The Steamship Hibernia, reached New York, a few days ago, having left Liverpool on the 30th ult. Considerable distress for want of food in the west of Ireland, is reported. Long lists of failures of business houses, in various cities of Europe, are published. The prices of breadstuffs in England, had still father declined, but the price of cotton had somewhat advanced.

INTERESTING MOVEMENT.—At a recent meeting of Protestant ministers in Cincinnati, Rev. Mr. Nast, of the M. E. Church, observed: "We have a little band, a noble band of Christians soldiers—converted Roman Catholics, who can give a rational account of their conversion from popery to Christ; and could we take fifty of these, and make them the nucleus of a new church or society in the center of the city, by the blessing of God, we would shake Romanism among the Germans." A movement was immediately commenced for the erection of a German Catholic Methodist Episcopal Church of Cincinnati. An appeal is made in the W. C. Advocate, for help.

☞ The letter of our correspondent J. B. P., will be read with interest. The Ohio District is looking up. M. P. affairs at Cincinnati, in quite an encouraging state. We have been for months thinking it a hard case, that numerous as are our friends at the Queen City, we cannot have a Cincinnati correspondence. Strange as it must appear the letter of Br. P. is the first regular announcement we have had of the arrival of Br. Stockton in Cincinnati. For full six months we have been looking for some promised sketches from the pen of Br. S., but we apprehend that the state of his health, the fatigues of his removal from Philadelphia, and the labors of his present charge, have made it inconvenient for him to communicate here tofore.

"THOUGHTS OF AN ITINERANT," &c.—By Rev. L. R. Reese. We gave some notice a few weeks ago, of this excellent little publication. Our copy, the only one we know of in the west, has since been read by our friend, Rev. C. Springer, who, on returning it to us said, 'That book ought to be circulated.' We have just met with the following notice of the work in the Lutheran Observer, (Baltimore.)

This is a sensible, well-written book, on important theological and practical subjects; the style is chaste, vigorous and lucid, the arguments clear and conclusive, and the general tendency is to promote sound theologicel views, ecclesiastical efficiency, and personal piety. The Rev. Mr. Reese, the intelligent and worthy author, deserves well of the church in general, and especially of the Methodist Protestant branch of it, for preparing a work so well suited to the times, and particularly to his own communion, and so happily adapted to advance the cause of evangelic doctrine and evangelic piety. We hope his book may meet with a ready sale, and be extensively read. We are glad he has taken up the subject of the sacraments and given them the prominence which they merit in such a connexion.—His discussion on Baptism is very satisfactory; that on the Supper also so far as it goes, but we should have been pleased if the writer had dwelt more fully on it.—As to that part which has more particular reference to his own ecclesiastical connecion, we say nothing, as we do not feel competent to form a correct judgment, and would always refrain from meddling with the internal policy of sister churches, especially when that policy does not involve fundamental principles.

Those who wish to be supplied with this book will call at the Methodist Prot. Book Concern, S. Charles st., Baltimore.

Proposed College.

Whilst our brethren of the Muskingum Con. who have designed to respond to the article of Br. Hamilton, in reference to the establishing an M. P. College in this District, have been delaying to attend to this matter, others not of our denomination have been looking upon the enterprise, with some interest, and expressing views favorable thereto. Take the following from the last number of the Family Quarto, conducted by Rev. Mr. Brown (O. S. Presbyterian minister,) of Zanesville,

A NEW COLLEGE PROJECTED.—The Protestant Methodists, in this quarter, are moving for the establishment of a College, under their denominational control. This is right. Education and religion cannot be safely separated; and this being the fact, there is no other way, but for the different donominations to march up to the responsibilities which belong to them respectively in this matter, and provide for the education of those among them, who prefer a training under the auspices of their own church.

The quarterly conference of the Zanesville Circuit of the Protestant Methodists, recently in session in Gratiot, Licking county, passed some spirited resolutions on the subject, and recommended the villages of Gratiot and Brownsville, as either of them a suitable location for such a college.

A Common Thing.

Nothing is more common than the reception of letters commencing thus:

MR. EDITOR,—When I reached this Circuit, after the rise of the last Conference, I found things in a wretchedly low state. The members were cold and formal, and the interests of Zion were languishing. But by the blessing of Providence things are now looking up. I went to work in good earnest. Our congregations are wonderfully increased, the membership are lively and active, and the prospects are bright and cheering, &c., &c., &c.

Now in all such cases, we feel a strong disposition to rejoice at the good fortune of the neighborhood in securing so valuable a 'builder up' of broken down walls, and admire the judgment of the Executive by whom he was appointed to this wretchedly languid circuit or station.

Yet we hesitate to publish such statements, and not unfrequently run our pen through these preliminaries. We do this first, because we respect the feelings of the brethren who have preceded the writers, and secondly because these statements give an air of egotism to the communications, which sometimes do injustice to the writers themselves. It is always pleasant to us to hear of increase in church membership, revivals of religion, and so forth; but we respectfully suggest to brethren that this old stereotyped form of preliminary observation be henceforth banished from the columns of the Methodist Protestant. It seems surprising to us that so many brethren should at the close of their careers give us encouraging accounts, and after a few months, some new-corner be called upon to write that when he reached the circuit, every thing was at a dreadful low ebb. We allude to no particular brother in these remarks. The objection to this habit has frequently arrested our attention, and we write it out at this time, because it might never be written, when fewer would consider it a personal reference.—Methodist Protestant.

U. S. CONGRESS.

Thursday, Feb. 10, House.—A peace memorial from the New England Yearly Meeting of Friends, was presented by Mr. King of Massachusetts, who moved that it be printed and referred to Committee on Foreign Affairs, and supported his motion by a speech. The motion to print was opposed by Mr. Cobb of Georgia, and Mr. Henley of Indiana, but finally carried, by a vote of Yeas, 93; Nays, 83.

Ohio Legislature.

Tues. Feb. 8, House.—A bill was passed, to amend the act for the support and regulation of common schools. This bill provides that colored children may be taught in the common schools the same as white children, provided no objection was made by any white citizen of the District. Yeas,—44. Nays,—18.

Thurs. 10, SENATE.—A bill was passed to erect the new county of Auglaize. Yeas,—24. Nays,—11.

REVIVALS IN THE LUTHERAN CHURCH.—We rejoice to learn by the Lutheran Observer, (an excellent religious paper published at Baltimore,) that revivals of religion are in progress in various sections of the country, amongst our brethren of the Lutheran denomination. One, of the most interesting character has taken place at the Wittenburg College, Springfield, Ohio, of which an account is published by Dr. Keller, the President of that Institution. He says:

"This letter leaves us in the very midst of a precious season of revival. During the recess between Christmas and New Year we held a protracted meeting, and had preaching every morning and evening. On Friday before New-Year, we observed the day of humiliation and prayer appointed by the General Synod, as we could not hold it on Monday. During these exercises we were kindly aided by our brethren Ritz, Howbert and Helwig. The church was very much revived and edified, but apparently only two, out of the church, became anxious about their salvation. But last week, unexpectedly to us, the operations of the Spirit manifested themselves among the students in the College. Towards the close of the week the anxiety among the students became so general and deep, that we were obliged to suspend the regular exercises of the institution, and attend to the spiritual interests of our pupils. And before the week closed, seven of our students rejoiced in the hope of acceptance with God. A number among the students and in the congregation are still anxious, and we have preaching and other exercises every evening, and confidently expect an enlargement of this good work. Never did I see a work more purely that of the divine Spirit than this. We stood amazed as we approached the College several times, to hear the cry of distressed souls, and the exultations of the converted, and to see students, who a few days ago were indifferent and hard-hearted, now leaning upon their fellow students speaking with joy of the love of Christ, and begging the impenitent to submit to God!—Never since I have been engaged in this difficult enterprise, have I received a more striking token of God's favor than this, and for which I would be more unfeignedly thankful.

If it be asked whether we used the Anxious Bench? I would reply, to be sure, when it was necessary. In some of our meetings at College every seat in the room was that of an anxious person. In the church we give an opportunity to all persons who desire spiritual counsel, to present themselves at a particular seat, that we may know who they are; and that we may have an opportunity to converse with them. Every year's experience and examination of the Bible, and the constitution of the human mind convinces me more deeply of the fact that persons under conviction of sin ought to be specially and personally conversed and prayed with. And those who oppose this method of dealing with anxious souls, I fear, have either had little to do with awakened sinners, or have become careless about the conversion of souls."

In the same paper is given a further account of this season of gracious visitation, by a student in the College, and candidate for the ministry. He says that of the 39 students that room in the College edifice, only two are non-professors, and that every evening and morning, the voice of prayer is heard in every room of the building!

News of the Week.

DEATH IN THE MINES.—We learn from the Pottsville (Pa.) Free Press, that John Jackson, a boss in the mines of Messrs. Mann & Williams, at Mt. Laughfee, was so severely burned by an explosion of sulphur, that he died on Saturday night last. Jackson was about 40 years of age, and was a native of the County Durham, England, where he has a wife and six children.

SINGULAR FATALITY.—James Abbott, of Franklin, (Me.) an old man of 80, was recently killed by the falling of a tree in that town, which he had cut down, and a young man named Leander Wass, of Columbia, was killed a day or two afterwards, from the same cause.

EARLY.—Maple sugar was made in Norwich, (Vt.) from sap drawn from trees on the 1st of January.

MELANCHOLY ACT.—The Pittsburgh Eagle says that Mr. Isaac Chapel, of Washington, (Mass.) during a fit of sickness, got up at night, and jumped into a well, where he was found dead the next morning. He is supposed to have been delirious from fever.

FATAL ACCIDENT.—On Saturday last, a man named Bisby, a machinist of Boston, in attempting to get into a car at Newton Corner, after the train was in motion, missed his hold, fell, & was mortally wounded.

FATAL ACCIDENT.—A little boy, named John Griffin, was almost instantly killed on Saturday, in Boston, by the falling of a body of snow upon him, from the roof of a house.

EXCLUSIVE ASSEMBLIES.—Major Noah, in his Sunday Times and Messenger, says that the only real exclusive assemblies in New York are our aristocratic churches. "When we pass by them on Sunday, and see the servants waiting outside, while their masters and mistresses are worshipping within, we think that possibly the thing may be reversed in the next world, when the masters may have to stand outside."

The Illinois and Michigan Canal is progressing rapidly to its completion, and it is said that before the resumption of a lake navigation, boats will thread the entire line.

METEOROLOGY.—The mean temperature of the month of January, at Burlington, Vt., was 28° it being the warmest January within the last ten, years.

The Senate of Indiana have passed a liberal charter for the Cincinnati and St. Louis Railroad.

A HARD CASE.—Mr. Zebulon Paine, who was convicted in November, 1846, of having procured the burning of a barn, and sent to the Massachusetts State prison for eight years, has been pardoned by the Governor, after serving fourteen months of his term, and has returned to his family,—his complete innocence having been established by the confession of a boy of 15 years, by whose false testimony Mr. P. was convicted. What recompense can society make to Zebulon Paine?

MELANCHOLY CASE OF DROWNING.—We learn, from the Norfolk Courier, that Thomas Perry, a venerable seaman, of between 60 and 70 years, a native of Wales, England, accidentally fell overboard and was lost during the heavy blow, between 12 and 1 o'clock on Saturday morning, from the schooner Evelina, of that port, while she was running up the harbor.

SERIOUS ACCIDENT.—We learn from the Howard District Advocate, that Mr. Rudolphus W. Crapster, living near Cookesville, met with a serious if not fatal accident, on Monday of last week. In endeavoring to save his wagon and horses from being crushed by the fall of a tree which he had been cutting, he was struck on the breast and stomach, crushing him to the earth. His physicians entertain no hope of his recovery.

A Hard Case.

A Mr. Paine, of Massachusetts, who was convicted in November, 1846, of having procured the burning of a barn, and sent to the State Prison for eight years, has been pardoned by the Governor, after serving fourteen months of his term, and has returned to his family,—his complete innocence having been established by the confession of a boy of 15 years, by whose false testimony Mr. Paine was convicted. The boy lived with the owner of the barn, and was himself arrested for the burning, and admitted as state's evidence.

It may be impossible to make Mr. Paine full atonement for the injury done him; but we think the Legislature of Massachusetts should do something in such a case. Whatever damage he may have suffered in a monetary way, at least, should be made up to him.

By the way, the occurrence of such cases as the above has done more than perhaps any thing else, to strengthen the present movement in opposition to capital punishment. There was a time when arson was punished with death in Massachusetts; had Mr. Paine been hung upon false testimony, no restitution could have been made to him by society. Therefore it is that so many advocate the substitution of imprisonment for life for the present penalty, in cases of conviction for murder.—Sat. Ev. Post.

THE U. S. ARMY. 1847.—We have before us the official report of the organization of the regular army of the U. S. for 1847:—

The grand aggregate, 30,866. The division, as follow: General staff, 86; medical department, 58; pay department, 13; military storekeepers' 17; corps of engineers, 143; topographical engineers, 36; ordinance department, 634; three regiments of dragons, 3 526; one of mounted riflemen, 1,181; four regiments of artillery, 6,700; sixteen regiments of infantry, 18,312; a regiment of voltigeurs 1,151. The report is dated "Adjutant General's Office, Washington, Nov. 30, 1847."

HOGS PACKED IN CINCINNATI.—The number of hogs now packed says the Merchant's Exchange Reporter, is 450,000! The packing has not yet quite ceased, and the probability is that the number will be even greater than that. There is reason to believe that in three-fourhts of the country towns the number packed is also greatly increased. The great cause of this is doubtless the quantity of Indian corn, and the condition of the corn market. A large crop, and the cessation, to great extent, of the foreign export are the great causes of the increase of fatted hogs. If this state of things continues, the supply of hogs for market will be large for several years to come.

A FATAL TEST.—William Ditch, of St. Louis, killed himself recently by drinking a few drops of the oil of bitter almonds, to prove it was not poisonous; which oil was used by a distiller in the manufacture of liquors, Thomas Cole, the distinguished landscape painter, died on Saturday at his residence, near Catskill, New York.

TELEGRAPH OPEN TO CHARLESTON, S. C.—The telegraph was opened yesterday to Charleston, S. C., and communications were sent and received for the first time. Thus another link is added to the chain of telegraphs now threading the U. States, and another additional source of receiving news in advance by the annihilation of time and space.

☞ The Wilmington (Del.) Gazette, of the 11th instant, says the Breakwater Telegraph is in operation as far as Delaware city. The poles are up beyond Dover, and we believe the wires also.

LEAP YEAR.—Our readers are aware, we presume, that the year we have just entered is leap year. Every fourth year contains, by the calendar, 366 days, one day being added to the month of February. The calendar of the Roman Emperor, Julian, made the year 365 and one-fourth days. It was found, however, that there were some minutes less, which, in the course of centuries, had made a difference in the astronomical equinox of about ten days. Pope Gregory XIII, in 1782, corrected this error by suppressing ten days in the calendar; and to prevent such a discrepancy in future, he established the rule of adding one day every four years. This is why it is called Leap Year.

RUSSIA.—The Cholera.—A letter from St. Petersburg, of the 3d of January, represents the cholera as being much less malignant than it was in 1831 and 1832, and as becoming weaker in its attacks as it advances northward. It was expected at St. Petersburg, and every preparation was made to meet it. At Moscow, from the 5th to the 11th ult. there were 119 cases, and 54 deaths. In the eastern portion of the empire, the governments of Kasan and Orenburg have suffered most. The Cossacks of the Oural have also been great sufferers. After acting for some time on the two provinces, the malady has extended to the North and West, and gained the centre, in which last portion of the empire Touir has suffered the most, having had 782 cases, and 246 deaths.

At Kalouga there have been 78 cases, and 37 deaths. At this time the disease is raging in the western provinces bordering upon Turkey and Gallicia. It makes the same eccentric movements as in 1831. Thus having once entirely ceased at Orel about the middle of November, it has again made its appearance there with fatal effects. Hitherto, the eastern quarters have, next to Caucasus, suffered the most cruelly. It is said that the Russian army in the Caucasus has sustained numerous losses, and even the mountaineers themselves have not been spared. —London Globe.

TERRIBLE RAILROAD ACCIDENT.—A telegraphic despatch to the Philadelphia Bulletin, dated Reading, Feb. 12, 1848, says:—"A distressing railroad accident occurred last evening near Schuylkill Haven, caused by the breaking of the truckle axle of a freight train locomotive. The locomotive and part of the train were thrown off the track, killing a Mr. Lynch, of King Spring. Three others, names not ascertained, were dreadfully scalded. One of them, it is feared, will not recover."

DISTRESSING ACCIDENT.—The Charlestown (Va.) Free Press states that Mr. Charles McCormick, an old and wealthy citizen of Clarke co., was so dreadfully burned by falling backwards into the fire, lately, that he died from the effects on Thursday last. Being too feeble to extricate himself, he lay in the flames until assistance came to hand.

LAMENTABLE OCCURRENCE.—Mrs. Lanman, of Norwich, (Ct.) widow of the late Judge Lanman, was burned to death on the 11th inst., by her clothes taking fire at the grate. She was about 70 years of age. She left four children by a former marriage, of whom Park Benjamin, Esq., is one. Among the poor and needy, her death will be sincerely mourned.

Lamentable Occurrence.

Correspondence of the Louisville Courier.

St. Louis, Feb. 6, 8 P. M.

It is my painful duty to apprise you of a most unfortunate and lamentable occurrence that took place to day, which resulted in the death of Mrs. Sullivan and her daughter. They had been attending the funeral of a friend, and when on their return home, the horses in their carriage by some means became frightened, and dashing off with great violence were soon beyond the control of the driver. They rushed into Chouteau's Pond, and before any assistance could reach them, Mrs. S. and her daughter found a watery grave. This sad casualty has shrouded in gloom the many friends and acquaintances of Mrs. S.

Death from an Avalanche.—A man, name unknown, was so injured by a fall of snow from a roof at Boston, that he died at the hospital.—His skull was fractured. The only paper of recognition was a letter signed Thos. Vealey.

Sad Accident.—Mr. Samuel Francis Davis, son of Hon. J. W. Davis, who is about to depart on the mission to China, being present at the launch of a flat boat, on the 31st inst., in Indiana, was struck by a falling timber. The blow killed him instantly. His age was 23 years.

Jewish Congress.—A company of reforming Israelites were to meet in the course of the last month at Berlin, Prussia, to discuss questions relative to the reforms of which Judaism may be susceptible, in accordance with the wants of the age.

Fire.—Theatre Burned.—On Thursday morning last, about 2 o'clock, the building attached to the Neil House, in Columbus, Ohio, the upper part occupied as a theatre, by Mr. Lennox, and the lower part as stores by Messrs. A. D. & L. P. Preston; Faxon, Smith & Co., and by Mrs. Snowden, was discovered to be on fire. Before the flames could be arrested, the upper part of the building was consumed. During the fire, a man named Fisher fell through one of the floors and was considerably injured. Lyman King was so seriously injured by falling timbers that he was not expected to live. A boy was also injured.

Small Pox in Marion, Ohio.—Russell A. Knapp, Esq., late editor of the Marion Union, O., died on the 31st ult., after a few days' illness, with the prevailing disease there, the small pox. His mother, Mrs. Malinda Knapp, also died with the same disease the day before.

Destructive Fire at Nottingham, Md.—We learn by a letter from Nottingham, Prince George's county, Md., that on Friday night last there was quite a destructive fire in that village. It originated in the back part of Mrs. Margaret Fowler's dwelling, which was entirely destroyed, together with nearly everything she owned, including furniture and clothing. It then extended to Quynn's meat-house, which was also destroyed, with the warehouse adjoining, containing 43 hogsheads of tobacco. Dr. Tailor's stable was also burnt, with a buggy and 100 bushels of oats, and a loft filled with hay. It also extended to Rollin's old house, but was extinguished before much damage had been done.

The Illinois Canal will be completed and ready for use on the 1st of April instead of 1st of May, which has hitherto been the earliest day mentioned.

The Largest Church in the U. S.—The first African Church, (Baptist,) Richmond, is the largest body of communicants, in the Union, being "two thousand four hundred and seventy." The other churches of the same denomination in that city, report in addition "two hundred and sixty-eight" colored members. Total number, 2,728. —Sabbath Recorder.

Lake Erie Open.—The steamer United States left Buffalo on Tuesday afternoon, with a full load of passengers and freight.

Population of Buffalo.—A census of Buffalo, lately completed, shows the total population to be 40,521.

Distressing Casualty.—We learn from the Cambridge (Md.) Chronicle, that Thomas C. Norman, a youth residing near Salem, in that county, was killed on Saturday week, by being run over by a cart which he was driving.

True Benevolence.—A number of excellent young ladies of Albany have formed a new Sewing Society, the object of which is to provide clothing, at this inclement season of the year, for "bare possibilities" and "naked realities."—Knickerbocker.

A Regretted Death.—The Philadelphia papers announce the death of John White, President of the Delaware Coal Company, and one of the most respected and beloved of citizens.

Drowned.—The body of a man, named Samuel Lee, aged about 45 years, was found drowned, imbedded in the ice in the Wissahicon, near Philadelphia, on Monday. He had been missed for some weeks.

Sunday Travelling.—Instead of the day boats on the Hudson, on Sunday, being crowded, as formerly, they have withdrawn entirely, the proprietors finding that it did not pay. So also with the Railroad Companies between Albany and Buffalo. On the Housatonic road the cars do not run on Sunday, and on the Western there is but one train on that day. The directors of the road between New York and Philadelphia have given notice to the post-office department that after their present mail contract expires they will not run their cars on Sunday. So states the Rochester Advertiser.

Church Burnt.—The Albany Argus reports the destruction on Thursday last, of St. Peter's Catholic Church, under charge of Rev. Mr. O'Reiley, at Troy, New York, including an organ which cost $17.000.

Suspending Telegraphic Wires.—Several attempts have been made to suspend the wires across the Mississippi to St. Louis, all of which have to the present proved unsuccessful.

Temperance Railroads.—The stockholders of the Fall River (Mass.) Railroad, resolved, with only one dissenting voice, that no spirituous liquors be transported over the road.

Jewish Disability.—It is said that Baron Rothschild, member of Parliament elect, from Westminster, being a Jew, will not take his seat in that body until Lord John Russell's bill becomes a law.

The Western Seamen's Friend Society.

A visit to our city of Rev. R. K. Leonard, the Agent of the W. S. F. Society has afforded us an opportunity of obtaining the following items of information.

The above association is located in Cleveland, O. Solomon Fitch, Esq. of Cleveland is President; Rev. Wm. Day, Corresponding Secretary; Rev. R. K. Leonard, Superintendent of Missionary operations. Two members of each of the christian churches in Cleveland compose its Executive Committee. It has been in operation some 8 or 10 years, but in a limited sphere until within the last year. Its object is the salvation and moral elevation of no less than "one hundred and twenty-five thousand" sailors and boatmen on the 'Western waters.'

Ten or twelve years since, many of our vessels on lake Erie were employed to carry provisions to the starving scattered inhabitants along the shores of lake Michigan; but now more than twenty steamboats of the largest class, thirty propellers, and a fleet of some one hundred and fifty ships, brigs, schooners, &c. are insufficient to remove to our eastern market the surplus produce of the vast north west. Not only our lakes, but our rivers and canals are threading their way into every part of our rich valley, and bearing to every man's door almost the ship and the shipman; and every neighborhood must feel the influence of the waterman, be it good or evil. This department of Domestic Missionary labor is highly interesting and important, nor do we think that the ministers, churches, and philanthropists will overlook its importance whenever and wherever the subject may be fairly brought before them. While we send the gospel to the dark-minded heathen far away, we should not forget the multiplying thousands of heathen, by whose hands our commerce is carried forward. —Family Quarto.

The Morality of Romance.—In the Boston Atlas there is a sketch of the famous or infamous Eugene Sue, from the pen of Mr. Poore, who has spent several years in Paris, and who was during that time the correspondent of the Atlas. A single paragraph illustrates the private morality of this teacher of freedom and morals. "Not many months since, Sue used to visit almost daily one of the most fashionable ladies in Paris, Madame de———, and hold forth in her richly furnished boudoir on the condition of the poor. 'Do you ever relieve their distress?' asked Madame de———, at the close of one of his harangues. "To a trifling extent," answered Sue; "but though my gifts are small, they are always cheerfully bestowed—I give one-fourth of my income in alms." That afternoon as he left Cafe de Paris, where he had been eating a costly dinner, an apparently old woman, clad in rags, prayed for charity. "Go away," was the stern reply. "But I am starving, give me a single copper to purchase bread with." "I will give you in charge to the police, if you thus annoy me." "You will," said the beggar; "and yet Monsieur Eugene Sue, you are the man who writes about the misery of the poor—you are the working-man's champion—you are——" "Who are you?" exclaimed Sue. "Madame de———," was the reply, and the disguised lady stepped into her carriage which was in waiting, leaving the novelist to his reflections."

Fire at Wellsville.—We learn from the Patriot that: On the 2d, the steam flouring mill of S. Peppard; formerly of Pittsburgh, was wholly burned. The building, which was a large three story frame, the machinery for grinding, the steam power, &c.,—all of which, in quality, being equal to any in the country, and calculated to manufacture 100 barrels of flour every 24 hours,—were completely destroyed in less than an hour and a half from the time of the alarm. Loss estimated at $7.000.—Insured to the amount of $4 000. Judging from circumstances, it is presumed that the burning of this property was the work of an incendiary.

Pittsburgh and St. Louis.—The Atlantic & Mississippi Telegraph operators exchanged compliments on Tuesday night from Pittsburgh to St. Louis. The distance is 900 miles and the difference of time found to be "one hour and seven minutes" from Philadelphia to St. Louis.

Mad River and Lake Erie Railroad.—The Dayton Journal states that about 250 hands are now employed in completing this road to Springfield. The winter has been unfavorable for the work, but the road will be finished to Springfield about the first of June, should things work well from this time out.

The Safe of the A. N. Johnson has been found some thirty yards from the location of the boat, at the time of the explosion. Every thing in it was safe and sound—a large sum of money, papers, &c.

The Season in Northern New York.—A beautiful full grown butterfly made its appearance at the residence of William B. Farlin, Esq., Warrensburg, Warren County, on the 27th of January. It was first discovered flattering at the widow, in a room where only an occasional fire had been kept during the winter, and immediately removed to a warm, sunny parlor to be fed every day with fresh sugar, in the absence of nectar of flowers, and to repose at night under a glass. The insect appears to be in perfect health, and bids fair to go through the season a link between the year and the new.

Missing Vessel.—The schooner Inez, Martin, sailed from Portsmouth, N. H., on the 12th of April last, on a fishing voyage, and was probably lost in a gale near Sable Island, about the 29th of that month. The names of her crew were as follows: Robert Martin, master, aged 22; Edward Martin, father of master, 52; Ebenezer Yeaton, 51; Wm. Amezeen, 48; John H. Gerrish, 33; James Baker, 33; Samuel Hall, 15; and Ira Matthews, 26. They were all residents of Newcastle, except Matthews, who belonged to Rye.

Female Accoucheurs.—Dr. Gregory, of Boston, has published a long and strong pamphlet advocating the education and employment of female accoucheurs.

Pittsburgh and Connelsville Railroad Company.—The Pittsburgh Post, of Wednesday, says:

"The difficulties that have heretofore threatened to destroy the prospect of this company, and a connexion of this city with Baltimore, are now happily removed. The directors elected for last year, and who claimed, for a time, that the Connellsville charter had been surrendered, and the stock transferred to the Ohio line, have all resigned, and the affairs of the company are now under the control of the friends of the Connelsville route."

Jean Paul gives this first rate advice, which, if complied with would prevent much embarrassment and misery: "Girls should talk to their female friends as though a man overheard them, and with men as though girls were present."

Distressing Casualty.

It is our painful duty to record this morning the sudden and unexpected death of a most amiable and worthy lady, Mrs. Kneass, well and favorably known in this community as Mrs. Elizabeth Sharpe, whose sweet warblings still live in the memory of all; and whose spotless character has ever held itself beyond reproach. As the steamer Fashion was leaving Piatt's Landing, three or four miles below Rising Sun, on Saturday about 2 o'clock, P. M., and as Mrs. Kneass was leaning against the iron rod which supported the guard-rope, protecting the stairway leading to the hurricane roof, forward of the wheeling house, the rod broke, and she was precipitated into the boiling stream below,—the angry waters closing forever upon one whose existence was the life of many, who knew her but to love her. Her fall was from the hurricane deck, and a gentleman informs us that she passed directly over his head, and struck the guard below, splitting it by the concussion, and it is probable that death's work had been done before she reached the water. The scene which followed upon this truly heart-rending casualty, cannot be described. A sister, (Miss Clara Bruce,) and an affectionate husband, who were near to behold the work of death without the power to stay it, were paralysed, mind-shattered, and well nigh heart-broken by the suddenness of this awful and unexpected blow. A scene that a moment before was all gaity and animation, changed itself to one of saddened gloom, and the eye that sparkled with the brightness of joy and mirthful vivacity, now glistened with the tear of sorrow. Few of the many that witnessed this sorrowful scene that will not recall it with a tear in days to come.

Immediately upon the accident being announced which was almost instantly with its occurrence, the boat was backed, the yawl sent out, and every effort made to recover the body, but in vain! Upon meeting the Pike No. 7, the Fashion rounded to, and the party that but a short time before were journeying on in bright prospects, and high hope, retraced their steps in sadness and in gloom.—Cin. Com., Feb. 4.

Liabilities of Public Carriers.—In the Court of Common Pleas, at Boston, Mr. Alfred Moore has recovered $163 in a suit against the Eastern Railroad Company, the value of a trunk and contents lost by the plaintiff's wife somewhere between Lynn and Hallowell, Me., while travelling over the road. The fact that a placard notice of the company, that they would not be liable for over $50, having never been seen by the plaintiffs, rendered it a nullity.

Famine in the West of Ireland.—In a letter addressed to the Rev. G. C. Moore, of Philadelphia, written by a friend in the country of Sligo, on the 4th of January last, the following fearful and heart-sickening picture is drawn:—

"It is a most merciful part that the good people of the United States are taking of the poor of this district. The people of this part of the country are really worse off than they were this time twelve months ago. Then there were large sums of money collected for them, and food purchased and distributed, but now nothing is done for them. The poor houses are filled to suffocation, and thousands of creatures, half naked, are running about, having nothing to eat but raw turnips, which they steal from the fields! The very worst apprehensions may be conceived as the consequences of such food. We may well expect another season of fever and disentery, and swelled limbs! I humbly pray that the Lord may crown your efforts, to save the poor of this district, with signal success. Your mission there (to America) was a truly charitable one, and your calls have been most nobly responded to."

Centenary M. E. Church.—The New York Commercial states that on Sunday morning the Bishop and Rev. Mr. Griffiths, the minister appointed by the Episcopate, presented themselves at the Centenary Methodist Episcopal Church, in Brooklyn, and made a formal demand for the admission of Mr. Griffiths into the pulpit. This the trustees refused, on the ground that the question of right was carried up to the higher Court, whereupon the applicants withdrew.

Drunkards' Fate.—Three drunkards, of Boonton, Morris County, N. J., have been frozen to death by exposure during the winter; another has died there of delirium tremens.

Beginning to Flow Back.—The Christian Intelligencer says: "We have learned with surprise and delight, a Foreign Missionary Society in the Sandwich Islands, has sent to the American Home Missionary Society a donation for planting the gospel in our own West. Think of it! The converted heathen of yesterday, rallying to bless our own land."

Niagara Falls Suspension Bridge.—The Iris, of Saturday last, says: "It is with great satisfaction we have noted the increasing evidences of preparation for work on the Suspension Bridge. A force has been collecting on the ground during the past week, and lumber and other materials are going forward. Shanties and shops are beginning to spring up, and many tokens of business are now visible. It is a great work, and requires extensive preparations to carry it on economically. We are informed that it is the intention of the Engineer to erect a foot-bridge as soon as the weather will permit—perhaps by the first of June—using the cables and other materials designed for the main edifice in suspending a temporary platform for the convenience of conducting the works. The temporary structure will be of extreme lightness, vibrating in the wind and bending under the weight of the loads which will cross it."

Fatal Accident.—Thomas King was killed by the falling of a large quantity of gravel earth upon him, at Philadelphia, on Thursday.

By a royal ordonnance of the 26th of January the exportation of potatoes from France remains prohibited till the 31st of July next.

The earnings of the prison of Massachusttes last year amounted to $126 more than the expenses.

Bachelors.—A bill has been introduced into the New York Legislature, to levy an annual tax of $7 on every bachelor between the ages of 28 and 56. The following is this singular provision:

"Sec. 3. Every unmarried white male, unconvicted of crime, of "good health and fair physical proportions." and who is between the ages of 28 and 56 years, shall be deemed an old bachelor."

Widowers, of over two years standing, come under its provisions also.

A bill was introduced into the Kentucky House of Representatives, on Saturday last, and referred to a select committee, "to levy a specific tax on 'old bachelors' over thirty years of age, the proceeds to be applied to the support of indigent widows and orphans."

Missionary Enterprise.

American Missionaries in one or two instances have adopted a course, that if followed out will show more and richer fruits in the next twenty years, than has yet been effected by all the exertions of Christian zeal among heathen nations. Instead of offering, by itself, a religion which they do not understand and will not accept, they give the light of science, they prepare the soil for a better seed, and with the pure truths of Christianity they receive the ability to comprehend them. Perhaps it is not generally understood in the United States, that a new sect has started into notice with the nineteenth century among the Mahometans. This sect might be termed Unitarians of Islamism. They rev ere Mahomet as a great man, the founder of a new era, a reformer among those who sought the truth, but no prophet. His inspiration they deem to have been such as has from the beginning of the world, and may occasionally to the end of it—be felt by men of great talents and ardent zeal for the improvement and benefit of the race. They hold the Koran to be the best of books, the very best ever written perhaps, but not absolutely without a touch of human fallibility, "or," say they, "there could be but one opinion about it—there could be but one sect of true believers." They are strong advocates for toleration and the diffusion of knowledge. They have a great admiration for those texts of the Koran which declare that "If a man be just to all; refuse not alms; loveth his brother, say his prayers, and believe in one God, the Creator and Judge of souls—it will not be asked at the day of Judgment whether he is Jew or Christian, but by his good works shall he pass as by a bridge over the abyss of death and enter into the joys of Paradise." Another text which frequently is engraved over the doors of their school houses and runs in a cornice of gold letters on an azure ground, around the council room of one of their princes, "recommends the sons of Ismeal to seek knowledge wherever it can be found, even to the borders of China." This belief must have a beneficial effect. It is in its nature destructive of bigotry and persecution. There is a tradition current throughout the East, that 1849 will be fatal to the political supremacy of the Musselmen. The educated classes profess to despise it as absurd, and the lower ranks think little about it; but it has numerous believers in the intermediate grade. May not the Moslem superstition be a dim reflection of the same theory Miller has deduced from the Scriptures? The tradition has remained, but the source and authority of the belief is lost in obscurity. They use their knowledge most perversely, but the Moorish priests know more of the Bible than many suppose. When they are reproved for their polygamy—the menial condition of their women, their merciless wars, and their political slavery—they invariably bring up the Bible to prove all this the natural order of things, and these abuses divine institutions. Show them the better dispensation in the New Testament, and then like all bigots they stop believing. They will accept as sacred and true only so much as tallies with their cherished dogmas—the rest is chaff and of no account.—New York Sun.

A Casualty.

The Bellfonte Whig says that an accident of a serious nature occurred to the mail stage from that place, on Friday evening last. When on the top of the Nittany mountain, one of the horses commenced kicking, by which the whole team became frightened, and dashed off at full speed, down the mountain—the driver being unable to hold them. When they had proceeded about half a mile the brake gave way suddenly, precipitating the driver, who was bearing upon it, from the box. He fell upon and between the wheels, the hind wheel passing over his left arm. In falling he threw the reins to a young man upon the box with him, who succeeded in catching those of the near side, by which, however, the latter was enabled to so direct the team as to avoid a ledge of rocks, at a turn in the road.—When near the public house of Mr. George Taylor, the wheel horses fell, and after having been dragged by the leaders, about two hundred yards, the whole were stopped by the passengers, of whom there were three inside of the coach. The driver, William Welker, was found lying where he had fallen, insensible, his head severely injured and his arm broken above the elbow. He has been in a very dangerous situation for several days, but is now in a fair way of recovery. The wheel horses are much injured, but no further damage was sustained.—Saturday Gleaner.

An old proverb says: "Talent shakes the bush. Tact catches the bird."

Chicago and Galena Railroad.—Contracts for the first twenty-five miles of this road have been entered into. The whole distance is about one hundred and sixty miles. It will be a very important link in the means of travel and transportation at the West, and makes a good beginning for the great proposed Oregon and California Railroad.

Freedom Indeed.—The States of New Hampshire, Rhode Island, Delaware, Iowa, Connecticut, Vermont and North Carolina, are not only in a healthy and prosperous condition, but are entirely free from debt! Go thou and do thou likewise, say we to each of the remaining sisters. There is no yoke which galls and cripples any government so much as that of debt.—New Y. Sun.

The King and Queen of the Belgians have arrived at Windsor Castle on a visit to her Majesty.

Variety.

The Interior of the Earth.—A fact of great interest, says Professor Silliman, has been proved by the borings for artesian wells in the suburbs of Paris, namely, that as we go towards the centre of the earth, the temperature increases at the rate of one degree for every fifty feet. That the whole interior portion of the earth, or at least a great part of it, is an igneous portion of melted rock, agitated by violent winds, though I dare not affirm it, is still rendered highly probable by the phenomena of volcanoes. The facts connected with their eruptions have been ascertained and placed beyond dispute. How, then, are they to be accounted for? The theory prevalent some years since, that they are caused by the combustion of immense coal beds, is perfectly puerile, and entirely abandoned. All the coal in the world never afford fuel enough for a single capital exhibition of Vesuvius. We must look higher than this; and I have little doubt that the whole rests on the action of electric and galvanic principles, which are constantly in the earth. We know that when certain metals are brought together, powerful electric action is evolved, and a light is produced superior even in effulgence to the splendor of the sun. Now if a small arrangement produces such results, what may we not expect from the combinations of these immense beds of metal to be found in the earth? Here we have the key to all the grand phenomena of volcanic action. An illustration on a small scale may be seen in the thermolectric battery made of zinc, bismuth, and antimony, packed in a box and varnished. In this, heat is evolved below, while the top is cold; and here we have the very case of the volcano: in the interior a fiery ocean is heaving its surges, while its peak is capped with everlasting snows.

Rise of Prelatical Bishops in the Church.—Jerome who lived so early as the 4th century, explains the whole matter in a few words. Jerome is universally acknowledged to have been one of the most learned and pious of the Fathers. Hear his testimony on the sameness of the office of Presbyter and Bishop, and the origin of Diocesan Episcopacy. It is found in his commentary on Paul's Epistle to Titus, chap. 1, volume 1.

"These things," says he, after referring to certain passages of Scripture, "we have brought forward to show that with the ancients, Presbyters were the same as Bishops. But in order that the roots of dissension might be plucked up, a usage gradually took place, that the whole care should devolve upon one. Therefore, as the Presbyters know that it is by the custom of the church that they are subject to him who is placed over them, so let the Bishops know that they are above Presbyters rather by custom than by the truth of our Lord's appointment, and that they ought to rule the church in common."—Presb. Adv.

Air-Coffins.—We yesterday examined a sample of newly invented "patent air-tight coffin." The materials is a combination of iron and other metals, said to be impervious to air and indistructible in its nature. The lower part of the coffin is cast in one piece, having a projecting tongue around the upper edge which fits into a groove in the lid, and is made air-tight by means of a composition which hardens in a few hours—the air is then pumped out by means of an air pump, leaving the body in a vacuum, and, therefore, not liable to decomposition. We were informed that the bodies of two sisters, who died in New York, were preserved to be sent to Havana in one of these, and after two months, were as fresh as ever—a bunch of roses in the hands of one of them was also perfectly preserved. The coffins are finished to represent mahogany, and a casual observer would scarcely recognise the difference. There is a moveable pannel in the lid by which the face of the corpse may be viewed thro' a glass plate. This invention will be valuable in many cases.

GENERAL CONFERENCE.
PROSPECTUS

Of a Daily and Weekly Pittsburgh Christian Advocate during the session.

We propose to issue, during the approaching session of the General Conference in this city, a "Daily Pittsburgh Christian Advocate," half the size of our present large Weekly, containing full, accurate and authentic reports of proceedings, speeches and documents, together with all other matters of general interest occurring during the time.

TERMS—For a single copy, 'one dollar.' Any person sending us five subscribers shall be entitled to a copy for his agency; and one sending ten subscribers shall have three additional copies at his disposal. Advance pay, in all cases.

It is supposed that the General Conference may continue in session six weeks—that being near the length of the last two sessions. Should it continue longer, the Daily will be furnished to the end of the session at the above price. If it adjourns sooner, the Weekly paper will be substituted to make up the deficit of the six weeks of the Daily—allowing one Weekly for two Dailies. Thus, if the General Conference adjourns in five weeks, subscribers to the Daily will receive three copies of the Weekly to compensate for the six Dailies wanting to complete the sixth week. The Delegates will be furnished a copy gratis.

Weekly Session Paper.—We will also send, to such as may prefer it, the Weekly "Pittsburgh Christian Advocate," for six weeks, during the session of the General Conference, and until the whole of the proceedings are published. Terms—thirty three cents for one copy—four copies for 'one dollar.'

It is desirable to have the names as soon as possible, that we may know how large an edition of each will be needed. The money may be forwarded by the delegates where convenient. Great care will be combined with dispatch, in both printing and mailing, that subscribers may receive authentic intelligence at the earliest possible period.

All communications to be addressed to Rev. W. Hunter, Editor of the Pittsburgh Christian Advocate, Pittsburgh, Pa. Let those who send subscribers be careful to say they are for the session paper, and whether they are for the Daily or Weekly.

We respectfully request of our Methodist cotemporaries an early insertion of the above Prospectus—a favor which we will reciprocate if ever we have the opportunity.

Any paper inserting this Prospectus, and sending a copy containing it to this office, will be entitled to a Daily during the session of General Conference.

TO THE AFFLICTED.
READ AND BE WISE.

ALL those afflicted with that most distressing disease the PILES, can obtain certain relief, and in nineteen out of twenty cases a positive and permanent cure, by calling at S. B. Johnson's Agency, Putnam, and obtaining a box of Johnson's Vegitable Pile Ointment. This remedy has been in use in this vicinity for several years. And it is admitted by all who have tested its virtues to be superior to anything of the kind ever before offered to the public. A large number of certificates, from those cured by the use of the Vegitable Ointment, could be given in proof of its virtues, but it is deemed unnecessary.

Putnam, April 17, 1848.

☞ If the sick wish a diseased stomach restored and impure blood cleansed without endangering the constitution, go to J. Deen, Grocer and Shoemaker, Putnam, and obtain a box of Dr. Le Roy's Sarsaparilla and Wild Cherry Pills which is the best family medicine now in use. So says Mr. O'Neil the Agent.

DR. LE ROY'S
Wild Cherry, and Sarsaparilla PILLS.

DR. LEROY has most happily succeeded in combining Wild Cherry and Sarsaparilla with other vegetable ingredients, so as to produce a medicine at once tonic, and purgative, the only perfect discovery of the kind ever made. Their great peculiar excellence, and that which distinguishes them from all other purgatives is, that their operation is followed by no re-action. Their unrivalled purifying and purgative properties, for which they are indebted to the essence of Sarsaparilla, and other ingredients, being controlled by their highly tonic virtues, derived from the extract of Wild Cherry, they do not strain the digestive organs into action, as is the mode of operation with other cathartics, but on the contrary strengthen them into action. Thus all other purgative medicines produce more or less subsequent costiveness, and sluggishness of the gastric juice, while Dr. Le Roy's Pills leave all the machinery of the system full of life and activity, and the bowels open and natural. "Hence," writes Dr. Cheeseman, "they are the only active purgative which I can recommend with confidence, and without alarm; for they remove nothing but what ought to be removed—neither rack, nor strain—occasion no apathy or debilitation—and leave the bowels free, open, and vigorous." But the great virtue of Dr. Le Roy's Pills—the virtue which has spread their fame over the two hemispheres with a rapidity almost miraculous—lies in their purification of the blood. Here they not only stand altogether unrivaled, but fill up the measure of desire. They at once arrest the formation of bad blood, by removing all impurities from the chyle, of which the blood is formed; and moreover keep it clean, by toning and strengthing the digestive organs, so as to be able to exclude from it all matter of an inutricious nature; and then they purify the blood already in circulation; and never cease operation until it is entirely free from every noxious particle, is full of health, life, and vigor. THE PURE CRYSTAL SPRING.

What is beauty's deadliest foe?
'Tis the still;
What sheds countless charms below?
'Tis the rill.
See it spread before the eyes,
Beauties of a thousand dyes;
O 'tis sent in full supplies,
Drink thy fill, &c.

II.

What can mar the sweetest face?
Alcohol.
What can dress it up with grace?
Showers that fall.
See them on the landscape sink,
Paint the grass and deck the pink;
Come, O come with joy, and drink.
Great and small.

III.

What can make the angry frown?
Drunkards know.
What can charm the passions down?
Streams that flow.
See the songster drink and fly,
Charming earth and charming sky;
Drinker, to the fountain hie,
Fearless go.

IV.

What can make us sick and poor?
Sots can tell.
What brings plenty to the door?
Water will.
Drink, O drink it merrily,
'Twill a glorious treasure be,
Leaving all thy stores to thee,
Growing still.

V.

What brings vice and guilt below?
Strong drink brings.
What makes streams of virtue flow?
Crystal springs.
Stay no longer at your wine,
But partake the gift divine,
Then you may in virtue shine,
Queens and kings.

"THE DRINK THAT'S IN THE DRUNKARD'S BOWL."

The drink that's in the drunkard's bowl
Is not the drink for me;
It kills his body and his soul;
How sad a sight is he!
But there's a drink which God hath giv'n,
Distilling in the show'rs of heav'n,
In measures large and free,
O that's the drink for me, &c.

The stream that many prize so high,
Is not the stream for me;
For he who drinks it still is dry,
Forever dry he'll be:
But there's a stream, so cold and clear,
The thirsty trav'ler lingers near,
Refresh'd and glad is he!
O that's the stream for me, &c.

The wine-cup that so many prize,
Is not the cup for me;
The aching head, the bloated face,
In its sad train I see:
But there's a cup of water pure,
And he who drinks it may be sure
Of health and length of days;
O that's the cup for me, &c.

A Chapter on Feathers.

MESSRS. EDITORS: Some time ago my minister being absent, I went to worship in a neighboring church* of another denomination.

When I entered this sanctuary my sight was pained at the brilliant spectacle of feathers, flowers and party colored ribbons on the heads of the female worshippers, both saints and sinners, I tried in vain to fix my attention on the minister and the holy services, which last, for both matter and manner, were truely excellent and impressive; but alas! I could neither compose nor solemnize my mind nor draw off my eyes from the strange incongruous sights around me.

When I returned home, the unpleasant impression still continuing, I observed to my friend that I was thankful that no such inconsistency was to be seen in our church, for with the exception of Mrs.———not one of our members wore a featner in her hat. "You cannot long have that to say," she replied, "for there are several professors) bonnets now in progress of making, that are to have feathers. I asked our minister what he thought of them, and he told me he would like to see a feather in the head of every lady in his congregation." This reply struck me dumb. I really love my minister and have ever looked upon him as remarkable for piety, talent and consistency, and I could not imagine why such a sight could give him pleasure. It must be some useful association thought I. What can it be? It cannot be that of a flock of parrots! A mischievous, imitative chattering tribe; good for nothing but to make a noise and show. It cannot be the ostrich, the most improvident, silly, and void of natural affection of all the feathered race. It must be the sweetsinging little canary (as my minister is fond of singing) but alas! I recollected that to sing acceptably to God it must be done with 'the spirit and understanding." At length, after puzzling my head for a long time to find an excuse for my minister, I finally came to the charitable conlusion that my friend mistook him altogether. From the character of the man, I imagine he said something like this: So completely am I absorbed in my great work that were a tall feather topping from the head of every lady in the church, I should not be aware of it. This conclusion satisfied me with him, but the folly and inconsistency of my sisters still lie heavy at my heart. Lightness is some how associated in my mind with feathers. "As light a vanity." As light as a feather" we often hear. To be light of foot is well; but light of head is not so; the sex want ballast not sail, to keep them steady.

Now in this day of wonder, when our waters are covered with steamboats; our roads with rail cars and telegraphic wires are being stretched from Maine to the Pacific, by the inventive genius of man, what has his "better half" invented for the good of her race? Can she do nothing but deck and adorn her own person? which, with the poet, I deem "when unadorned, adorned the most." Shall woman still contend with man for equality of rights while she ingloriously sits down to weave cob-webs, gossamer, and the like, to invest her person? I admire the plumage of feathered tribes as much as any one; and I adore the wisdom and goodness of Providence which adapted such a dress to their natures and habits; but I deprecate the cruelty and injustice which unstrips them of their only clothing and transfers it to human beings who stand in no need of it. If a woman is comely she does not need any such artificial help: but if not they can do her no good. There is a tasteful simplicity and even elegance of dress, which I think entirely consistent with the spirit of the gospel, "The ornament of a meek and quiet spirit." You may be unable to tell what a lady had on who was dressed in this simple elegant style one hour after you left her, but the impression on your mind is that of neatness, modesty, adaptation and comfort. An intelligent gentleman falling into her company will address her rationally, respectfully, "wisely," while one decked out in the gaudy costume of fashion will be treated to nothing but lightness and frivolity and thus be deprived of that "feast of reason and flow of soul" which refreshes the heart like a cordial. Messrs. Editors are you not standing on the watch-tower of observation? And do you not see even the house of God changed into a flower garden—a menagerie? Blow ye the trumpet of alarm then! Use all powers of eloquence to arouse females of the church to lay off their heathen dress and come up to the help of their fathers, husbands, and brothers in the great work of improving themselves and the rising generation in matters of substantial benefit to all, and you will confer a lasting favor not only on them, but many an humble worshiper in God's house who is offended at these intrusions of fashion into holy places,

The First Prayer in Congress.

The subjoined extract of a characteristic letter from John Adams, describing a scene in the first Congress, in Philadelphia, in September, 1774, shows very clearly on what power the mighty men of old rested their cause. Mr. Adams thus writes to a friend at the time:

"When the Congress met, Mr. Cushing made a motion that it should be opened with prayer. It was opposed by Mr. Jay, of New York, Mr. Rutledge, of South Carolina, because we were so divided in religious sentiments—some Episcopalians, some Quakers, some Anabaptists, some Presbyterians, and some Congregationalists—that we could not join in the same act of worship. Mr. Samuel Adams rose, and said, 'that he was no bigot, and could hear a prayer from any gentleman of piety and virtue, who was at the same time a friend to his country. He was a stranger in Philadelphia, but had heard that Mr. Duche (Dushay they pronounced it) deserved that character, and therefore he moved that Mr. Duche, an Episcopal clergyman, might be desired to read prayers before Congress, to-morrow morning.' The motion was seconded, and passed in the affirmative. Mr. Randolph, our President, waited on Mr. Duche, and received for answer, that if his health would permit, he certainly would. Accordingly, next morning, he appeared with his clerk, and in pontificals, and read several prayers, in the established form, and then read the Psalter for the seventh day of September, a part of which was the 35th Psalm. You must remember this was the next morning after we had heard the rumor of the horrible cononade of Boston. "It seemed as if heaven had ordained that Psalm to be read on that morning."

"After this, Mr. Duche unexpectedly to everybody struck out into an extemporary prayer, which filled the bosom of every man present. I must confess, I never heard a better prayer, or one so well pronounced. Episcopalian as he is; Dr. Cooper himself never prayed with such fervor, such ardor, such correctness and pathos, and in language so elegant and sublime, for Congress for the Province of the Massachusetts Bay, especially the town of Boston. It had an excellent effect upon every body here. I must beg you to read that Psalm, If there is any faith in the Sortes Virgillinæ, or Sortes Homericæ, or especially the Sortes Biblicæ it would be thought providential."

Here was a scene worthy of the painter's art. It was in Carpenter's hall, in Philadelphia, a building which (we learn by a recent anucle) still survives in its original condition, though now sacreligiously converted, we believe, into an auction mart for the sale of chairs and tables—that the forty-four individuals met before whom this service was read.

Washington was kneeling there, and Henry, and Randolph, and Rutledge, and Lee, and Jay; & by their side there stood, bowed in reverence, the Puritan patriots of New England, who at that moment had reason to believe that an armed soldiery was wasting their humble households. It was believed that Boston had been bombarded and destroyed. They prayed fervently "for America, for Congress, for the Province of Massachusetts Bay, and especially for the town of Boston;" and who can realize the emotions with which they turned imploringly to heaven for divine interposition and aid! "It was enough," said Mr. Adams, "to melt a heart of stone. I saw the tears gush into the eyes of the old, grave pacific Quakers of Philadelphia."—Newark Daily Adv.

Lawyers and their Clients.

Most of my readers are familiar with the French fable of the lawyer dividing the oysters, and taking the contents for his own use, while he left the shells to his clients. I have never seen this more admirably illustrated in actual incident, than in the great Sibbald case lately decided at Washington city.

Mr. S., who resides in Florida, set up a claim of damages growing out of the occupation, abuse and consequent injury of his plantation, sawmills &c. by the United States troops during the Seminole war. He made a demand on Congress for two millions of dollars. Congress refered it to the Secretary of the Treasury department, who committed it for examination to the Controller, who appears to have examined it with great care and diligence, awarding Mr. Sibbald fifteen thousand dollars as the measure of his damages. This amount, however, the head of that department adjusted to twenty-six thousand dollars.

This it might be supposed was cutting down to some purpose, but it is nothing to what remains. Mr. Sibbald had engaged Daniel Webster, Geo. M. Dallas, J. McP. Berrien and David Russel, professionally to press his claims on the Treasury Department, under an agreement to pay six thousand dollars each, as fees for the service. Russel as junior Counsellor was left, I suppose, to do the actual labor, and as soon as the award was made obtained a warrant from the Treasury for the sum of twenty-four thousand dollars, putting that amount in his pocket, as the professional service.

Mr. Webster, it is understood, has not received any share of the fees, and probably it is the same case with the rest.

Mr. Sibbald will prove a lucky man if the allowance of this claim does not bring him nearly twenty thousand dollars in debt to the remaining three lawyers. He does not even get the oyster shells.—Cist's Adv.

Biographical.

Written for the Western Recorder.

MRS. JANE HAMER.

How strange are the ways of death? How fearful are his doings? The stern king of the tomb is, emphatically, no respecter of the circumstances of life. With moveless countenance and measured tread he pursues his gloomy march, and victim after victim swells his train. There is no circle too holy to forbid his entrance; no hearth stone so pure, but that it may be stained with tears of bereavement, while its joys fly affrighted at his presence. The wail of the smitten spirit checks not his advance; the quivering of the heart, as it instinctively shrinks from his chilling touch, delays not his search after the cord of life that he may snap it in twain. All classes and conditions alike fall beneath the sweep of his scythe—sharp and keen. He comes for the young, the aged go him. See yonder aged one. Mark his appearance. Years have piled their weight upon his head until his brow is inclined earthwards, as though he were seeking a grave, or watching his lessening and feebler steps as they point to that narrow abode—the home of the dead. His few and scattered hairs, polished to a silver lustre by the hand of time, are mementoes of other days. His forehead is ploughed into many furrows. His eye is dim and humid. His heart beats fainter and slower. His hands are tremulous. A few more steps and he stumbles—a faint effort at recovery and he falls. Thus it is with age. But, if there is hope in the fall, what matters it whether it be in the morn or in the evening of life? To spend years in preparing for this event, and then to take up the march for the spirit-land, conscious of a happy admission, is, indeed, joyous. To leave behind a long track of light, showing the path the spirit trod, the latter part of which track blends with the light of heaven is a prize to be valued. A memory perfumed with all the fragrance of humble and devoted piety is far better than a jewel legacy. Thus it was with, and such is the memory of, her whose name stands at the head of these remarks, and whose death is the occasion of them. Living, she was aged and infirm—dying—her only legacy is a happy memory.

JANE, daughter of RALPH and PRUDENCE RUSHTON, was born in Rossindale, Lancashire, Eng., on the 21st day of June, A. D. 1787. When but two and a half years of age, and, consequently, before she could have any just or adequate conception of the value, or experience, sensibly, aught of the care arising from the relation, she was deprived, by death, of her maternal parent, whose departure from this life was marked by most signal christian triumph.

From infancy the mind of our deceased sister was religiously inclined. At quite an early age she manifested a more than ordinary regard for, and interest in, spiritual things. Her mind at this time appears to have been deeply impressed with a conviction of the insufficiency and transitory character of the pleasures and delights of the world, and of the vastly superior nature of those things pertaining to, and connected with, the well-being of the soul. This conviction was not inert: it was accompanied by a lively sense of the weight and importance of the corresponding obligation, and of the necessity of a present compliance with the requirements of the divine will. Hence, even at this early period in life, a fondness of meetings for the purpose of spiritual improvement, and a faithfulness in attending them, became distinguishing traits in her religious history. She ever loved the class room.—Yet, though in this manner under spiritual training for so long a time, she did not, formally, unite with the church until the latter part of the year A. D. 1807, being then in the 21st year of her age. She now became a member of the society of Methodists. In this, once approbious, name she gloried, not for its own sake, but because of its hallowed associations. And during the forty years of her wilderness history she never exchanged it for another; but wore it untarnished, yea, burnished it to a brighter lustre by the consistency of her life.

On the second day of February, A. D. 1809, she was united in marriage to Mr. JOHN HAMER; who still survives to mourn her absence in all the loneliness of bereavement. For the space of 39 years she lingered by his side, a friend and counsellor; thus long she bore with him the burdens, trials, and difficulties incident to a life of change and vicissitude, until, at length, the tie which bound her to him, and each to the other, was severed upon an anniversary of their union.

A number of years after sister Hamer assumthe name, and professed the religion of Christ, a controversy arose in several of the Methodist societies located in the district of England where she then resided with her husband and family.—This controversy was founded upon the serious fact of a series of accusations being preferred against a respectable number of the Conference ministers: (such as assuming the church property to themselves—apeing the manners and ceremonials of the state establishment—forbidding the education of any except their own sons in the Conference schools—mal-appropriation of the missionary funds—and, finally, denying the customary quarterly tickets to such, as through poverty, were unable to give anything towards their support:) after it had progressed for some time with still increasing warmth and feeling on both sides, nearly a majority of the members, and a respectable number of the preachers, seceded from the "old body;" as the ministers against whom the above grave charges were alledged, and their adherents were familiarly termed. The seceders assumed the name and title of the "Associated Methodists;" (the Methodist Protestant Church of England.) Of these were our sister, her husband, and family. Yet in the midst of the excitement she preserved her soul unspotted; the storm blowed over, but left her principles unshaken. In communion with the seceding branch she remained until her emigration to this country in company with a part of her family.

Leaving her native land on the 14th of February, 1842, they disembarked at New-York on the last day of the following March. During the voyage the symptoms of the disease which, in connection with rheumatism, finally, laid her prostrate, began to manifest themselves. The path of life then commenced its continued decline: and death took her by the hand to lead her to the tomb.

Without tarrying in New-York the family journeyed westward: and and on the 11th of April came to Brighton, Beaver County, Pa., from whence it has not since removed. On the 4th of July, 1846 for the last time, until borne thence to her grave, sister Hamer crossed the threshhold of her own door. Before this, however, she united with the Methodist Protestant Church; the precise time of her union with us the writer has not been able to ascertain. The disease which now pressed heavily upon her was peculiar and mysterious, defying the skill of her physician to form a satisfactory diagnosis of it; it progressed insidiously, and mocked the power of medicines and the attentions of affection.

About eighteen months since the writer first became acquainted with her. From that time until the period of her decease, with a few exceptions, he visited her weekly. In these visitations pleasure and profit were as prominent as duty. Much has he learned from her which, he trusts, will make him wiser and better. Shortly after his acquaintance commenced, rheumatism, with all its dread achings, was added to her sufferings. In a few months she became entirely helpless: her hands being drawn through the power of the pain out of their natural form.—Frequently, at this period, her pain was most intensely excrutiating. Strength gradually failed, and with it the power of distinct speech. Yet in the midst of all her pain and suffering she was never known to utter a murmur or complaint.—Patience seems to have chosen her as an especial favorite. And her patient enduring of suffering was the result of a firm and unwavering confidence in the rectitude of the divine providence. She never doubted the goodness and justice of God; but was ever willing to kiss the rod with which she was smitten. During her most violent paroxysms of pain and bodily anguish she did not forget her Savior, but preserved her confidence in him inviolate. Oftentimes she has been heard in the silence of night engaged in prayer; many a season of holy communion she had thus; or, as her failing voice would permit, she would strive to sing the words of some old, but fondly remembered hymn, associated with scenes far off in her native land. The writer invariably found her mind calm and tranquil: willing to suffer, yet longing to be with Christ.—Having a deep and humiliating view of her own inability and unworthiness, Jesus was, to her, all and in all. Her hope clung to the cross and refused to be taken from thence. Occasionally the shadow of a passing cloud would rest for a short time upon her mind, ruffling the smoothness of its calm and confidence, but prayer ever secured the influence of the Holy One to chase it away. Her only fear was that she might be tempted to repine; against this she kept a jealous watch; and from it she was preserved.

On Sabbath, the 30th ult., her appetite failed; this was foretold by her physician as a symptom of approaching dissolution; it was, therefore, dreaded by her family, but in the end it proved too true. Her pain increased and became indescribably intense. Conscious of the nearness of death, she remarked to her daughter who was standing by, "I'm gone," and smiled with the thought. On Tuesday the 1st inst., her pain ceased and she became easy and tranquil; her speech soon failed; her breathing grew shorter and fainter; and on Wednesday morning she fell asleep in Jesus. Without a groan or a struggle she passed away in the 61st year of her age.

She has gone, but the recollection of her many virtues is, indeed, as a balm to the smitten hearts of the bereaved ones, and may serve as an incentive to those who trod with her that path the steps of which were so pleasant to her spirit.

As a mother—she was tender and careful, watching with a prayerful and jealous interest the happiness of her children. Her heart yearned over them in Christ.

As a wife—she made home desirable and clothed it in all its peculiar attractions. She knew, and knowing, performed all her duties.

As a friend—her memory is indeared to all who knew her. Warm and generous in her feelings she had many friends. Her charitable disposition led her to seek for extenuating circumstances where all appeared dark and forbidding. Where others frowned and repelled, she would woo and intreat and thus reclaim the offender.—Pure in feeling and disinterested in principle she judged others by herself, and, therefore, did not think evil.

As a professor of religion—her whole character is embodied in the true meaning of that much abused, and often ill applied term—Christian.—Humble, pious, and devoted; mild, peaceable, and gentle; prayerful, meditative, and grateful; her life was a happy comment upon the truth, beauty, and excellency of the religion of Christ—her death an evidence of its supernal power.—Like Mary she sat at the feet of Jesus—like Dorcas she was full of good works, "adorning the doctrine of Christ her Savior." She loved the church and all its offices and institutions.—Her attachment for class meetings assumed the tone of a passion. As a consequence she "grew in grace."

THE OHIO CULTIVATOR FOR 1848

Published at Columbus, Ohio, on the 1st and 15th of each month, M. B. Bateham, Editor and Proprietor. Terms, $1 per year—four copies for $3—payment invariably in advance.

THE fourth volume of the Ohio Cultivator will commence Jan. 1st. 1848. This paper has now become so well known that it is scarcely necessary to speak of its character, or to allude to the commendations it has received from the Public Press and other sources. The editor is determined to spare no pains on his part to sustain the reputation of the work, and make each succeeding volume more useful than the preceding one. Our motto is "upward and onward;" and the object of the "Cultivator" is not only to collect and disseminate valuable facts and information relating to practical agriculture, but to inspire 'Farmers' with more just conceptions of the dignity of their profession; to induce them to cultivate the 'Mind' as well as the 'soil,' and thus elevate themselves to that position which it is their duty and privilege to occupy as 'American Agriculturists," in this age of Progress and Improvement.

With its very large list of contributors, numbering over "two hundred," most of them practical farmers in the West, the pages of the "Cultivator" will contain the results of "Experience," as well as the teachings of "Science;" and being written or selected with special reference to the climate, productions and farming of Ohio, this paper will be found more valuable than any other for the farmers of this and the adjoining States. It will contain the latest intelligence of the "Markets" of this country and England; notices of the weather and the crops; descriptions (with engravings,) of improved implements, machines, &c.; instructions in gardening and fruit culture; rearing and management of domestic animals; construction of farm buildings, fences, &c.; and a "Ladies' Department" devoted to household affairs, useful receipts, &c.

The friends of Improvement in Ohio and adjoining States are requested to obtain and forward subscribers for the Ohio Cultivator. Remember that the price is only "seventy-five cents" each, when four or more names are sent by one person. All subscriptions must commence with the first number of the volume; a complete index is furnished at the end of the year. Specimen numbers and a prospectus will be forwarded to all who desire them.

☞ "Now is the time to subscribe!" Letters with remittances may be sent by mail at the risk and expense of the publisher. Address,

M. B. BATEHAM.

JEREMIAH ELDER, P. M.

A NEW AND IMPROVED VOLUME FOR 1848!

SEARS' PICTORIAL FAMILY MAGAZINE,

Established for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge:

A Monthly Miscellany of moral and instructive information, embellished with numerous ENGRAVINGS of the various subjects treated of in the course of the year. Published monthly, in parts of 48 large octavo pages each.

PROSPECTUS FOR THE FIFTH VOLUME.

For four years the Pictorial Family Magazine has been before the American public, and it is peculiarly gratifying to the Publisher to know, that his efforts to do good through its medium, have met with the universal approbation of the public & the public prints, wherever it has found its way. It is now too firmly established upon the broad foundation of public confidence, to require a great flourish of trumpets to proclaim its continued existence, or the tricks of 'puffery' to allure the people to its support.

To those who are acquainted with the Magazine, it is unnecessary to speak of its design & merits; to those who are not, we will make a brief statement of both. The original design of this work was a noble one, and worthy of all praise. It was intended as a vehicle for conveying solid information to that class of citizens whose circumstances denied them the privilege of drinking abundantly

☞ Price two dollars per annum—three copies for five dollars, or ten copies for fifteen dollars—invariably in advance, as no Numbers are sent out until the subscription is paid.

☞ Thus far we have gone on steadily advancing in public favor, the sure indication of which has been a healthy increase in our subscription list. That we shall double our present number of subscribers in 1848, we have little doubt, for we intend doubling our efforts and increasing very greatly the value of the Magizine. We shall engage the very best engravers to be found. We have now some plates, illustrating a great variety of subjects, in progress for our new volume, that will be equal to anything that has appeared in the country.

☞ EVERY MAN HIS OWN AGENT.—All remittances of money for this Magazine must be sent to us free of postage. Those wishing to take our Magazine, will please write direct to us, enclosing a year's subscription ($2,) or the price of a club (ten copies for $15,) in funds current in the State where they reside. This simplifies the whole matter of subscription, perfectly, and makes the communication, between publisher and subscribers, as it should be, direct.

Agents Wanted in every town and county throughout the Union, to sell SEARS' NEW AND POPULAR PICTORIAL WORKS, universally acknowledged to be the best and cheapest ever published, as they certainly are the most saleable. Any active Agent may clear FIVE HUNDRED or a THOUSAND DOLLARS a year. A cash capital of at least $25 or $30 will be necessary. Full particulars of the principles and profits of the Agency will be given on application, either personally or by letter. The postage must in all cases be paid.

Please address, ROBERT SEASS, Publisher.

Selected Poetry.

From the Cincinnati Gazette.

JOHN QUINCY ADAMS.

Old Man! we hear thy name
Borne now on every breeze;
And what awarding tongues call FAME,
Each voice to thee decrees.
How hast thou earn'd the meed
For which, through suffering years,
Men pant, and toil, and sweat, and bleed,
Baptised in wo and tears?

How?—Hast thou stoop'd to court
The plaudits of the crowd,—
And then, with demagogic report,
Rung out their praises loud?
Or, with deceitful speech,
Life's social ills to cure,
A mutinous hate against the rich
Stir'd up among the poor?

Hast thou, on fields of blood,
Mixt cannon belching flame,
Thy sword dipt in the purple flood,
And traced with it thy name?
Or on the far, deep sea,
Thy nation's flag below,
Blent it with shouts of victory,
Death-groans, and curses? No!

Not from the death-strewn wreck,
Not from the gory plain,
Com'st thou, a mortal name to deck
With trophies of the slain:
But as man's truer friend,
The Champion of the Right—
Unknown to swerve, untaught to bend,
In mind's sublimer fight.

Much hath thy honored name
Borne from the carping few,—
But vainly slanderous tongues defame
The upright and the true:
Thou in ten thousand hearts
Art cherish'd here, this day,
Which ne'er the politician's arts
Could win, or warm, or sway.

And why? For this: that thou,
When mark'd, and under ban,
Hast scorn'd to threatening Pow'r to bow,
But faced thy foes—A MAN!
And given them to know,
Though others shrank away,
One stood, to deal them blow for blow,
Where hottest was the fray.

Firm as the rooted rock—
The Bulwark of the Free;
Unquailing, whatso'er the shock—
Calm, mid the dread melee.
And now the poisoned dart,
And the red and hissing ball,
Though thrown with mightiest pow'r and art,
Harmless around thee fall.

Grumbling Professors of Religion.

It is no marvel to see men of the world dissatisfied with every thing and person about them. A different kind of conduct, on their part, would not be in character. "Men do not gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles." From a bitter fountain sweet water flows not, nor does a corrupt tree yield good fruit. "An evil man, out of the evil treasure of his heart, brings forth that which is evil." Quotations of this kind might be multiplied; but what has been said, we deem sufficient for our present purpose.

The discontent and dissatisfaction of professing Christians, however, can not be easily accounted for, on any principle of philosophy or religion. No inconsiderable portion of the class in question, are favored with good health and vigorous constitutions. They have not even physical suffering to plead in extenuation of their restlessness and dissatisfaction. Many of them, moreover, have gold and silver, houses & lands, bank stock and merchandise in abundance, so that they have not the excuse of temporal want to offer in mitigation of their unmeaning and absurd complaints. Let us follow one of these grumbletonians—if the use of that appellation is allowable—at the close of the day, to his comfortable domicil,—perhaps it would no be an abuse of language to call it a splendid mansion. He sits down moodily, evidently displeased with himself, and every one around him.—The evening meal is distasteful to him; the bread is sour; the butter is rancid; the tea or coffee is insipid, and every thing his wife happens to do or say, is improper, or in bad taste. His daughters display either too much or too little taste in dress; his sons have missed a figure in some important speculation, or manifested either too much dignity or condescension in their intercourse with their neighbors. We have thus briefly sketched the conduct of a complaining professor, as the head of an interesting family; and will now follow him into the walks of more public life to ascertain how he will deport himself there.

Of the laws of the city or state in which he resides, he complains bitterly. They are, in his judgment, unequal, unjust and oppressive. All good men should petition for their immediate repeal; and should the petition not be promptly considered and its prayer granted, the criminal neglect of our Legislators, would justify an appeal to arms. Our liberal institutions; our unequaled form of government; the perfect equality upon which our citizens universally are placed, are sheer humbugs, entirely unworthy of the regard or approbation of intelligent close-thinking men. The people, too, if our complaining professor of religion is entitled to credit, are as corrupt as our laws are defective and inoperative; and cannot be relied on, in the hour of need.—They have their price, and when the golden temptation is presented, their fidelity, to friends and country, will fly like chaff before the wind.

As a member of the Church militant, we will now introduce to the attentive reader, the Representative of the class, upon whose conduct we are animadverting. For a brief period after his admission, he behaved with considerable propriety, and gave promise of future usefulness; but alas! the ruling passion of fault-finding, ere long displayed itself, in his every word and action.—The laws and regulations of the church, called loudly for reform. To the preachers and people they gave in some instances too much, and in others too little liberty. One day they were too stringent, and another so lax as to permit flagrant transgressors to avoid the slightest punishment. The constitution, as a whole, might be considered tolerably good; but in certain particulars, was decidedly faulty. It was preposterous to the last degree, to tie down to Restrictive Rules, disinterested, talented and devoted preachers, who were conscientious and discriminating enough to think for themselves. Parties were, in this way, soon created in the Church; and the spiritual members of Christ's mystical body, who had been sincere and warm friends, made bitter and irreconcilable enemies.

Oh! what havoc such professors of religion make in Churches! How indefatigably they persue the horrid vocation of sowing discord among brethren! Their responsibility is truly awful; and such as no judicious and devoted Christian would dare assume.

The Knowledge of God.

In the order of nature, the knowledge of God is the first of our duties: in the order of grace, it is the most excellent of his benefits: in the order of glory, it is the greatest of his rewards. True wisdom consists only in knowing God, and knowing one's self, and all else with reference to God. Now Philosophy, the noblest of sciences, the most worthy of man, the most satisfying, the most proper to perfect his reason is reduced in all its branches to the knowledge of God. Logic regards the search of truth: and God is the first truth, the source of all truth, and the light that discovers to us all truth, the mirror in which we contemplate all truth. For according to a wise, and good man, "it is in God that eternal truths are seen,—and it is he who makes us to see them." Natural Philosophy shows us God in all the works of Nature. Unless we ascend to him the first cause, the preserver, the prime mover of the universe, we see nothing with the eye of the mind, we understand nothing: but are thrown into palpable absurdities. The learned tell me, that Metaphysics has for its principal object the knowledge of God in himself, of his nature, of his infinite perfections, of his providence: and next to that, the knowledge of the human soul, of its faculties, of its operations, of its free-will, of its immortality, and of all that makes it the image and likeness of God.

Again, Morality considers God as the law-giver, and the sovereign good of man: it teaches him his obligations to God and his fellow-creatures in virtue of the law which God has engraven on his heart, of the rewards he has to hope for, or the punishment he has to fear, according as he follows virtue or vice. Hence the perfect philosopher is therefore he who in all these relations knows God, as far as human reason can know him, and who rules his conduct upon this knowledge.

But without Divine Revelation how imperfect would this knowledge be?! What dark clouds does it leave on objects which it is most important for us to know! Philosophy is necessarily defective, if we separate it from Theology which is the science of things revealed. Man cannot attain, by his reason only, to the free designs which God has over him: he cannot discover what his destination is, what homage God requires of him, in short his natural lights are too obscure to instruct him in any of those things in which he is instructed by revelation, and without which he cannot attain his last, highest end.

In the beginning God gave to man the supernatural knowledge of the truths, consequent to his designs over him. But in the FALL it was lost, or disfigured, and thence forward it was a pure grace of God to restore it to those to whom it has been submitted both under the old dispensation, viz: his peculiar people, and this last (dispensation) to his spiritual Israel in Christ, through the channel of divine authority. An inestimable benefit, without which all that reason teaches us concerning God would be of no use to us: and which, as experience proves, and has shown it in every age since the fall of Adam, it is essential to reason itself, both for the discovery and preservation of the great truths that pertain to it. But again, the knowledge though obscure, but sure and infallible which faith gives us, the mind may penetrate deeply into this knowledge through the sacred pages of holy writ by adding prayer to this study: this knowledge I conceive to be experimental, which is peculiar to interior souls consecrating their energies to God: and becomes more extensive, and more intimate as we advance in the ways and love of vital godliness. It has for its object the hidden operations of grace for the sanctification of our souls, and those devotions that raise our souls to a state of entire Christian perfection. But all the knowledge we can acquire of God on earth, is nothing to that which is reserved for us in heaven. Then the veil will be removed, the clear vision take the place of faith, and "We shall know even as we are known." Then the soul will see the supreme truth: and admire the Sovereign Good to all eternity.

Oh! let us ardently ask the grace of God to know him. Let us begin here below the eternal life, which consists in "Knowing the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom he has sent." And then when time shall be no longer, and the elect of God shall be gathered into the heavenly place, one harmonious anthem shall ascend from that ransomed and glorified assembly; with cherubim and seraphim, will they sing the song of Moses and the Lamb. "Alleluia, for the Lord omnipotent reigneth."

ABOUNDING IN THE WORK OF THE LORD.

Extract of a Sermon by Rev. T. Potter, from a volume of Sermons now in press.

God is an eternal enemy to all idleness.—Among all the various creatures, that He has created, He has not made one single Idler. The Idlers among men, we meet with in the world, have made themselves such;—God, when He created them, intended them all,—like all his other creatures,—for activity, industry, usefulness!—Look along the whole chain of beings, from the minutest to the most magnificent:—there is not one do-nothing Drone of God's creating, from first to last! Survey the Brute creation: there is no Idler among them! The Animals are obliged to labor, from morning to night, to gather up the food, necessary for their sustenance.—Mark the Fowls of heaven: there is no Idler among them! The Birds are compelled to be continually on the wing, to collect the scattered nutriment, which Providence provides for them.—Explore the world of waters,—the Ocen, alive in all its depths, with different forms and sizes of organized life: there is no Idler among them! These Tenants of the sea,—which, for want of limbs, and loco-motive powers, can scarcely stir themselves,—the Oysters and Clams,—get where the rushing tide rolls, or the surging breakers sweep, that they may be kept in motion, amid the whirling waves!—The same character of activity pervades all God's works. The Rational Creation, as much as Brute Creatures, are fitted and designed for useful activity. The all-wise Creator never intended any of the human race to be idle; and if we are idle, we manifestly cross, or run counter to the end of our creation. He that made us,—made us for action, and has provided some good work for all of us to do. Nor was this superfluous. There was a moral necessity for thus furnishing us with useful employment. God had a good reason for placing us in a condition, that would call for our activity and exertions. It was a precautionary measure, to preserve us from temptation to evil, that peril our well being. He, who has determined our state of existence, was under a sort of necessity to make such an arrangement in the exigencies of our state, as would always keep us busily employed in beneficial operations; because he could not but know, that a state of idleness is half-way to Hell; that to allow us to have nothing to do, is to leave us at leisure for our eternal undoing; that if we are not engaged in doing good, we should be sure to be doing mischief.

"The Devil always finds some work for idle hands to do,"—is one of the truest lines ever penned, notwithstanding its extreme simplicity.—Christians therefore are bound to acknowledge, and to admire the goodness of God, displayed in the requirements of this Institution, that relieves them from a lack of employment, without which they would have been in a state of exposure to temptation; and that, by laying them under sacred obligations to live and labor for each other's good, and for the spiritual welfare of the world at large, has furnished them with a salutary occupation. But let the Idler know, that he is an Anomaly amid the universal active works of God! The whole universe of mind, and of matter is in motion;—all, all, besides these dronish anomilies of mankind, are on the move;—all, all,—but these unnatural exceptions,—are active,—busy, some in doing good, others in doing evil!—Angels are not idle. They are all animation.

"Their worship no interval knows,
"Their fervor is ever on the wing."—

Devils are not idle. They are all busy, "always going about." Their malice never suffers them to rest, and they know no cessation from their works of mischief.—Creation is not idle.—The stars roll on without a pause. The sun never stops. The Seasons are always passing round. Vegitation comes and goes without any interval of inactivity. The fountains of water are always on the flow. The rivers do not linger, or stay, among the green vallies and majestic mountains, amid which they pass. The Ocean, in restless activity, is always heaving its billows, rushing upon, and retreating from, the shore, in its ebbing and flowing tides.—The Spirits of the departed dead are not idle. The happy souls of the Saints in glory, worship God day and night. The damned spirits of the Wicked in Hell are always biting their chains of darkness, and are cursing their existence every moment.—Where then are Idlers? Are you, Professor of religion, idle? If you are;—if you are doing nothing to fulfill the purposes of your religious calling;—see, you are by yourself,—unlike all besides,—a shocking contrast to the whole, wide universe!—a marked, singular, shameful monstrosity, among a universe of creatures all in motion! O, pray God, that you may be aroused from your state of nothingness, by his quickening Spirit; and that you may become busy in doing his will, by doing good, and delighting to do good, to the souls of your fellow beings!

Western Sketches.

The Great American Lakes.

From the last and recent report of the Chief of the Topographical Bureau we have the following official record of the width and aggregate extent of the great American Lakes.

The great lakes of our country, which may justly be considered inland seas, and to which the inland commerce described in this report relates, are the following: Champlain, Ontario, Erie, St. Clair, Huron, Michigan, Superior. These lakes are of great depth, as well of great extent. The entire line of lake coast embraces about 5,000 miles. 2,000 miles of which constitute the coast of a foreign power.

Lake Champlain is - - - -	105 miles long.
Its greatest width - - - -	12 miles.
Its average width - - - -	8 miles.
Lake Ontario is - - - - -	108 miles long.
Its greatest width - - - -	52 miles.
Its average width - - - -	40 miles.
Lake Erie is - - - - - -	240 miles long.
Its greatest width - - - -	57 miles.
Its average width - - - -	38 miles.
Lake St. Clair is - - - -	18 miles long.
Its greatest width - - - -	25 miles.
Its average width - - - -	12 miles.
Lake Huron is - - - - -	270 miles long.
Its greatest width not including the extensive bay of Georgian, itself 120 miles long and average 45 wide) is	105 miles.
Its average width - - - -	70 miles.
Lake Michigan is - - - -	340 miles long.
Its greatest width - - - -	83 miles.
Its average width - - - -	58 miles.
Lake Superior is - - - - -	420 miles long.
Its greatest width - - - -	135 miles.
Its average width - - - -	100 miles.

These lakes may be considered as connected throughout their whole extent. Lake Champlain connects with Lake Ontario by means of the river Richlieu; the lock and dam navigation of St. Lawrence river; the Otawa river, the Rideau canal thro' Canada; and the Champlain and Erie canals of New York. Lake Ontario is connected with Lake Erie by means of the Welland canal through Canada, and by means of Oswego and Erie canals through the State of New York. Lake Erie is connected with Lake St. Clair by the deep and navigable strait of Detroit, 25 miles long. Lake St. Clair is connected with Lake Huron by the deep and navigable strait of St. Clair, 32 miles long. Lake Huron is connected with Lake Michigan by the deep and wide strait of Mackinaw, and with Lake Superior by the strait of St. Mary's 46 miles long. This strait is navigable throughout except for about one mile of its length, immediately adjacent to Lake Superior, where, from rocks and the extreme rapidity of the current, navigation ceases. These difficulties can, however, be easily surmounted by a canal of not more than a mile long, with locks to overcome a fall of about 21 feet. The only additional obstruction to this immense extent of inland navigation is in St. Clair Lake, on approaching the St. Clair strait. This obstruction consists of an extensive bar, but not of great width, over which not more than seven feet of water, in depressed conditions of the lakes, can be counted upon. From an examination of this shoal, it has been found to consist of an indurated marl, leaving but little cause of doubt that if a channel were once dredged through, it would remain a durable improvement.

Lake Champlain lies exclusively (except the strait near Rouse's Point) within the States of Vermont and New York; the former occupying its eastern, the latter its western margin. It is not considered a dangerous lake to navigate; and the principal protection which its commerce requires, is in form of breakwaters, to shelter its open harbors.

THE OREGON MISSION.

The population of Oregon is already large and is rapidly increasing; but the Presbyterian Church is behind other denominations in missionary efforts. We rejoice in being able to state that the Board of Domestic Missions have lately resolved to appoint three missionaries to this field, as soon as they can obtain the right men. This is a highly important movement, and we trust that the Spirit of the Lord will incline the hearts of some of our choicest men to offer themselves for this promising and self-denying service. The Methodists have a number of missionaries and preachers in the territory; the Baptists are also represented there; and the American Home Missionary Society have lately sent a missionary, who will be followed at no distant period by others. Our own Board have wisely determined to send three, so as to constitute without delay the Presbytery of Oregon. The following information about the country will be acceptable to our readers: Ed. P. T.

"The best information we have respecting Oregon, is gathered from the incidental remarks of travellers. From these it appears, that the land is not so good as in the Valley of the Mississippi. It is not a champaign country, but made up of series of mountains and valleys. The sections most inviting to settlers, are the Willamet Valley, and a portion north of the mouth of the Columbia river. More thorough exploration, however, is fast developing choice locations in other parts of the territory. There were, in 1843, less than four hundred Americans in Oregon; in 1846 there were ten thousand. They have mostly gone from the Western States, attracted by the healthiness of the climate. The first settlers were a migratory people, but they have been followed by a class of permanent inhabitants. This territory will eventually become rich and important—especially the Willamet Valley will become a rich farming district, furnishing provisions to the shipping on the Pacific. This territory will soon be engaged in commerce with China and India, and have a powerful influence upon the political interests of our nation. The people resemble those of our Western States in their general character. The Roman Catholics, to a great extent, now control the religion. In the Willamet Valley, in 1845, they erected four churches; and have twenty priests, besides eleven more on the way. They are said to be Jesuits, men of education, and will have great influence in every department of society. There are several Protestant ministers also, who, with exception of three missionaries of the American Board laboring among the Indians, support themselves by their own manual labor, and of course have little time for study.

The Hudson's Bay Company and the officers of government have made great efforts to keep out intemperance, but the dealers in intoxicating drinks are indefatigable and crafty in their plans for introducing the poison, and there is great danger that they will succeed. Men who go to the West, generally go to make money, and not like the founders of New England, to lay the foundation of an enlightened religious community. Just such as is the seed sown will the harvest be.

The Western Christian Journal publishes a letter from a Baptist missionary in Oregon, in which occur the following passages:

'The moral condition of this country is bad. Schools are few, books are scarce, and religious congregations are small. Oregon city is one of the most wicked towns I ever knew. Intemperance, gambling, and other vices, prevail to an alarming extent. The city has about one hundred houses and five hundred inhabitants. Multnomah is on the opposite side of the river and probably has about one-third as many houses and inhabitants as Oregon city.

In the country the Roman Catholics are the most numerous and wealthy. They have three or four houses of worship. They are generally French from Canada, who have been in the service of the Hudson Bay Company. Probably the Methodists are the next to the Papists, the Campbellites next, and the Presbyterians next. Many ministers here are laboring for their living and do but little else.'

The state of feeling in Oregon towards the United States is not altogether as filial as might be expected, considering the origin of the settlers They have a strong sense of the injustice done them by the neglect of the Home Government. Intelligent men among them are agitating the subject of an independent western empire to be made up of Oregon and California.—Home Missionary.

From the New York Observer.

A Great Effort: A Fact.

Mr. Towsley, known as 'the children's friend,' has related the following incident with great effect, when the religious feeling of a church has been fluctuating between a retrogade and onward movement:

On the banks of a stream near a small village in Western New York, a few enterprising men commenced the erection of a gigantic mill.—The frame work of the foundation extended over the current rushing at a fearful distance below. The timbers above were adjusted, and fastened in their places, until the huge skeleton was complete excepting one enormous bent, whose weight and proportions filled with misgiving even the heart of the master-builder. Every man in the village and vicinity was there to aid in the perilous 'raising.'

The platform was dark with the crowd, embracing every age, and trembled over the torrent beneath its burden. The signal was given—up the bent moved slowly, till it reached what is called 'the pinch,' about midway to its elevation. Every muscle was strained, but in vain. There was a dead pause for a moment, and stillness which made the tumultuous throbbing of hearts audible. The builder mounted the second story, and looking down with tears shouted, "lift! men! or die!" With a wilder energy they grasp the pikes for their lives; but the frame settles backward, threatening to crush the despairing mass beneath. Just then five men appeared in sight. "Help us!" cried the builder from his dizzy height. They saw the danger at a glance, and like cowards fled. The excitement had reached the homes of these fathers and brothers, and now the banks were lined with mothers and sisters, whose upturned anxious faces and lifted hands asked imploringly for help. Down, down came the bent slowly as strength failed, and all seemed over. The builder, whose nature was not particularly inclined to sympathy or pity was subdued with emotion, and in a flood of tears turning to those women motionless with fear, exclaimed, "wives, if you wish husbands, and sisters if you would have brothers to-night, come and help us!" The rush was an expression of the strong impulses of woman's nature. Each was beside her father or brother, heart beating to heart, then a shout, and one more struggle.—The bent moves—another heave and it settles to its place—a stroke of the sledge and all is safe. The heart and whole system had been strained to their utmost tension, and as the excitement passed, the whole throng sunk helpless and trembling before the exhaustion. Then followed the joyful congratulations and affectionate salutations. Some were invalids for weeks in consequence of that wasting mental and physical effort.

Every one can make the application. When the religious feeling of a community, the spiritual bent, is rising, and for want of union of strength, settles back, it crushes not body but soul, and separates in prospect the nearest relations forever. And who talks of the enthusiasm of the scene we have described, and condemns the weeping builder and excited women? And yet when half of a church are awake to their responsibility, and spirits undying, are vibrating between a glorious and a fearful destiny, while some flee from their appropriate station and seek their own pleasure, others of professed friends breathe words of caution and would stifle emotion, to avoid the appearance of a false excitement or imprudent zeal. And who may estimate the value of female prayer and effort in the building of Zion and salvation of the family circle? H.

Canandaigua, Nov. 1847.

A stranger passing through one of the mountain towns of New England, inquired, 'What can you raise here?' The answer was, 'Our land is rough and poor, we can raise but little produce, and so we build school houses & churches, and raise men.

The Bottle and the Bible.

Br. Brown: At your repuest I send you the following narrative. It may serve as a specimen of incidents of almost daily occurrence in the life of a Bethel Missionary.

I went on board of the Packet Boat in the town of R———. Just as the boat was leaving the dock, a poor, ragged, bloated, drunken boatman came staggering and reeling down the street, and as our boat was lying next the dock, he very naturally brought up on her deck. "Hal-l-l-loo there!" shouted the drunken boatman, as we were leaving the wharf. "Clare away the starn here, & let me get holt of that crooked stick; (alluding to the rudder,) I want this boat to go straight." "It's more than you can do to navigate your own craft," said the man at the helm. "Leave that stick, you green-horn," replied the new-comer, "what do you know about boating? I was a boatman on this here ditch before you was thought of." After some further conversation with the helmsman, he walked forward on deck. But it was soon discovered that the bridges across the canal were in his way. He was requested to go below decks; but refused, saying, "I can take care of myself—I know all about the bridges." I saw his danger, feared the consequences, and immediately took my station near the poor inebriate.

Soon the steersman hallooed, "Bridge a coming." My pet—for by this time he was wholly committed to my care—instead of looking out for the bridge, looked aft at the steersman, and shouted at the top of his voice, "sh-u-u-t your fly-trap; I know where the bridges are, I guess." And as he turned his head to look forward, the end of a big merciless beam was within a few inches of his devoted temple.—I caught him by the collar, threw myself backward on the deck, and by my side lay stretched out at full length, my poor boatman, He was saved. He seemed terribly frightened. His cheek turned pale, and his lips quivered, as he said, "God bless you sir!—You saved my life." I then took him by the arm, led him to the stern of the boat, threw down an old coat for a pillow, and laid my treasure away to rest. I spread him out on deck so as to give the sun a chance to evaporate some of the whisky, intending to ply my powers of moral suasion, when he had sobered off a little. He was now as submissive as a whipped puppy, and rested, not exactly like a kitten, but like an old-fashioned Shaking Quaker, afflicted with the jerks. After a sleepless sleep of two hours, he awoke, and looking around at the boat, the crew, and the passengers, he enquired, "Where am I?" "You are on the packet, bound west," was the reply. "But my boat is going east; I wanted to go east." "But you are certain going west now," said one, "and you came very near losing your life back yonder, too." "O, what liquor will do!" exclaimed the victim.

I then took my position near him, and introduced a conversation of a disultory character, on business, politics, men and things in general, and even Milerism came in for a share. Presently he lifted his dark eyes up from the ground, and after taking a regular survey of my person, said he, evidently in self defence, before attacked at all, "You are going to talk to me on temperance, haint ye?" "Well, sir, that is one of the common topics of the day. We may give it a passing notice before we are through."—"Well, now," said he, "I can jist tell you, there is no use talking that to me. I am a drunkard. I am the black sheep in the family; and you know every flock must have one black sheep." "Ah! no; I was not aware of that fact." "Well, it is so, and I am one; and my sisters have talked to me, and wept over me for years, and finally given me up for lost; and you need not try. I can't stop drinking." He was told of others who were as far gone as he, with less intellect, and far less power of resolution, who were now reclaimed and happy. "No; no; gentlemen, no. I can't be saved. I am a beast. I have wallowed in half of the gutters; been in all the watch-houses, and half of the county-jails in the State. It is no use—I can't stop." His giant frame was convulsed—he wept like a child. "But you have resolution to accomplish any thing else which you undertake; and all you need is to summon your energy—set down your foot—and the thing is done." A gleam of hope seemed to dart through his mind. His eye kindled. "O," said he, "I wish I could; then I could go home. Then I could be one of the family again; and O! how my sisters would rejoice." But soon he lapsed back into despair. "Gentlemen, I thank you for your kindness,—but I can't." "Don't tell me you can't, while you have such a head as yours on your shoulders. You can if you will." "Yes; but I am so far gone—I can't," "But you can." "O, sir I wish I could; but———." "You can, you can," shouted a half a dozen voices; "you can, if you'll try." "I can't," said the fettered slave; and drawing a bottle of liquor from his pocket, was in the act of drinking, when I caught his arm, and wrenched the fatal draught from between his lips. I then held my pocket Bible in one hand, and the bottle in the other, and told him to choose. He could have either. He took the Bible. "Dont you see you can choose the good, if you will?" said I. "O, I wish I could stop drinking; but I———," "Most certainly, sir, you can if you will," said a modest and beautiful young lady, standing by, "I know by your manly appearance." "To-be-sure," shouted a half a score of old ladies, who stood round. For by this time the deck was crowded with passengers. "You are not half as far gone as my husband was," said a cheerful lady, in the middle life, who looked as if she knew what it was to send her darling lambkins hungry and cold to a miserable pallet, and then sit shivering over the dying embers, awaiting the dread arrival of her lord, king alcohol's victim. The drunkard again lifted his moistened eyes, and with a commingled look, in which it was difficult to tell whether hope or despair predominated, said, "Well, may-be I can; I have a great notion to try." "Certainly you'll try; and succeed, too." "I will try." "Good! That's right; I knew you could. You'll be a man again;" were some of the voluntary expression that rung through the crowd, the whole length of the boat. "Will you bring me that bottle, sir?" said he; for I had put it out of sight. It would not do to distrust him now. "Certainly," said I, with a tone and expression of great confidence. He took the bottle—rose to his feet, and commenced a most eloquent speech. He spoke of his fall, his degradation and his ruin. And as he held up the bottle with one hand, & pointed to it with the other, 'There,' there, said he, "my friends, is the accursed beverage which has ruined me, & brought me to the lowest depths of disgrace. Once I had a home, a large circle of christian friends, and best of all, a good, pious mother, and two dear, dear sisters, whom I have not seen for two years, tho' many a time within a mile of them. But I was a drunkard and would not go home." Then turning to me, he said, "Sir, this is your boutle; may I do with it what I will?" "Certainly, sir." He then broke the boutle, and spilled the liquor into the canal; and called on God, angels, and men, to witness him take the pledge, and make the covenant.

I need hardly say, that one general shout of joy followed, with peal after peal, from the enthusiastic company. He returned by the next boat bound eastward; and suffice it to say, our hero is now returned to the bosom of one of the most respectable, wealthy and best families in the city of Newark, New Jersey; and is considered one of the most respectable, and best business men in New York city.

A BETHEL MISSIONARY.

Religious Intelligence.

PITTSBURGH DISTRICT.

Steubenville, O., Feb. 25th, 1848.

Brother Bassett: Circumstances over which I had no control, have caused a delay, upon my part, in the making of this communication.—Withal it is about as well frankly to own, that it is now a long time, since the writing spirit has come upon me. Hard service has worn me down, and produced an inclination, to retire unto solitude, and seek repose, that I may recruit the wasted energies of my nature, and get ready for new assaults upon the kingdom of the devil, and renewed exertions, in building up the cause of Christ my Lord.

Ohio Circuit—My meeting on this circuit, was held at Bethel, from the 18th to the 21st of December, 1847. Owing to a considerable snow, which fell on deep mud, only partially frozen, the roads were in many places, almost impassable. When these obstructians are taken into the account, I think I may say, the attendance of our friends, and the citizens on public worship, at that meeting, was worthy at least of some praise. The word of life was well received during the meeting. The Sacrament on Sunday, and the Lovefeast on Monday, were attended with the divine blessing.—It was a good meeting to the members of our fellowship. Br. Cowl thinks the religious condition of old Bethel, is improving, and the congregation enlarging. On Tuesday evening our meeting closed, with a sermon at Eldersville, to a pretty good congregation. —Here for some years past, there has been a pleasant state of things, in the church. For the Aid Society, I obtained $15,00, on Ohio circuit.

Pittsburgh Station.—Here my labors commenced December 26th, and closed on New Years eve, with a most interesting watch night. This meeting all through, to all appearance was profitable to the church, and contined to advance in interest, and extend an influence, beyond the church after I left. After I returned from Sharpsburg, and then again from Birmingham, I was with them at some of the most heavenly experimental meetings, I ever attended. They have large congregations, and good is being done among them, in the name of the Lord. There are a goodly number of worthy citizens, regular in their Sabbath day attendance, on public worship, among our people in Pittsburgh, who I hope will come in before long. No church of my acquaintance, goes beyond this one, for general good order, and fine moral character, in its membership. The improvements, in their meeting house, manifest taste, and plainness, in happy combination, and their subscription to the Aid Society, was liberal, considering how much they had suffered by the fire, a few years ago. It amounted to $201 70.

Allegheny Station—Here my labors commenced on the 2nd day of January 1848, and closed on the 5th. Br. Clawson had spent a week among these brethren, immediately preceding my visit, and there was some excitement—it continued during my stay, and I heard of its extending more and more, after I left them. The amount of good done, I am not competent to state. Some backsliders were being reclaimed, the church revived, and there were some new cases of awakening among sinners—and a few powerful conversions. This is rather a working church, and they that work shall prosper, if the work be done in the right spirit. On the night I made my effort in behalf af the Aid Society, there came on a storm—this was against me, I only got $44,75. They will do better another time.

Sharpsburg Circuit—Br. J. C. Hazlett had been at work here a few days, immediately preceding my arrival. I commenced on the 7th of January, and continued until the 12th. I found some religious excitement among the people when I went—it continued during my stay, but how the meeting progressed, or closed I never learned.

These brethren have been kept in the trying hour, and have proved trust-worthy, in the midst of ultra Abolition struggles, and my hope is, that God will be with them, and bless them, with a gracious revival of pure and undefiled religion. They seem to be an orderly, well disposed people, of sound piety, and good moral standing. The subscription here, for the Aid Society, amounted to $61,00.

Birmingham Mission.—On Sunday the 16th of January, I preached twice for our brethren, in this mission. I am glad they stand fast, and have kept up their meetings and their Sunday School. But I am sorry to say to them, that Br. Joseph Burns cannot be relied on to serve them. His health is not yet restored. Cannot Brs. Reeves and Robinson give them each a sermon, once in a while? Let the trial be made—all things are possible to them that believe. I did not bring up the Aid Society matters here, but on Monday, a good sister enquired into the design of the said Society, &c. I explained, and she gave me $2,00 —many dodge a chance to do good. She sought one. The Lord reward her a hundred fold.

New Brighton Station.—I came to this station on the 21st of January, and remained until the 25th. Br. James Robinson preceded me, with a few days labor. But neither he nor I, could succeed in doing the good we desired. In this community, there is believed to be much low, groveling, infidelity.—Yet withal, there are some first-rate christians who "pray to God always, and give much alms to the people." The congregation is large, and attentive—a day better is coming. The subscription for the Aid Society here, was $41,20.

Manchester Circuit.—This was a quarterly meeting, and commenced January 29th and closed the 31st. The prospect was pretty good, but the mud obstructed us, and we closed the meeting. It was held at the Union School House. I went back to this circuit on the 12th of February, and done my best at the Nessley meeting house, for five days. There were some apparent awakenings—about 2 conversions, and it is believed some awful hypocrisy, came like frogs into the net, one or two nights. To mock God at his own altar, is a wickedness beyond what I have ever heard of Satan's attempting in person. Will sinners be more daring than the devil? There is a good membership here. The meeting done them good. On this circuit, in all, there was subscribed for the Aid Society, $79,80. Making in all since my last publication, the sum of $445 45—in all since Conference about $700,00. I hope to succeed in getting one thousand, or twelve hundred dollars, for the Aid Society this Conference year, as Conference agent and if all the other ministers and preachers, acting as agents in their several circuits and stations, shall do as much, the Aid Society will then begin to come a little into notice, and men who have money will feel a confidence that we will succeed. Then will they take hold and help us —such men always dread a failure. We begin with the poor, we proceed "from the least to the greatest." This appears to be the ordinary course of Providence, in all matters pertaining to the church. We want a College, but we want $10,000 for the Aid Society first. Had we the college first, we should only be educating our young men for other churches, or location. The prospect of utter and hopeless want, in old age, would drive them from our itinerant ranks, to provide for themselves against old age comes on. Give us the Aid Society, well endowed, then our preachers will agree to struggle on, with present meagre salaries, seeing they are not to be forsaken when past labor. Let the church show its care for the superannuated ministers, their widows and orphans, and our ministers will not be found so frequently, if at all, to forsake their work, to provide for themselves. Then get up the college, educate our young men—drill them well, particularly in Christian Theology, and we shall have their services as long as they live.

In all the circuits and stations visited, during the tour, our ministers and preachers appear to be faithfully engaged in the duties of their high & holy calling, and are greatly beloved by their people God grant them abundant success, in their works of faith, and labors of love. We have a ministry, and a membership, in this District, thoughout, who live in my heart, and I want above all things to see and hear, that the work of God is being revived among them gloriously.

I have been delayed in preparing this communication, by the sickness and death of a beloved brother. Stephen Brown died in the Lord at his late residence, about nine miles from this place, in Jefferson county, Ohio, on the 22d inst., in the 70th year of his age. Leaving a widow, one son and five daughters to mourn his removal into eternity. He had been a citizen of this county for almost forty years, and a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church about 36 years. As a citizen, a christian, a neighbor, a husband and a father, he was greatly beloved. He was a man of great plainness, and kindness in his deportment—always attentive in the discharge of his religious duties, but about him their was no display, no ostentation. When overtaken by the pleurisy, the disease of which he died, he seemed to be blessed with an unusual amount of holy courage. He had no fear of death. He hung all on Christ, and felt that all was safe. On last Sunday he sent for me, I went and found him just recovering from a sinking spell, as they called it. Our first interview was very tender. In a whisper, for he could speak no louder, he praised the Lord and distinctly uttered the words, "glory be to God—glory, glory, glory." When nine o'clock came, it being the hour of prayer he had me called into his room. He was able to speak louder than before. Said he "feel my pulse, take out your watch and count." I did so and said 72. Said he "there is some mistake, you looked away, count again," I counted again, and said 70. Now he said "I want you to have prayers, noise will not hurt me, but for Elizabeth's sake" (a very sick daughter lying in the next room,) "I suppose you must be a little moderate." I read the 103 Psalm.—We then sung the hymn commencing "For ever here my rest shall be," &c., then I prayed in rather an under tone of voice. During all these exercises, his soul was poured forth to a present God—"a God at hand and not afar off." Truly that place was glorious. After prayers he again expressed his confidence in Christ, and his hope of eternal life through him, and said, "I am not afraid to die," then he broke forth anew—"glory, glory, glory." In the morning at prayer, he again praised the Lord—and seemed to rise above all mortal things. At 10 o'clock the Dr. came, and gave us some hope that he might live. In the afternoon I returned home, and saw him no more until his soul had passed away to heaven. But I was informed that he had no doubts or fears, but praised the Lord to the last. One hour before death he lost hissigh & speech, but still he gave signs of victory, and triumph, by raising his hands. His funeral was on Thursday last—it was very large. An appropriate discourse was delivered by Rev. Wm. Tipton, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, from "Genesis 49 chap. 18 verse: I have waited for thy salvation O Lord." He now lies interred by my dear mother, in the grave yard at Long's meeting house—waiting for the Resurrection. Br. Bassett, my ties in heaven are increasing. On earth they are weakening. I hope to be ready against the hour of my departure shall come.

Yours truly,

GEO. BROWN.

MUSKINGUM DISTRICT.

Coshocton Ct., Feb. 18th, 1848.

Br. Bassett: Having occasion to write you on business permit me to say through the Western Recorder to those interested that Coshocton circuit still lives, and that we are favored with some religious prosperity, and are praying and laboring for more abundant prosperity. We cannot say that we have peace in all our societies, so desirable a state of things did not exist when we reluctantly consented to, and commenced our labors on this circuit. And though we have been under the painful necessity of superintending trials, and expelling some, and otherwise lopping off members that were dead weights, yet we fear more of this will have to be done before extensive, permanent prosperity can be realized. It is to be feared that too strenuous efforts are sometimes made for members, while to multiply and strengthen the graces essential to true christian character are measureably overlooked. It is important to the perpetuation and welfare of the church to add numbers to it. But a church composed of individuals not possessing the graces essential to christianity had (in our opinion) better not exist, for it would not, nay could not exert a christianizing influence on a world that lieth in wickedness. Would it not be far better for the church and the world, after a fair trial for those to be lopped off, who will not be influenced to cultivate the graces of christianity? But this is a task, O! how painful. We have held our 1st and 2nd quarterly and several two days, also protracted meetings, all of which have been profitable—sinners have been made to see and feel themselves to be under the sentence of death and have returned to God, and some have been happily converted, and enabled to rejoice, knowing for themselves that Christ has power on earth to forgive sins; believers have rejoiced with joy unspeakable and full of glory. Our members have been considerably reduced by removals, expulsions, &c. Br. Clancy our President, has visited us, his labors were acceptable, well received, may much good fruit spring therefrom. Brs. Baldwin, and Duling have rendered us valuable assistence. We are encouraged still to hold fast whereunto we have attained, and to press forward. The Lord is with us, we have received on probation from 20 to 30 on this circuit, we have many members of sterling moral worth, whose christian graces cause them to stand high, may they exert a wholesome and saving influence. My yoke fellow, Br. Hamilton is indefatigable in his efforts to do good—O for a general revival to hasten it—and to his name be all the glory.

I am in christian fellowship, yours,

WILLIAM ROSS.

New Alexandria, Mt. Pleasant ct., Feb. 24, 1848.

Br. Bassett: It is our privilege, to report a state of general prosperity on Mt Pleasant circuit. As some of your readers are acquainted with the different societies of the circuit, we will give a brief statement of the result of our protracted meetings at the several appointments so far as held. Our first protracted effort was made in Lagrange. This has been, & may still be regard as rather a hard place. Our meeting however resulted in good. The church revived, and five valuable accessions. Our next, was at Rehoboth, a profitable meeting to the church, two added, had to close on account of the mud.—expect to try it again. The next appointment was made for Cadiz, to meet the visit of the President to our circuit. The society in this place has never been able to procure for themselves a house of worship, occupying the courthouse, it has been found difficult to increase the membership. One thing worthy of note in connection with our meeting, was that we had the privilege of occupying the 'Old-side meeting house.' Commencing on Saturday night, we closed Wednesday night following, quite an interesting and profitable meeting, eight joined. On Thursday morning, we had a meeting of the friends, to take into consideration the propriety of making an effort to build a meeting-house.—A committee was appointed to procure a location, to report on my return. Committee reported a desirable situation secured, & in 24 hs. we obtained on subscription and promise, the sum of about $500, and now expect to have a house completed in Cadiz before the close of the Conference year. Our next meeting was in Smithfield, where from causes not necessary to name, the church has been languishing for some years, but the Star of hope has again arisen. We had a good meeting, the zeal of the membership restored and four good accessions. Then next came our second quarterly meeting, which was held in Mt. Pleasant. Here we had the valuable assistance of Br. Cowl. The meeting was protracted, some eight days, and truly it was a time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord, nine received on probation. And at this time we are in the midst of the most glorious revival, at Wesley Chapel, we have witnessed since we left Steubenville.* Ten have been received and the church up to the working point—shouting happy. We have been in progress four days and nights, and if circumstances would allow us to continue a week longer, the results we believe would be, most glorious, but we will be compelled to cease after another day, to meet other engagements, but we feel while writing, like shouting, Hallelujah for the Lord God Omnipotent reigneth.

My colleague Br. Lancaster, is in pretty good health, and doing his part well.

We have not forgotten the "Recorder," as you will find.

J. BURNS.

*Feb. 25th, 17 are now received, and several conversions. We intend to continue the meeting.

Frederic Circuit, Feb. 24, 1848.

Br. Bassett: Since I last wrote you, we have held some 4 protracted meetings, and our second quarterly meeting, all of which were truly interesting. Our protracted efforts especially were seasons of refreshing from the presence of the Lord, to those who loved him, and thought on his name; while sinners were made to tremble; and mourning souls were comforted, through the pardoning mercy of God. Several have been added to the number of his children, such I trust as will be saved in the great day of Eternity. At all these meetings we have been favored with the very acceptable labors of our good Brs. Dorcas, and Brown.—Br. Winn also at one. O that the Lord may abundantly bless these Brethren for their work of faith and labor of love.

We are (tho' slowly) moving on pleasantly on this (Frederic) circuit. Oh that the Lord may revive his work yet more abundantly among us here. Yours in love,

J. S. THRAP.

Lebanon Mission, Feb. 1, 1848.

Br. Bassett: After Conference, by request of Br. W. B. Evans, and the brethren of Lebanon Station, I endeavored to supply his place until he moved from Indiana; which was about three weeks. Then I commenced my missionary operations. I soon succeeded in getting a number of appointments. The prospect was somewhat flattering at some of them, while at others it was rather gloomy. There are established churches at almost every point; and although many would prefer our principles of Church Government; yet, as churches would have to be erected, their former associations broken, the popular feeling being rather against us, &c., many are not willing to make the sacrifice. As our principles were but little known, I thought the most judicious course would be to travel round the mission a few times, and distribute some Disciplines among the people, so that they might become acquainted with our Church Polity, before I held any protracted meetings. Our first protracted effort was held at Middletown, commencing January 15th, and continued until the 27th. We were favored with the very acceptable labors of Brs. W. B. Evans, White, and Nutty. Things were very discouraging at the commencement of this meeting. The place we expected to occupy (after positive contract with us) was rented for a ball, the night our meeting was to commence. However by the kindness of a good Baptist sister, (teacher in the female Seminary) we occupied her school room, from Saturday night until Tuesday. Then we removed to the Methodist Episcopal Church, and occupied it pretty much all the time until our meeting closed. We owe our sincere thanks to those good brethren, and the above mentioned sister, for their kindness. A number of the M. E. Brethren took quite an active part in our exercises. May God bless them abundantly with the riches of his grace! Our meeting was one of great interest and profit—congregations were good, and very attentive. Many were convicted —some found the 'pearl of great price,' and others being filled with the love God, were enabled to rejoice, and look foward with pleasure to that glorious period, when tears should be wiped from their eyes, and sorrow and sighing flee away. We formed a society of 10. This is an important place, and the prospect is rather flattering. Some were quite astonished to think that four Protestant Methodist ministers, could be found in the Miami Valley!!

I had published to commence a protracted meeting at Morrow, the Saturday following the commencement of the meeting at Middletown; but such was the interest of that meeting, it was thought unadvisable for me to go to Morrow. However Father McGuire, that venerable servant of God, had promised to assist me at that meeting—went too, and conducted it alone—preached with great zeal and acceptability—God attended his word with power; sinners were awakened —some found peace, and eight were organized into a society. His voice then failed—a messenger was sent to Middletown for help,—we had just closed our meeting, and was preparing to start for Lebanon, as he arrived—came to Lebanon that afternoon—left next day (Friday) in company with Father McGuire, for Morrow. He continued with me until the following Thursday; then returned to his family. May God reward him abundantly for his labors! The next day I went to Lebanon for our worthy President, Br. J. M. Young, who returned with me, and labored as usual to profit, and edification. He left on Monday morning. I then continued the meeting until Tuesday night February 8th. The result was an organization of 24 members. A very favorable impression was made on the public mind, in favor of the cause of Mutual Rights, during the meeting. O that God would give us great success on our mission this year!

We have received 35 in all since Conference. To God be all the glory. Amen.

WESTERN RECORDER.

PUTNAM, OHIO:

Thursday, March 2, 1848.

Death of the Venerable Ex-President.

Let the Nation mourn—and let all hearts be sad! "For know ye not that there is a Prince and a great man fallen this day, in Israel?"—John Quincy Adams, the venerable sage, scholar, statesman and philanthropist, having spent a long, and eventful and useful life in the service of his country, has died "at his post." At the full age of four score years, full of honors as well as of days, he has been stricken down by death, in the very Capitol of this nation, where his voice has so often been heard in defence of the cause of right and of humanity. Not only will he be lamented by every lover of his country and of his species throughout this land, but the tidings of his death will produce a sensation throughout the civilized world, the world of letters and science, and especially the world of benevolent enterprise. Nay, the savage in his far-off wilds, and the enslaved in his dungeon of oppression, will know that they have lost a friend, who was wont, with the energies of a giant mind, as well as the sympathies of a philanthropic heart, to plead their cause. They, too, will deplore the death of this great and good man.

From the Congressional proceedings it appears that on Monday 21st of February, Mr. Adams occupied his seat in the House of Representatives, and his vote on two questions is recorded in the proceedings of the session of that day. Resolutions had been under consideration, expressing the thanks of Congress to various Generals of the army. The Speaker had just risen and stated the question to be on engrossing the resolutions for a third reading, and was upon the point of taking the vote, when he was interrupted by several gentlemen who sprang from their seats to the assistance of the venerable Ex-President, who was observed to be sinking from his seat, in what appeared to be the agonies of death. He did not fall to the floor, but was caught in the arms of the gentleman who sat next to him. A great sensation was immediately created, members from all directions, rushing from their seats and gathering around the fallen statesman of Massachusetts. The House hastily adjourned: a sofa was brought, and Mr. Adams, helpless but not yet insensible, was gently laid upon it.—Dr. Fries, a member of the House, promptly attended upon him, and had him conveyed to the door of the Rotunda, for the advantage of fresh air, but the air being chilly, the sofa was taken up and borne to the Speaker's room, from which the venerable man was not again removed till after his spirit had fled. In the Senate, Mr. Benton announced impressively the painful circumstance, and moved an immediate adjournment, which of course took place. Whilst lying in the Speaker's room, Mr. A. partially recovered the use of his speech, and was heard to say in faltering accents, "This is the end of earth;" but added, "I am composed." So soon as possible, intelligence was conveyed to Mrs. Adams, who with his nephew and niece, shortly after arrived. Mrs. A. was of course deeply affected, and overcome with the sight of her husband, now prostrate, and evidently sinking into eternity. But it is said that though borne down beneath the afflictive dispensation, a calm and holy resignation, pervaded her countenance.

After lying fifty-four hours apparently insensible, with a few moments interval of consciousness, Mr. Adams expired at a quarter past seven, p. m. on Wednesday, 23d February. He was surrounded by his family and numerous mourning friends, but chiefly the Massachusetts delegation, of which the Speaker of the House is one. It is said that he cantinued to breathe calmly till half-past six, after which his breath gradually diminished till all signs of life were pielded as quietly as a child falling asleep.—Meanwhile, little was done in Congress, but to sympathise and mourn. On Tuesday 22d the House met at the usual hour, in solemnity and sadness. An unusually impressive prayer was made by the Chaplain, Rev. Mr. Slicer. The Speaker then announced that his venerable colleague was thought to be rapidly sinking. And motion being made, the House at once adjourned. In the Senate, an impressive statement was made by Mr. Davis, who also moved the adjournment of the Senate, which took place accordingly. On the 23d also the House met and after prayer, by the Chaplain, immediately adjourned. The Senate, however, held a short session, attending chiefly to executive business.

The following incidents of the funeral solemnities, Procession, &c., which we take from the Baltimore Sun of 26th ult. will be read with interest by all.

The feeling at the Capitol—Description of the Coffin of Mr. Adams—Decorations of the Room.

The melancholy interest of the decease of the beloved Ex-President Adams can scarcely be overrated. Thousands of persons, of all ages, classes and conditions, have visited the Capitol to-day for the purpose of looking once more upon the pleasant, dignified countenance of the departed.

The inside coffin is composed of lead, unusually thick, with a glass in the upper part. This is encased in one of mahogany, one inch thick, with a hinge top; the inside lined with white satin, outside covered with best silk velvet, trimmed at the bottom with rich silver lace, and around the top with heavy silver fringe. The head and breast of the deceased are plainly to be seen. The coffin is mounted with heavy silver handles on the top, and an elegant silver plate in the shape of a heart, decorated with a spread eagle, bears the following inscription:

JOHN QUINCY ADAMS,
Born,
An inhabitant of Massachusetts, July 11, 1767,
Died,
A citizen of the United States,
In the Capitol of Washington,
February 23, 1848.
Having served his country for half a century,
And
Enjoyed its highest Honors.

The coffin was the fine workmanship of Messrs. Lee & Espey, and is certainly a splendid piece of mechanism. On the hinge top, as it stands open, I observed a most magnificent boquet of fragrant flowers cut out of the open grounds of the President's garden, by the attentive James Maher, public gardener, this morning. They were so arranged as to cast a beautiful reflection immediately on the bosom of the distinguished tenant beneath.

The windows of the room (in the Capitol) are handsomely festooned with an immense and magnificent American ensign—the walls are hung in flowing crape, and at one end a lithographic likeness of the late Mr. Adams. I understand that Mr. Stone, having obtained permission of the family of Mr. Adams, this morning, took a bust likeness of the deceased.

Washington, Feb. 25, 1848.

Honors to the memory of Mr. Adams—Decorations of the Chamber of Death—Arrival of Mr. Charles F. Adams—The Addresses in Congress—The Remains of Mr. Adams to be taken to Quincy, Mass.

Every possible mark of respect that can be paid by every branch of the Government—the Executive, the judicial and the legislative—has been paid to the memory of Mr. Adams. A profound sense of his merits, as a statesman and patriot, is manifested on every side, and every one is impressed with the fact that, in his death a link is broken that connected the past with the present, that united the fathers and founders of the Republic with us, their descendants.

The Capitol is shrouded in mourning. The Representave Hall is hung with festoons of crape. The body lies in state, in the Capitol, in a velvet covered coffin, with glass lid; and is visited by hundreds. Flowers are strewed over the pall.—Mr. Charles F. Adams, of Boston, did not arrive till to-day. This morning he visited his father's corpse, and remained in the room alone with it for some time.

The addresses delivered, in both Houses yesterday, upon the life, death and character of Mr. Adams are excellent specimens of that kind of oratory, and are deserving of general perusal.

I understaud that the remains of Mr. Adams will, after the funeral exercises of to-morrow, be placed in the Congress receiving vault, and will thence be transferred, in a day or two, to their final place of rest, in Quincy.

From the Baltimore Sun of Feb. 26.

Funeral Honors of Ex-President John Quincy Adams.

The remains of the venerable patriot and sage, John Quincy Adams, will be consigned to the tomb to-day, at Washington, amid every manifestation of the profound respect of the community for his memory, and with all the usual public testimonials expressive of the sincere regret of the nation at his loss, as one of the favored sons of the Republic. Treaty of Peace.—We rejoice to learn that the rumored treaty of Peace has been confirmed by the Mexican authorities, & accepted by General Scott. A copy of the treaty has been received by the Government at Washington, and it is said was approved by the President and submitted to the Senate last week, and would have been disposed of but for the illness and death of Mr. Adams. The substance of the treaty is given as follows in the Balt. Sun.

1. Peace between the United States & Mexico, and an Armistice between the Military Commanders of the two countries during such time as the treaty shall be in suspense.

2. Mexico agrees, in consideration, &c., that the boundary between the United States & Mexico shall hereafter be from the Sea up the middle of the Rio Grande to the boundary of N. Mexico, and thence in a line which (with some digression) is to run west (or nearly west) to the Pacific Ocean, and strike a point south of the port of San Diego.

3. In consideration of this large cession of Territory the United States are to pay to Mexico the sum of Fifteen Millions of Dollars, and to satisfy all the just claims of citizens of the United States against the Government of Mexico.

The treaty is understood to contain many provisions of detail; but does not, as we hear, include any provision, as has been reported, for the maintainance of a military force by the United States for a certain time in Mexico.

The treaty makes its appearance in a questionable form; being concluded by Mr. Trist, as with full powers, after those powers had been withdrawn, or intended to be withdrawn, by the Executive. It is understood, however, that the treaty, such as it is, will be submitted by the President, to the Senate, for its consideration. What will be its fate in that body we shall not undertake to predict.

We can at least rejoice at one thing; that for the present there is a cessation of hostilities in Mexico. May it be perpetual!

We see that doubts are expressed of the approval of the treaty by the Senate, so, we "must not halloo till we are out of the woods."

Ohio Legislature.

Monday, Feb. 14—House.—Resolutions approving of the Whitney Railroad to the Pacific were unanimously adopted.

Senate.—The apportionment bill which had been adopted by the House, being under consideration, a paper was read, signed by fifteen Senators, of the Democratic party, protesting against the passage of the bill, and who after the reading, withdrew from the Senate Chamber, their object being to prevent the passage of the bill, by leaving the Senate without a quorum. A call of the Senate was made, but the Sergeant-at-Arms brought word that the absent members refused to return. So, the Senate adjourned.

☞The amount of religious intelligence, furnished this week from so many sections, will be cheering to the friends of our Zion. Already we have received more of the same sort, though too late for this number. Communications from Brs. Hoagland, Hatfield, and Betts, shall be given next week.

PRESBYTERIAN OF THE WEST.—We see by the last number of this excellent paper that the Junior Editor, Rev. S. R. Wilson, has withdrawn his editorial connection from it, leaving it under the entire control of Rev. N. L. Rice. We take special interest in the weekly perusal of the Presbyterian, not only from the reputation of its editor, and because it is a Western organ of the Presbyterian (O. S.) denomination, but because both its Publisher and its Printer, if we mistake not, were among the companions of our early youth. By the way, we take occasion to observe, that we think it an unfairness that some should designate Dr. Rice, the Editor, as Pro-slavery, so long as he advances such noble sentiments as are contained in the following article, which we take pleasure in transfering from his paper to our colums:

"Oppression Maketh a Wise Man Mad."

The truth of this apothegm of the wisest of men has been illustrated in innumerable instances. Our own times have furnished some very instructive examples, in which men, otherwise as intelligent and prudent as any, have exhibited the most perfect madness in the urgency of their sympathy for the oppressed. We have felt it a duty alike to those, whose suffering and degraded condition has excited this sympathy, and to our common country, the continued unity of which is essential to the good of all classes, to withstand, at different times and in our proper place, this madness. In doing this, we have proposed what we esteem a more excellent way of attaining an end so devoutly to be wished, by every friend of humanity; the emancipation of all the oppressed from physical and spiritual bondage.

But whilst we have used our endeavors to stay the rashness of wise men, maddened at the sight and sound of the oppressions in which

> "Man's inhumanity to man, > Makes countless thousands mourn."

its existence has not occasioned us any surprise. When every principle of human rights is wantonly trampled upon, and immortal men are treated with less consideration than brutes that perish, it is not strange if the feelings even of wise men should get the better of their judgment. Nor, is it matter of wonder, though it may well be regretted, that their zeal to relieve the oppressed should outrun their knowledge, and overturn their discretion. And our hopes are faint indeed, of seeing this fire of fanaticism, with its evil effects upon the country, but most perhaps upon the slave, abated, much less extinguished, so long as those who have the power, continue to add fuel to the flame, by disregarding with apparent recklessness, all the claims of justice as well as of mercy, in matters relating to the unhappy negro.

We have been led to make these remarks in view of two facts that have recently come to our knowledge. The one relates to our own Commonwealth, and the other to that of Kentucky. Both enlightened, Christian communities. The first is the recent refusal of the Legislature of our State to repeal so much of the "Black Laws," as disqualifies a negro from giving testimony against a white man in courts of justice. A most unrighteous enactment, which ought long ago to have been blotted from the statute book, and which, so long as it remains, will be a stigma upon our character as a free commonwealth.

The other fact to which we allude, is embodied in the following paragrph, which we cut from an exchange paper:

FREE NEGROES IN LOUISVILLE.—The Mayor of Louisville gives notice, dated, 14th inst., that after twenty days from that time, the act of the Legislature passed in the session of 1845-6, will be enforced against free negroes in that city. That act provides that any free negro, who shall come into the State and remain thirty days, shall be liable to arrest, and upon conviction of the fact, shall give a recognizance, with two sufficient securities, in the sum of $500, to leave the State within ninety days, and never return; and upon failure to give recognizance, shall be sold into slavery to the highest bidder for one year.

Well might one exclaim in view of such a proclamation, in the words of the inspired preacher, "So I returned, and considered all the oppressions that are done under the sun; and, behold the tears of such as were oppressed, and they had no comforter; and on the side of their oppressors there was power; but they had no comforter." Is it so that men in power have yet to learn that there is one higher than the highest, who hears the needy when the cry, and such as have no helper? May God grant that those who make our laws and those who chose our law-makers, may in time wisely considerer that there is ONE, to whom the government of this world is given by covenant right, as KING of kings, and LORDS of Lords, of whom it is declared, "He shall judge the poor of the people—he shall save the children of the needy, and shall break in pieces the oppressor."

It contains two interesting and well executed engravings; A View of Smyrna, and Christ teaching Humility—the latter a mezzotint. Likewise, original Music, and Napoleon and his Marshals.—The contributors for the Columbian, are for the most part lady writers, of superior talent. RIVER CASUALTIES.—The steamer Milwaukie, Captain Farnsworth, broke a shaft near Eighteen Mile Island, on the 11th inst. and was towed into Louisville.

SNAGGED.—The steamer Nathan Hale, on her recent trip from Cairo to Cincinnati, when near the mouth of St. Mary's river, struck a snag, which perforated a hole in her bow, but it was stopped without injuring her cargo. She also broke one of her water wheel shafts, which detained her some time.

The steamer Confidence arrived at St. Louis on the 10th from Ohio City, with the freight, cabin furniture and machinery of the steamer Mendota, sunk at Cape Girardeau bend. Nearly all her freight has been saved, and is but little damaged. Her machinery and furniture has also been saved, but the boat will be a total loss. She now lies sunk to her main deck.

News of the Week.

LAUNCH OF THE STEAMBOAT ISABEL—Dreadful Accident—Two Lives Lost.—Pursuant to the notice in the "Sun" of Monday, this splendid vessel was consigned to her appropriate element on yesterday, at five minutes before twelve oclock. M. Notwithstanding the unfavorable state of the weather, an immense concourse of spectators were early on the spot; omnibuses, hacks and carriages, of all descriptions being in requisition to carry passengers to the Point. At the appointed hour, every thing being in readiness, the immense vessel began slowly to glide off the ways, and, amid the cheering of the immense crowd, made one of the most graceful debuts into the water we have ever seen upon a similar occasion. As she passed in beautiful style among the numerous vessels with which the harbor was crowded, all filled with spectators, she was welcomed by a salute of thirteen guns from the U. S. sloop-of-war Ontario, the receiving ship stationed in our harbor, which was moored opposite the Point, rigged out in a galla day dress of flags and streamers, among which the blue jackets of the jolly tars made a pleasing relief. We may add, however, that the salute was not so much in honor of the launch, as in honor of the day, being the birth-day of Washington. The event happened at the same time, and it was something like killing two birds with one stone.

The steamer, under the impetus derived from her own gravity, shot rapidly through the water to a distance of some six or seven hundred yards from the shore, when she was brought up by the line which was retained on shore, assisted by her anchor, which was dropped shortly after she touched the water.

A heavy staging, which had been used as a gang-way to the upper deck of the vessel, during her construction, had been pushed partly aside, in order to clear the hull, by which means the supporting timbers were thrown considerably out of a perpendicular position. In the anxiety to see the launch, many thoughtless persons crowded close around the vessel and under this staging. As the ship glided gracefully into the water, one of the shores struck the leaning timbers which supported the scaffolding, which was immediately precipitated upon the crowd beneath, killing instantly a colored man, named John Monigomery, a sawyer, his head being literally mashed and his bones otherwise broken.—A small white boy, about eleven years of age, named Robert Washington Shaw, who lived with Mr. William Jones, blacksmith, was caught under the falling timbers and his skull broken on the right side and his body otherwise injured—he died almost immediately. Justice Latournau, in the absence of a coroner, held an inquest on the body. Several others were seriously injured. —Balt. Sun.

A JURY VERDICT.—A case was recently submitted to a jury in this county, which for its novelty and happy result, deserves a place in "the reports."

It arose from the following circumstances:—Two men, living near neighbors, had a falling out about the cow of one of the parties frequently geuing into the enclosure of the other, and which finally resulted in the death of the cow; she having been set on by dogs and chased till she ran against a stump and broke her neck.

The case was submitted to a jury of respectable and wealthy farmers. After hearing related all the circumstances, the jury made up their minds that the owner of the cow could not afford to lose her, and that the owner of the dogs was not able to pay for her, they therefore rendered the following verdict: that the jury should pay the value of the cow, the magistrate treat the party, and the constable pay the costs.

The verdict was immediately ratified, and satisfied, to the joy of the entire neighborhood.—Ky. Democrat.

CHEESEDOM.—The growing importance of the cheese trade in this region is acknowledged by all, yet few, we apprehend, are aware of the extent to which the business has increased in a few years. By a reference to the books at the canal office, we are enabled to state the amount cleared for market during the last six years, which we think will be interesting to our readers. The statement commences with 1842.

1842	1.230 168 lbs.	1845	2 995 376 lbs.
1843	2.415 177 "	1846	4.763.723 "
1844	3.944.404 "	1847	6.569.170 "

It will be seen that the increase has been very great each year, except during the season of the drought of 1845. Present indications warrant the belief that 1848 will far exceed any one of its predecessors.—Western Reserve Chronicle.

RIGHT OF RAILROAD PASSENGERS.—It has been lately decided in the Court of Common Pleas of Boston, that a Railroad Company is liable to the full value of a lost trunk belonging to a passenger, although they may have given notice in a paper thrown daily into the cars that they would not be answerable for baggage to a greater amount than $50 unless the same were received and paid for as extra baggage,—unless they could show that the owner had actual knowledge of it, and that if the agents of the Company delivered the trunk to a person who has no authority to receive it, they are liable notwithstanding actual knowledge of such notice by the owner.

VALUE OF A DOLLAR.—If you would learn the value of a dollar, go and labor two days in the burning sun as a hod carrier. This is an excellent idea, and if many of our young gentlemen had to earn their dollars in that way, how much less dissipation and crime would we witness every day. So of our fashionable young ladies, if they, like some of the poor seamstresses of our large cities, had to earn their dollars by making shirts at ten cents a piece, how much less finery would we see about them, and how much more truthful notions would they have of their duties of life and their obligations to the rest of the world.

DISTRESSING CASUALTY.—Mr. Robert Ralston, one of our best and most worthy citizens, started from Higginsport to this place, last (Wednesday) night, with several passengers and some goods. The night was very dark, and, in attempting to cross White-oak creek, which was swollen from the late rains, his wagon was upset, and himself and a colored woman was hurled away by the angry waters, and no trace of them has yet been found.

Mr. Jacob Earheart, of Athens, and Frank Jackson, a colored man, succeeded in swimming ashore, and walking up to town, spread the alarm. The whole night was spent by many of our citizens in a fruitless search for their bodies.

Mr. Ralston was a most useful member of society, and industrious and exemplary man, and his loss will be deeply deplored. May God give his afflicted family strength to bear this terrible visitation of his Providence.

P. S.—We learn that the body of Mr. Ralston has been found about three miles below where he attempted to cross. To all appearance life had been extinct for hours. The body of the colored woman has also been found.—Georgetown Standard.

Newspapers.

One of the proprietors of the Baltimore Sun now in Europe, writing home, says there are only two papers in London that have any considerable circulation, viz: The Times, about 29,000 copies per day, and the News 16,000. The subscription price of the London Times is six pounds ten shillings, or about between $31 and $32.—In Paris there are eighteen journals. La Presse prints 33,000 copies per day. Le Siecle, 30,000; La Constitutional, 28,000. The price of the papers in Paris, vary from $7,50 to $21 per annum. When we recollect that nearly all the papers printed in England and France are printed in their respective capitals, and the prices are so high as to place them beyond the reach of common people, we cannot wonder at the ignorance of the masses of those countries. We mean ignorance of passing events. The information derived from books written hundreds of years since, useful though it be, is not to be compared, in point of utility, to the information derived from good newspapers. The first is the information of the cloister, the other of the man of the world. One of the great causes of the rapid advances of the United States in arts, sciences and everything that elevates man, is the almost universal diffusion of newspapers, heralding in the shortest possible time, every improvement, and thereby stimulating all to activity and invention. —*Cin. ☞INFORMATION WANTED.—William, son of Nicholas Swingle of York township, near Beavertown, Morgan County, O., escaped from his father and brother early on the 8th of January, at Horner's tavern on the National Road, fourteen miles east of Columbus, while they were conveying him to the Lunatic Asylum of this city. This young man is 21 years of age, about 5 feet 10 inches in height, of slender frame, dark complexion, and looked very pale and emaciated. In consequence of a year's sickness he became deranged, and his relations were about carrying out the benevolent design of putting him under proper treatment in the Asylum of this city, with a view to his restoration. At their request we insert this notice, in the hope, that it may be instrumental in eliciting information. His friends are in great distress on his account, as they have as yet not received the slightest clue to his whereabouts, although immediate and persevering search was made for him. If this notice should meet the eye of any person in possession of information respecting the young man, his relations would be greatly relieved by the receipt of such intelligence and very thankful for it.

REV. MR. STOCKTON.—This gentlemen delivered a lecture, before the Y. M. M. L. Association on the evening of the 15th instant. His subject was "the object of life." The College Hall was crowded with an attentive and interested auditory. He declared the object of life to be "to do good," and said that if life was to be made subservient to selfish purposes only, it was something he was "PROUD to dispise." He took up the theory of selfishness and examined it; and when the audience was deeply interested in the thoughts of the discourse, and pleased with the glowing language in which he clothed them, he was attacked with severe coughing, and was compelled to announce that he would not be able to speak any longer, and must postpone the delivery of the remainder of the lecture, until some other favorable period. His hearers were much disappointed, for he had arrived at the crisis of the discussion and was about to develope his idea of the 'object of life' by means of "the theory of benevolence."

Mr. S. gave the second part of his lecture on last Tuesday evening.—Watch. Val.

VIRGINIA IRON WORKS—WHEELING, VA.—The building is a frame of 100 feet in width by 175 in length. The roof is sustained by braces without posts, and covered with sheet iron. The upper part ventilated with lattice work 12 feet high extending the whole length of the building. The sides and ends are also so constructed as to afford light and air in summer by raising doors in any direction; which are closed in winter. The sides to the eave are 20 feet high, and the whole is filled with machinery of the most improved construction. There are seven boiling furnaces and two heating furnaces. There are four steam boilers placed above the furnaces, from which heat the steam is raised; this saves about 500 bushels of coal per day. Plenty of steam is thus raised and the men say the furnaces work well. The flues are all lead to a large stack, 17 feet base, 155 feet high, with a straight flue 6 feet diameter. The Engine is 24 in Cylinder, and 6 feet stroke. Fly wheel 30 feet diameter and is said to weigh with shaft and all the wheel on it 36 tons. The main driving wheel is 8 feet diameter, 12 in face and runs into a pinion 4 feet diameter. This drives the rolls. The Steam Hammer, made by Messrs. Merrick & Towne, of Philadelphia, works very well and is perfectly under the control of the workmen. It is a Steam Cylinder supported by two large columns of cast iron. The Hammer weighs 2.000 lbs., the anvil block 13,000, and the shoe or bed plate 6.500 lbs. They have now 28 Nail machines ready to go into operation, and contemplate building 28 more the coming season. So that when they get all their Nail machines ready, they will be able to make 300 kegs of nails per day.—Times.

A NEW PURCHASE BY THE CATHOLICS.—It has been reported for several days without contradiction, that the German Roman Catholic Congregation of St. Mary's Church have purchased that splendid place upon which is the Pendleton Mansion House, together with the adjacent premises, 510 feet front on Broadway and 410 feet on the Lebanon road. Col. Pendleton is to receive $95,000 in six annual payments. The purchasers contemplate laying out the property into lots, with the exception of the corner, on which they propose to erect a spacious church. It is expected that the sale of the lots alone, will meet the whole engagement.—Watchman Valley.

NAVIGATION OF THE SCIOTO.—A Convention of delegates, from the counties of Ross, Jackson, Pike, and Scioto, was held at Piketon, on the 17th instant, to take measures in regard to the improvement of the Scioto river, so as to admit of steamboat navigation. It was stated as the result of an examination, that such an improvement can be made as to admit small boats to the State dam, four miles below Chillicothe, for the sum of three thousand dollars. The people in that region are highly pleased with the prospect. —Watch. Val.

MISSIONARY TO MEXICO.—The American Bible Society has appointed Rev. W. H. Norris to be their temporary agent in Mexico to ascertain what can be done by the society for the circulation of the Spanish Bible in that country. Mr. Norris was for many years a resident of South America as a Missionary of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

The Postage Reform.

The preliminary meeting at Boston has published a report and resolutions on this subject.—The committee set forth, with some force, some of the incongruities of the present system, and criticise with severity the proposal of Postmaster Johnson to raise the postage by stealth, by making the weight of a single letter a quarter instead of half an ounce. Other parts of the report came in for censure, as did the provisions of the act of March, 1847, imposing a tax of three cts. on every transient newspaper. One editor present said that the sale of his weekly paper fell off 500 in one week after the law went into operation—a dead loss to the Department of $250 a year. The committee reported some resolutions, which were amended and adopted. Two of them were as follows:—

Resolved, That in the opinion of this meeting, the public good imperatively requires a reduction of the present charges of postage to the following rates, viz: Two cents on each half ounce letter, if pre-paid, and double postage if not prepaid: one cent on all newspapers, and a like rate of postage on other printed matter.

Resolved, That, as the abuse of the franking privilege is inseparable from its use, it should be abolished, and the public functionaries indemnified, if necessary, in some way not liable to the objections against franking.

Another resolution acknowledged the "free delivery" of paid letters, without additional charge, as an important part of the desired reform. A highly respectable committee, of 25 persons, was appointed to carry on the enterprize. We trust something is going to be done. The New England Puritan publishes the following table, furnished by "a correspondent in another State."—Of its accuracy we have not at hand the means of judging with certainty:

The value of cheap postage, not only in giving efficiency to the Post Office Department, as the servant of the public, (which it is, or ought to be,) but also as a means of increasing revenue, is plainly seen by a glance at the following returns of the Post Office in England:

1838	at the old rates, the weekly delivery of letters was -		1.500,000
1839	at 4 pence, it was - - -		2,000,000
1840	at 1 penny, it rose at once to		3,000,000
1841	" " it was - - -		4,000,000
1843	" " " " - - -		4,500,000
1844	" " " " - - -		5,000,000
1845	" " " " - - -		5,500,000
1846	" " " " - - -		6,000,000
1847	" " " " - - -		7,200,000

If this return is correct, the new system has already realized, within a little, the "five fold" increase which Mr. Rowland Hill anticipated as likely to result from cheap postage. At this rate, the number of letters passing through the mails of Great Britain and Ireland would be 375 millions yearly, being nearly seven times as many as in this country, and more than three times as many as all the letters, pamphlets, and papers that are mailed in the United States. If the United States can afford to carry 50 millions of newspapers for one cent, weighing on an average one ounce and a quarter, surely they can afford to carry 300 millions of letters for two cts., weighing only a quarter of an ounce each, since it is evident that the proportionate expense of transportation on each diminishes as the numbers increase.—N. Y. Evangelist.

ANOTHER BREAK DOWN.—The Chronicle informs us that the Methodist Church in Newport was crowded a few evenings since to overflowing on the occasion of the presentation of a banner to the Sons of Temperance, by the ladies of that city.

Just as the presentation speech was concluded, a crash was heard, and the crowd rushed for the doors and windows in terrific haste. One of the pillars in the basement had given way.—The scene is represented as truly alarming. The cries of the ladies, and the rush of the multitude were terrible to hear. Fortunately, no one was seriously injured. The several cases of this kind which have recently occurred, should be a warning to builders to lay foundations more firmly. —Watch. Valley.

The Law of Newspapers.

1. Subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, are considered wishing to continue their subscriptions.

2. If the subscribers order the discontinuance of their papers, the publishers may continue to send them till all cash charges are paid.

3. If subscribers neglect or refuse to take their papers from the offices to which they are directed, they are heldt responsible until they have settled their bill, and order their paper discontinued.

4. If subscribers remove to other places without informing the publishers, and the paper is sent to the former direction, they are held responsible.

5. The Courts have decided that refusing to take a paper or periodical from the office, or removing and leaving it uncalled for, is "prima facie" evidence of intentional fraud.

Liabilities of those who take Periodicals.

Thes law declare that any person, to whom a periodical is sent, is responsible for payment, if he receives the paper, or makes use of it, even if he has never subscribed for it, or has ordered it to be stopped. His duty in such a case is not to take the paper from the office or persons with whom the paper is left, but to notify the publisher that he does not wish for it.

If papers are sent to a Post Office, Store, or any other place of deposite,, and are not taken by the person to whom they are sent, the Postmaster, Storekeeper, &c., are responsible for the payment, until he returns the paper, or informs the publisher that they are lying dead in the office.

GENERAL CONFERENCE
PROSPECTUS
Of a Daily and Weekly Pittsburgh Christian Advocate during the session.

We propose to issue, during the approaching session of the General Conference in this city, a "Daily Pittsburgh Christian Advocate," half the size of our present large Weekly, containing full, accurate and authentic reports of proceedings, speeches and documents, together with all other matters of general interest occurring during the time.

TERMS—For a single copy, 'one dollar.' Any person sending us five subscribers shall be entitled to a copy for his agency; and one sending ten subscribers shall have three additional copies at his disposal. Advance pay, in all cases.

It is supposed that the General Conference may continue in session six weeks—that being near the length of the last two sessions. Should it continue longer, the Daily will bo furnished to the end of the session at the above price. If it adjourns sooner, the Weekly paper will be substituted to make up the deficit of the six weeks of the Daily—allowing one Weekly for two Dailies. Thus, if the General Conference adjourns in five weeks, subscribers to the Daily will receive three copies of the Weekly to compensate for the six Dailies wanting to complete the sixth week. The Delegates will be furnished a copy gratis.

WEEKLY SESSION PAPER.—We will also send, to such as may prefer it, the Weekly "Pittsburgh Christian Advocate," for six weeks, during the session of the General Conference, and until the whole of the proceedings are published. TERMS—thirty three cents for one copy—four copies for 'one dollar.'

It is desirable to have the names as soon as possible, that we may know how large an edition of each will be needed. The money may be forwarded by the delegates where convenient. Great care will be combined with dispatch, in both printing and mailing, that subscribers may receive authentic intelligence at the earliest possible period.

All communications to be addressed to Rev. W. Hunter, Editor of the Pittsburgh Christian Advocate, Pittsburgh, Pa. Let those who send subscribers be careful to say they are for the session paper, and whether they are for the Daily or Weekly.

We respectfully request of our Methodist cotemporaries an early insertion of the above Prospectus—a favor which we will reciprocate if ever we have the opportunity.

Any paper inserting this Prospectus, and sending a copy containing it to this office, will be entitled to a Daily during the session of General Conference.

TO THE AFFLICTED.
READ AND BE WISE.

ALL those afflicted with that most distressing disease the PILES, can obtain certain relief, and in nineteen out of twenty cases a positive and permanent cure, by calling at S. B. Johnson's Agency, Putnam, and obtaining a box of Johnson's Vegitable Pile Ointment. This remedy has been in use in this vicinity for several years. And it is admitted by all who have tested its virtues to be superior to anything of the kind ever before offered to the public. A large number of certificates, from those cured by the use of the Vegitable Ointment, could be given in proof of its virtues, but it is deemed unnecessary.

THE partnership existing between S. C. Haver & W. C. Stickney, known as the firm of S. C. Haver, & Co., is this day dissolved by agreement. Those having claims against or unsettled accounts with said firm will take notice that we wish to pay our debts—& as this is the first time we have appeared in the public newspaper to ask for our just dues, our customers will excuse us, if we should say that we want to settle all our accounts, and if it is entirely convenient for them that they would pay us instanter. THE OHIO CULTIVATOR FOR 1848

Published at Columbus, Ohio, on the 1st and 15th of each month, M. B. Bateham, Editor and Proprietor. Terms, $1 per year—four copies for $3—payment invariably in advance.

THE fourth volume of the Ohio Cultivator will commence Jan. 1st. 1848. This paper has now become so well known that it is scarcely necessary to speak of its character, or to allude to the commendations it has received from the Public Press and other sources. The editor is determined to spare no pains on his part to sustain the reputation of the work, and make each succeeding volume more useful than the preceding one. Our motto is "upward and onward;" and the object of the "Cultivator" is not only to collect and disseminate valuable facts and information relating to practical agriculture, but to inspire 'Farmers' with more just conceptions of the dignity of their profession; to induce them to cultivate the 'Mind' as well as the 'soil,' and thus elevate themselves to that position which it is their duty and privilege to occupy as 'American Agriculturists,' in this age of Progress and Improvement.

With its very large list of contributors, numbering over "two hundred," most of them practical farmers in the West, the pages of the "Cultivator" will contain the results of "Experience," as well as the teachings of "Science;" and being written or selected with special reference to the climate, productions and farming of Ohio, this paper will be found more valuable than any other for the farmers of this and the adjoining States. It will contain the latest intelligence of the "Markets" of this country and England; notices of the weather and the crops; descriptions (with engravings,) of improved implements, machines, &c.; instructions in gardening and fruit culture; rearing and management of domestic animals; construction of farm buildings, fences, &c.; and a "Ladies' Department" devoted to household affairs, useful receipts, &c.

The friends of Improvement in Ohio and adjoining States are requested to obtain and forward subscribers for the Ohio Cultivator. Remember that the price is only "seventy-five cents" each, when four or more names are sent by one person. All subscriptions must commence with the first number of the volume; a complete index is furnished at the end of the year. Specimen numbers and a prospectus will be forwarded to all who desire them.

☞"Now is the time to subscribe!" Letters with remittances may be sent by mail at the risk and expense of the publisher. Address,

A NEW AND IMPROVED VOLUME FOR 1848!

SEARS' PICTORIAL FAMILY MAGAZINE,

Established for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge:

A Monthly Miscellany of moral and instructive information, embellished with numerous ENGRAVINGS of the various subjects treated of in the course of the year. Published monthly, in parts of 48 large octavo pages each.

PROSPECTUS FOR THE FIFTH VOLUME.

For four years the Pictorial Family Magazine has been before the American public, and it is peculiarly gratifying to the Publisher to know, that his efforts to do good through its medium, have met with the universal approbation of the public & the public prints, wherever it has found its way. It is now too firmly established upon the broad foundation of public confidence, to require a great flourish of trumpets to proclaim its continued existence, or the tricks of 'puffery' to allure the people to its support.

To those who are acquainted with the Magazine, it is unnecessary to speak of its design & merits; to those who are not, we will make a brief statement of both. The original design of this work was a noble one, and worthy of all praise. It was intended as a vehicle for conveying solid information to that class of citizens whose circumstances denied them the privilege of drinking abundantly

☞Price two dollars per annum—three copies for five dollars, or ten copies for fifteen dollars—invariably in advance, as no Numbers are sent out until the subscription is paid.

☞Thus far we have gone on steadily advancing in public favor, the sure indication of which has been a healthy increase in our subscription list. That we shall double our present number of subscribers in 1848, we have little doubt, for we intend doubling our efforts and increasing very greatly the value of the Magazine. We shall engage the very best engravers to be found. We have now some plates, illustrating a great variety of subjects, in progress for our new volume, that will be equal to anything that has appeared in the country.

☞EVERY MAN HIS OWN AGENT.—All remittances of money for this Magazine must be sent to us free of postage. Those wishing to take our Magazine, will please write direct to us, enclosing a year's subscription ($2,) or the price of a club (ten copies for $15,) in funds current in the State where they reside. This simplifies the whole matter of subscription, perfectly, and makes the communication, between publisher and subscribers, as it should be, direct.

LINES

WRITTEN ON THE DEATH OF MRS. MARIA BLAKE.

How oft we are called to bid adieu,
To friends our hearts hold dear!
How often with that last fond look
Flows true affection's tear.

They one by one are torn away—
Our wounded hearts bleed on!
For ere the tie first broke, is healed,
Another friend is gone.

And thus we weep the lov'd and good,
While nature sinks with grief,
O'erwhelm'd the soul to Jesus flies
And praying brings relief.

For there we learn, that those who mourn,
Yet trust in Jesus' blood
"Shall meet again," to part no more
Beyond death's gloomy flood.

There in that brighter, happier land,
Where sin cannot destroy,
With palms, and crowns, and harps of gold,
Each soul finds sweet employ.

'Tis there, we know our lov'd one fled;
She "read her title clear"—
And leaning on her Saviour's breast
"Breathed life out sweetly there."

Then with the seraph's quickly flew,
To join the waiting throng!
A mother, sister, brother stood,
With harps well tuned and strung.

And as she neared the blissful shore,
And folded up her wings—
The joyous anthem rose anew,
In praises to their King.

Biographical.

MRS. MARIA BLAKE.

Dear Br. Bassett: Another one of my father's family, is numbered with the inhabitants of the spirit world. Sister Maria is no more.—She died on the 17th instant in the faith of the Gospel. Of her character, life, &c., I need say but little. Those who knew her best were prepared to judge of her virtues—to say that her faith in Christ was made manifest by her works, that her daily walk corresponded with that of a Christian. Some twelve years ago she embraced the Saviour, and united herself to the Methodist P. Church: and till the day of her death she manifested her high regard for the welfare of that branch of the Christian Church. She labored to promote the cause of Christ. Well do I remember her sisterly counsels when first I left home and engaged in the work of the ministry—in every possible way she encouraged me in my arduous undertaking. In the autumn of forty-six she was united in marriage with Mr. John Blake of Sidney, O., and continued to live within a short distance of town, until her death. During her affliction which was long and severe, she manifested a resignation to the will of the Lord, yea, she had a desire "to depart ans be with the Lord." Such were the manifestations of God's presence to her, that when near death she said to her father that she felt like shouting aloud the praises of God. But now her sufferings are over: and while her numerous friends drop the silent tear, she is safely landed in glory. Already she has joined her relations who have gone before, and with them dwells in the Paradise of God.

How mysterious are the ways of Providence! within a short space of time several near ties have been severed from us by the cold hand of death. We mourn, but still we wish to say the will of the Lord be done. May we, who yet remain, be "also ready."

Itinerancy,---The Restrictive Rule.

NO. VIII.

Mr. Editor,—In our economy, the Annual Conference is left free to continue the same minister in the same field of labor three years successively. When a preachsr has been in an appointment one year, the Annual Conference, the appointment, and the preacher, are made the judges of the propriety of appointing him to the same place a second year,—and in the same way, a third year.—Now, if these three departments, are competent, to judge of the propriety of continuing the appointment of the same preacher to the same people a second or a third year, can any man living show that they would not be fully as capable of judging of the same thing in any succeeding year? They can exercise their judgment and authority in removing a minister at the end of one year, or at the end of two years. Suppose, then, that the three years rule in circuits, was extended to five years,—or to ten years—could they not exercise the same judgment and authority at the expiration of any one of the ten years? And so, the same authority would remain if the restrictive rule was out of the way altogether. Or will it be pretended that their ability to judge, ceases at the end of two years in stations and three years in circuits, as their ability to act, is now destroyed by the restrictive rule? This rule assumes that as a general thing, it is not for the best to continue preachers longer than three years in the same circuit. But experience has shown, that in some cases, it is not best to continue the same preacher with the same people more than one year, and that in other cases existing and visible facts show that the brother ought to remain longer than three years. Now, if the discretionary power, to act according to existing and visible facts, is found in one case, it ought, most certainly to be found in the other; if it is not, the greatest probable good is not secured; and any law, that is contrary to the greatest probable good, ought, most certainly, to be abolished. But it is urged that preachers would be kept too long in the same place if it were not for this rule, and that in this event, more good would be prevented than would be secured by leaving them free to stay as long as they were more useful than they probably would be in any other place. But is this true? Do not the parties exercise their judgment and authority in removing preachers at the end of one or two years? Certainly. And who can show a probability that they would not exercise the same judgment and authority at the expiration of any succeeding year? I think a long deep silence, to this question, will answer, no one. Indeed, I have been compelled for some years,—since I began to think upon this subject,—to regard the restrictive rule, as a burlesque upon common sense, and injurious to the interests of Christianity; and have frequently wondered why it has been continued and cherished by men of such talent and judgment as are found in the Methodist Church. It may be, however, that the want of discrimination is in me; but if so, I should like very much to be made sensible of it. It does appear to me that the church would be infinitely better off with the appointing power left free to continue the relation of a preacher to the same people as long as they believe it to be for the best; they drawing this belief, not from an established custom, but from existing and visible facts.

I have, in a former No., expressed a doubt whether it was for any good reason, that the rule in question, was at first brought into existence. I now go farther. I challenge any Methodist in the Universe to show, either by reason, ecclesiastical history, or revelation that the direction of the gospel ministry ought to be controlled by such a rule. If that rule is not a senseless thing, then I do not think correctly. I never have seen any reason for it, and I never expect to; but if any should be presented, I trust that I shall not be so far lost to reason, or steeled against conviction, as to be unable to see its force.

But there are some who will answer all the arguments by which any of our arrangements are assailed, in crying out against, what they call, "this everlasting tinkering at the wheels of government," as being certainly distructive; and urge, that when a thing is tolerable, and is productive of good, no improvement should be attempted, lest it should happen to be injurious instead of making the institution productive of more good. Their plea is, it has done well, why not let it alone?—It is true, that the Canadian boy might have gotten his corn to the mill in one end of the bag, and a stone in the other to balance it, as his fathers did before him, if the Yankee had not happened to come along and show him the art of dividing it. But he found afterward that it was much better to make it balance itself than to carry the stone. What we want, then, is that this cumbersome weight should be thrown off from the itinerancy.

Others are very fearful of making the impression that our institutions are not permanent. The Editor of the Methodist Protestant, in a recent editorial, thinks it would be better to refrain, at least for a while, from the agitation of supposed improvements upon the internal regulations of our ecclesiastical government. He thinks them in the main excellent, but readily concedes "that they are not perfect." Does this brother really think, that in our ecclesiastical institutions, discovered, acknowledged, and evident imperfections, ought not to be given up? If they are imperfections, the institution would be better without them, or something better can take their place. If this cannot be done, then the institution is as good as it can be, and hence, is not imperfect. Will he acknowledge, then, that we have the ability to free the internal regulations of our ecclesiastical government from such imperfections, and argue that we ought not to do it, lest we make the impression upon the public mind, that our institution are unsettled? Then the Methodist Episcopal Church has acted very wisely in refusing to comply with the petitions of reformers for lay representation, for they have shown that they will maintain an unchangable character at the expense of holding on to their imperfections. So, we need to go but little farther, to say that sinners act very wisely in refusing to give up their imperfections, lest they start the idea that they are unstable, or fickle minded.—Try it again, Br. Reese.

Says the same Editor, "what we have to avoid is the impression being made upon the public mind that our institutions are unsettled—that there is no stability in our economy. Once let this sentiment obtain in a community where we desire to operate, and our success from that moment will give place to decline." Now, I ask what change in our economy has been made during the eighteen years of our organized existence? Not one of our principles has been given up. Not one of our leading features changed. We are so nearly the same that we were at the beginning, that no change is generally known to have taken place. And is it not always taken for granted, that the "internal regulations" of a church are to undergo such changes as will free them from discovered imperfections?—especially a young church? If this were not the case, age would make in it no improvement.—Now, this restrictive rule, I regard as one of the imperfections, which needs to be removed. What change would its removal be.—The itinerancy would exist as it now exists, with this exception, that it would be more efficient. The stationing authority would be precisely the same that it is now. The Annual Conferences would meet, exchange preachers, and transact all business which they now transact. The church would move on as it now does, but having the liberty to employ its ministers where there is the greatest probability of usefulness. What have we then to fear from making such a change? Can we not then come to an agreement, throughout the extent of our Zion, to free ourselves from this embarrassing item of our economy? Let us try. And I now give notice to the Muskingum Annual Conference, that the following resolutions will be presented for consideration at their next session.

Resolved, 1. That in the opinion of this Annual Conference, the restrictive rule, as provided for in Article 10 Sec. 7 of the Constitution, is detrimental to the interests of our Zion.

2. That the delegation to the next General Conference ought to be clothed with conventional authority, to so change the constitution as to free the stationing authority from the control of said rule.

3. That we now call upon all of our sister Conferences to take similar action upon this subject.

Come up, brethren prepared to act upon these, or simular, resolutions. Let us see what can be done; and if nothing can be accomplished at present, as true republicans, let us submit to the majority, until the set time to favor Zion shall come." I have now done, for the present. I have written for no personal gratification, or advantage, above what I may gain in the advanced welfare of the church; and it is my devout prayer, that in this, as in all things else we may be guided by the influence of Unering Wisdom. I am glad to find Br. Burns writing upon this subject. I hope others will write. May we not pleasantly, and profitably reason together?

PHYSICIANS.

No men in society occupy so responsible a position as physicians, (as some one has said) and unhappily, of the merits of no individual are the public so illy qualified to judge. Half the attention and the time devoted to minor politics arising out of our party dissentions, assisted by very little of that overboiling zeal, would, if appropriated to medical studies, enable any person of tolerable capacity, to determine between the six months "arrant quack" and the modest, well-educated, and judicious physician. Of all the sciences it is the most inviting, and that which opens the largest treasure to its cultivators. No one can lend his mind to it without receiving "usurious interest." Medicine is the digest of human knowledge. It is the great reservoir into which every stream of science pours its tribute, which in return spreads its fertilizing water over every field that brings forth its "ripe and abundant harvest." The want of a popular medical education—promotes the success of quacks. To what else can the amazing increase of these creatures be ascribed? Would they dare drop the yard stick and lapstone and leave the shades of their native insignificance, if they thought they were to encounter the blaze of criticism, or to be inspected and scrutinized by the torch of truth? No: the terrors of such a process, were it practiced, would exterminate the race, or leave to them only a "beggarly account of empty boxes." We repeat, that empyrics are nurtured and sustained exclusively by the prejudices of mankind (that is the ignorant part) in their favour, arising from their inability to judge rightly of their merits. For, can it be presumed that any one acquainted with the subject, would repose the slightest confidence in a quack? Reason and experience combine to assert the impossibility. Whoever acquires it, that is that thorough knowledge of it, which confers "surpassing skill," must undergo a slow, toilsome and arduous probation. The energies of genius, assisted by unwearied diligence, can only hope to surmount the difficulties and to gain the prize. At the present period, knowledge on this subject is peculiarly important. Notwithstanding the science of medicine has, within the last few years, progressed with a rapidity unparalelled in its history, it is a remarkable fact that our State is becoming freighted with empyrics and practitioners who are shamefully behind the present advanced state of the profession. A man may practice forty years & if he be unacquainted with the great fundamental principles of his profession, he will still be an unsafe practitioner. Because his theorizing will be vague, his deductions false and his practice dangerous. Therefore the best standard for the unprofessional to judge of a physician's attainments is, what have been his opportunities for acquiring a knowledge of these indispensible elementary principles, viz: The knowledge of the human system, its functions in disease as well as in health, and the collateral science. For instance, I have heard an old practitioner acknowledge, that he knew very little about chemistry. Now, the man who is thus ignorant, I care not what has been the length or extent of his experience, his patients are in imminent danger. For he is constantly liable to administer medicines the effects of which will destroy each other, or produce compounds in the system destructive of health and even life. Professor Dungleson very aptly remarks, that the character of the physician's mind should be enquired into, his modes of reasoning, his degree of mental application, &c. "If a man cannot reason on general topics he cannot on medical topics." I am well aware that hesitancy on the part of the practitioner to give his views, touching the disease of his patient to friends, is mostly attributed to a disinclination to gratify inquiry.—But my word for it, in nine cases in ten, it is their ignorance. Miserabile vulgus:—"A wretched crew."

Narrative.

From Green's Arts and Miseries of Gambling.

An Affecting Account

Of a Young Man brought to Ruin and an Untimely Death by Gambling.

The narrative which I now propose to give, will, I trust, be of much service to many of my readers. If we ourselves are sufficiently apprized of the deception practiced by mankind, perhaps we have some friends who are comparatively in the dark in relation to such matters; and if so, it is certainly our duty to inform them, that they may not be subjected to the danger of having to learn by sad experience. In this narrative I shall relate nothing that is not founded on facts that have come to my own knowledge.

Some time in the year 1829, there removed to the south-western part of Virginia a gentleman of fortune, a Mr. C———. His family consisted of a wife and an only son of the age of about fifteen years. At that age, his parents sent him to Philadelphia to receive his education. At the expiration of five years he returned, and found his parents very much elated at the improvement he had made. There lived a near neighbor to him, a Mr. T———, a man of wealth. He had retired to live on the riches he had accumulated; and his most intimate friends apparently could not tell whence they came. He very frequently, in his younger days, had made trips to the south with slaves for that market, and always returned with large profits, and it mattered not who went with him, they always came back bankrupts. Mr. T. finally settled himself, and came to the conclusion that the interest of what he had, would be sufficient to support him handsomely for the rest of his days. He was a man of high life, was very liberal to the poor, and denied himself of no company or amusement however expensive, that would minister to his enjoyment. He was particularly fond of horse-racing and cock-fighting, and always kept himself supplied with the finest horses and most choice fowls for these purposes. But he still had managed it so that none who knew him in private life, had any knowledge of the business in which he was engaged. He was generally from home when the races were going on, or a cock-match was to be fought; but still he so managed matters to prevent any censure being laid on him. His horses would almost invariably win, but he always said he did not make any thing more than expenses.

Mr. C. was a different man from T., he was a man of fine moral principles; his chief amusement was hunting with his pack of hounds and gun; but this was a kind of sport that did not suit Mr. T. He never paid any attention to any thing from which he could derive no other profit than mere amusement. Mr. T. always made it a part of his business to find out the state of every man's affairs in his neighborhood, and those in the best circumstances were always sure to receive the greatest share of his attention. During the acquaintance he had formed with Mr. C., he had learned that his son would fall heir to the whole of his father's estate. From that time his whole mind was occupied in contriving some means by which he might get possession of Mr. C.'s fortune. To this end, his first step was to become acquainted with young Mr. C. on his return, to his father's house from school. It so happened, that shortly after his return, he went out with his dogs on a fox-hunt. Mr. T. had his horse caught, and started to accompany him; they were out some considerably time, but with no success, and when they were about to return, the following conversation took place between them:—said Mr. T., 'This is dry sport,' 'Yes,' said the young man, 'but it is a kind of amusement I am very fond of,' 'O yes,' replied Mr. T., 'I was once as much pleased with it as you appear to be, but I found other amusements that are much more desirable; I raise fine horses and it affords me great pleasure to see them run." "But," said Mr. C., "I always considered such a kind of sport, cruel upon the dumb brute." "Not if they are really fine-blooded animals," said Mr. T., "for in that case they take as much delight in it as your dogs do in the chase." "I always thought that they had to be forced to run." Mr. T. told him that in this he was very much deceived, and added, "You know that I have a stable of colts in course of training, and I wish you to come to-morrow morning and see them gallop."

Mr. C. having accepted the invitation, called on the following morning to witness the training of the colts. He started several, and they ran with great speed, and apparently with so much ease to themselves, that Mr. C. formed a better opinion of this kind of sport. Mr. T. saw that he was favorably impressed with what had passed, and in a few evenings after, gave him an invitation to attend a party at his house. The evening came, and Mr. C. attended and found a number of young persons amusing themselves with cards. They insisted on Mr. C. joining them, which he refused, urging as a plea for his refusal, that he was wholly unacquainted with games of that kind. This the company overruled, as they promised to instruct him. They drew for partners, and Mr. C. drew for his a Miss Amelia, the niece of Mr. T., a very beautiful girl, and a first-rate whist player. The evening passed away, and Mr. C. was very much delighted with the game. At the close of the evening's amusements, Mr. T. proposed to Mr. C. that he would accompany him to the city on the following day, observing that himself and Miss Amelia were going, and that there would be a vacant seat; to this invitation the young gentleman promptly assented. They accordingly set out for the city next morning, Miss Amelia appearing much elated with her anticipated visit to the city, but particularly with the prospect of being present at the races. "Ah, indeed?" said Mr. C. "I never knew that ladies visited the races," "O, yes," said Mr. T. "all the tips of society attend our clubs; that is, Mr. C., privately; no swindling, all merely for pastime and sport, sir—there is a great deal of difference, I assure you, sir." "I suppose so," said Mr. C., "but I know nothing about any kind of racing, except that of boys in their sports at school." "Well," said Mr. T., "I will explain the difference; the match-races are made by two men, each starting a horse; each man puts up so much, and the fastest horse wins the money, and so you see sometimes they do cheat in this kind of racing. But, sir, whenever each man starts a horse, (sometimes seven or eight start,) the one that gets out first takes the money, and then you see that none of us gentlemen, of the club can lose much." Mr. C. replied that he had always had a very contemptible feeling for all kinds of sporting. "O yes," said Mr. T., "and so did I with certain classes of sportsmen, but we club-men always see to it that none of this loose class of men get in with us."

When they arrived at the city they put up at at one of the principal hotels. After tea, Mr. C. was invited to wait on Miss Amelia to the theatre. This being a place nearly as bad in Mr. C.'s eyes as the race-course, he said to Mr. T. that he had always thought, from what he had heard that the theatre was a place of dissipation. "O no," said Mr. T. "not those that we attend," as if there was a line of distinction to be drawn between theatres. "You will see," added Mr. T. 'all the first people of the city there, and you will see nothing but innocent amusements."

Mr. C. finally concluded to go. He felt very much interested, and could not see what harm there could be in going to such a place. The next scene for him to visit was the race course, though it cost him a struggle to overcome his objections to going; he thought, however, that if such young ladies as Miss Amelia could attend such places, there was no good reason that he should stay away; he therefore determined to go.

Color of the Stars.

Some undefined circumstance in the constitution of the celestial bodies produces the effect of their exhibiting, not only a different degree, but a different kind of lustre. Their light is by no means uniform. The ray of Sirius differs not merely in intensity, but in kind, from that of Vega; that is perceptible in this country; but in those favored regions where the atmosphere is more pure—where less of humidity and haze exist—the difference is striking, even to the naked eye; "one star differing from another in glory." One star shines as an emerald, while another glows as a ruby, adorning the winter's sky with a rich variety of sparkling gems, differing not more in size than they do in hue or brilliancy. This circumstance of variation of colors characterizes the double stars; and it is remarkable that, sometimes, when one of these stars is of one marked color its companion is of another. There are many instances in which a red and green star are associated, or a yellow with a blue. This may be the result of optical delusion, when the stars are of different degrees of brilliancy, as the eye has a tendency, when gazing on any bright color, to endow fainter objects near it with the opposite color as a relief; but this is not always borne out, as many instances occur in which couples, in precisely similar situations, display no such contrast. Sir John Herschel was at first inclined to the opinion that a diversity of color did inherently exist in each star; but he has subsequently appeared more inclined to attribute the phenomena to some circumstance connected with the beholder.

Eloquence of Action.—Demosthenes and Daniel Webster agree in attributing eloquence to action. Both proved the theory true by their action. A clegyman we have read of did the same thing more demonstrably. His wife had just been buried, and he was closing the service over her grave. Stretching forth his hand, and pointing towards the grave, he said; 'there the wicked cease from troubling,' and then placing his hand on his breast, 'and the weary are at rest.'

I once met on the sea shore, said the eastern poet Sadi, a pious man who had been attacked by a tiger and horribly mutilated. He was dying and suffering dreadful agonies. Nevertheless his features were calm and serene, and his physical pains seemed to be vanquished by the purity of his soul. 'Great God,' said he, 'I thank thee that I am only suffering from the fangs of the tiger, and not from remorse.'

If Christians must contend, let it be like the olive and the vine, which shall bear the most and best fruit, and not like the aspen and the elm, which shall make the most noise in the world.

True goodness of heart nourishes itself in the good which we do to others. The good loves him to whom he does good, as the bad hates whom he has injured.

The Gourd and the Palm Leaf.—A gourd wound itself round a lofty palm and in a few weeks climbed to the very top.

'How old may'st thou be? asked the new comer.

'About a hundred years.' was the answer.

'A hundred years and no taller! Only look; I have grown as tall as you in fewer days than you can count years.'

'I know that well,' replied the palm.—'Every summer of my life a gourd has climed up around me, as proud as thou art, and as short lived as thou will be.'

The first Quaker.—An old American savage at an inn in New York, met with a gentleman who gave him some liquor, and being rather lively, he began to boast that he could read and write English. The gentleman: being willing to indulge him in displaying his knowledge, begged leave to propose a question, to which the old man consented. He was then asked who was the first circumcised. The Indian immediately replied, father Abraham; and directly asked the gentleman who was the first Quaker. He said it was very uncertain, as the people differed in their sentiments.—The Indian precieving the gentleman unable to resolve the question, put his fingers into his mouth; to express his surprise, and told him Mordecai was the first Quaker, for he would not pull off his hat to Haman.

A good man—a real Christian—seldom sees a defect in his neigbor. A pure lake reflects the beautiful sky, the clouds, and the over-hanging trees, but when it is riled it reflects nothing that is pure. A bad man—a real scoundrel—seldom sees a good trait in the character of his neighbor. An imperfect glass reflects nothing correctly, but shows its own deficiency. A perfect mirror reflects nothing but bright and pure images.

Tricking a Toper.—One of the best stories of the season is told by Sandy Welsh, of a man who was in the country on a visit, where they had no liquor. He had got up two hours before breakfast and wanted his bitters. None were to be had; of course he felt bad.

"How far is it to a tavern?" he asked.

"Four miles."

So the thirsty soul started—walked four miles in a pleasant frame of mind, arrived at the tavern, and it was a Temperance House.

Never Countenance Profanity.—If you happen to be in company where the tale turns into part obscenity, scandal, folly or vice of any kind, you had better pass for morose and unsocial among people whose good opinion is not worth having, than shock your own conscience by joining the conversation which you must disapprove of.

Boiling Heat.—It has been generally supposed that 212 deg. of Fahrenheit was the uniform boiling heat. Recent investigations prove the incorrectness of this supposition. Experiments lately made by Mousieur Douni, a Belgian philosopher, prove that water, when totally deprived of air, does not boil before it has been raised to 269 deg. It may boil at any point between 212 and 269 deg., according to the amount of air of which it has been deprived. These experiments, taken in connection with the phenomenon observed at the Geysers in Iceland, are attracting the attention of scientific men in Europe.

☞ If the sick wish a diseased stomach restored and impure blood cleansed without endangering the constitution, go to J. Dean, Grocer and Shoemaker, Putnam, and obtain a box of Dr. Le Roy's Sarsaparilla and Wild Cherry Pills which is the best family medicine now in use. So says Mr. O'Neil the Agent.

DR. LE ROY'S

Wild Cherry, and Sarsaparilla PILLS.

Dr. Le Roy has most happily succeeded in combining Wild Cherry and Sarsaparilla with other vegetable ingredients, so as to produce a medicine at once tonic, and purgative, the only perfect discovery of the kind ever made. Their great peculiar excellence, and that which distinguishes them from all other purnatives is, that their operation is followed by no re-action. Their unrivalled purifying and purgative properties, for which they are indebted to the essence of Sarsaparilla, and other ingredients, being controlled by their highly tonic virtues, derived from the extract of Wild Cherry, they do not strain the digestive organs into action, as is the mode of operation with other cathartics, but on the contrary strengthen them into action. Thus all other purgative medicines produce more or less subsequent costiveness, and sluggishness of the gastric juice, while Dr. Le Roy's Pills leave all the machinery of the system full of life and activity, and the bowels open and natural. "Hence," writes Dr. Cheeseman, "they are the only active purgative which I can recommend with confidence, and without alarm; for they remove nothing but what ought to be removed—neither rack, nor strain—occasion no apathy or debilitation—and leave the bowels free, open, and vigorous." But the great virtue of Dr. Le Roy's Pills—the virtue which has spread their fame over the two hemispheres with a rapidity almost miraculous—lies in their purification of the blood. Here they not only stand altogether unrivalled, but fill up the measure of desire. They at once arrest the formation of bad blood, by removing all impurities from the chyle, of which the blood is formed; and moreover keep it clean, by toning and strengthing the digestive organs, so as to be able to exclude from it all matter of an innutricious nature; and then they purify the blood already in circulation; and never cease operation until it is entirely free from every noxious particle, & full of health, life, and vigor. For sale at J. Dean's.

Selected Poetry.

MORNING INVOCATION.

BY PARK BENJAMIN.

Rise, thou that sleepest! dull and drowsy soul,
Let earth's dim shadow from thy vision roll—
Shake from thy sense the heavy cloud of night,
Awake, arise—and Christ will give the light.

To God, my Maker, do I lift mine eyes,
To Him I pay my morning sacrifice;
Toward Heaven my soul to aspiration goes—
The bourne of bliss, the harbor of repose.

Betimes at morning it is good to raise
Deep supplication and consummate praise,
To muse and meditate and inly give
Our hearts to God, in whom we move and live.

For this beginning of another day,
This grateful freshness this enlivening ray,
To Him we owe, to Him alone, by whom
Darkness dissolves and wildernesses bloom.

Rise, sluggish soul, and Life's new burden take
With calm contentment for thy Saviour's sake;
For thee in sleep he bowed his sacred head,
For thee he rose triumphant from the dead.

Save me, oh save me by his cross and grief
In his wounds' bleeding let me find relief—
Then, oh my God, from sin and anguish free,
Shall my lone spirit rise and soar to thee!

The Church of the Clergy—The Church of the People—The Church of both the Ministry and the People.

Br. Bassett: Some of your readers will recollect that the M. E. C. Centenary Church of Brooklyn, L. Island, rejected a Mr. Griffin, who was sent by a bishop to be its minister, and that another minister of the M. E. C. was employed by that church to be its minister. The appointing bishop, or some one for him, (being resolved at all costs to maintain the authority of the bishop which he, of course, held as a sacred deposite from his predecessors, and for the good of his successors, whoever they may be,) brought suit to eject Mr. Green who was only the choice of the people, and to secure the pulpit for the bishop's nominee. The result of the suit is given in "The True Wesleyan," of Feb. 5th. Part of that article is as follows:

"Centenary Church—Brooklyn.—Judge Edmonds delivered his decision, in this case on Monday last. It is a very long and able document, and sustains the authority of the bishop's appointment, against the trustees who rejected the bishop's preacher. The decision rests mainly upon the following points:

1. The Centenary Church was built as a M. E. Church, and all the donors who contributed funds, did so for the purpose of building a Methodist Episcopal Church, ond with the expectation that it should be occupied and controled entirely according to the discipline and government of the M. E. Church.

2. The right to appoint the preachers to their several fields of labor, belongs absolutely to the bishop, according to the government of the M. E. Church, without consulting the wishes of the preachers or the people to whom they are sent. This the Judge showed by the entire history of the appointing power, and its exercise, as well as from the very letter of the rule.

3. The course of the Trustees in rejecting Mr. Griffin, was a violation of the trust committed to them. The Trustees can only hold and govern the property so far as to carry out the known wishes of the donors, by whose contributions the trust was created. But in this case it was clear that their intentions at the time of creating the trust, were that the house should be subjected to the bishop's appointment, and open to receive the bishop's preacher. When, therefore, the Trustees rejected the preacher sent them by the bishop, they violated the intentions of the donors, and, per consequence, transcended their power.

4. The writ of mandamus always has been and still is the remedy for such wrongs, where there is no other specific remedy provided by law. There being no law against the exercise of such authority as the bishop exercises, and no other adequate remedy being provided for the injury done the rejected preacher, the Judge granted a peremptory mandamus to put Mr. Griffin in possession of the pulpit and parsonage."

The editor of the True Wesleyan understands that there will be an Appeal to a higher court; where it will, probably, be decided whether those who formed the Methodist Episcopal Church at Baltimore in the year 1784—the said church being formed only by a few travelling preachers—did forever bind the then members of the church and all succeeding members in all generations in irrevocable vassalage to the bishops and the itinerant ministry, and that class of ministers, in similar vassalage to the bishops. That first Conference, and every succeeding General, and Annual, Conference, have assumed, possessed, and exercised, "full powers" over Methodist Episcopal people—never allowing them a voice in their government—and the bishops have held the livings of the itinerant preachers wholly in their hands. The prerogative of a bishop at every Annual Conference has been to say, to every itinerant minister, "Go to such a people." There was no appeal. Disobedience to the Bishop's mandate was a certain act of expatriation from the Conference and the itinerancy. We never knew of, or heard of, any other consequence.—When a preacher was sent to a people, they were obliged to receive him, or if they objected, the bishop, or his agent, a presiding elder, only had the power to make a change. The bishop's will governed absolutely all appointments. The destiny of every itinerant preacher was at the end of the bishop's pen. Independently of the people, the bishop's edict—consisting only of a man's name, declared who should be their ruler and pastor for one year or two, and in the case of presiding elders, four years—less or more—as the bishop pleased. This power of the bishops gave them the sole right of presentation to all the livings—the sole power to bestow cures in every station and circuit of Episcopal Methodism.*

Judge Edmonds has decided that the right of presentation to all Episcopal Methodist pulpits, is, in the view, and by the sanction of the civil law vested as a civil as well as an ecclesiastical right, prerogative, and jurisdiction, in the bishops of the M. E. C., and in them only.—Twenty-six years ago we said, the preachers could not call their souls their own in reference to appointments—nor could the people call their souls their own, in regard to a choice of religious teachers. We said, all the Methodist Episcopal meeting houses virtually belong to the bishops, as they only can present to all pulpits. Now, Judge Edmonds says the same things. But there may be an appeal. Very good. Should Judge Edmond's decision be confirmed—why then all that Reformers said, more than twenty years ago will be confirmed. Should the decision be reversed—what then? It will appear that however unwillingly the lay people and the local preachers of the Methodist Episcosal Church have supposed that they had alienated their right to choose their own ministers, the civil law does not recognize their alienation of such valuable American birth-right privileges. That this right is inherently and inalienably theirs, however or whenever they may waive its existence. We know that some few Methodists have thought that the bishop's power was conceded to them only as a privilege for the common good of the itinerant preachers and the people—but, the bishops place a much higher estimate on their sole authority—the bishops say, this is our prerogative—they appeal to the civil law, and that law says, it is a prerogative and not a mere privilege. See, at every Annual Conference, every district, station, and circuit, is vacant. No one can occupy any one of them without a direct appointment from a bishop, if one is present. He alone assigns to every preacher his place of labor—he need not, and seldom does, assign any reasons—the preacher must go, or locate, as the bishop pleases—and the people, to whom preachers are sent, must receive them or none. This was said to the Centenary Church, which said, nay, we will not receive Mr. G. and we will have a minister of our own choice. The bishops finding grass would not do, have got a judge to throw stones to let people know that veto acts are not allowed in Episcopal Methodist Churches. A thousand church communicants cant say No, to a bishop's nominee, who comes with power from his patron to teach them their duties. Against such rights of patrons, and such rights of their nominees; and in favor of the communicants to choose their own pastor, the great and good Dr. Chalmers took the lead in the great secession from the kirk of Scotland, and on the 18th of May, 1843, no fewer than 474 ministers left that church and formed the Free Church of Scotland. We do not desire secessions so much as a thorough revolution in the Methodist Episcopal system of itinerant supremacy.

*The Free Church of Scotland was caused by resisting presentation. All livings in the English State Church are in the hands of patrons. A spiritual charge is called a cure. All patronage, presentations, bestowments, are the bishop's property held and used for the good of the M. E. C., and the world!

Restrictive Rule.

REPLY II.

In noticing the second article of Br. Joseph upon the "Restrictive Rule," as he is pleased to term it, we would however, in this place and at this time, in the most solemn manner enter our protest against this appellation, from the fact that it does not convey the idea intended; and instead of its being a simple rule of the church, it is a part of the organic law, or foundation, upon which this noble fabric of ecclesiastical liberty has been built, by almost super natural wisdom. And we have thought that Br. Joseph and his coadjutors, have not looked this matter thus full in the face, that is, that they were tugging at the foundation of the church, and that the consequences resulting from the removal of a single stone, or section, might be the entire destruction of our glorious and beloved institution. They have not perhaps considered themselves in their proper character, that is—in the light of revolutionists, making an effort to subvert, at least in part the government of the church. If they have not, we would ask them most seriously to consider well their position, before they take another step upon this critical and dangerous ground. And we will here make a quotation or two from a respectable author; touching this subject of revolution, viz: "Whatever form they may adopt is a legitimate government, and no individual in any succeding generation, has a shadow of right to attempt to subvert it or excite the people to do so. Yet individuals who are dissatisfied, have a right to consult their happiness and leave the country;" or church "but so long as they reside in either, they are bound to obey the laws." And further from the same author, and which we conceive is directly, to the case in controversy. "For in many cases revolutions do not result so much from a sense of intolerable oppression, as from a fondness for an idol—a golden calf—a false God—an imaginary degree of liberty, which, if it were real, the frailty, perverseness and folly of mankind, to say nothing of their wickedness, injustice and depravity, wholly disqualify them from enjoying.

Having said thus much, upon the general subject of revolutions, we come to notice more particularly Br. Joseph's 2nd No. He lays down his premises.

First, "It declares the prohibition to appoint ministers and preachers longer than three years successively on the same circuit, and two years successively in the same station, to be contrary to Apostolic usage." As for his sympathetic "reflections" with them we have nothing to do, we leave them for the women and children.—"But rather the difficulty lies in necessarily connecting with an efficient Itinerancy an absolute human restriction upon the time which ministers employ with the same people." With regard to this principle of restriction, which has been harped upon so long and so loud by Br. Joseph, we have a word or two to say; for his accommotion. We will remove this obnoxious principle, from our constitution and book of discipline, and see what a beautiful and salutary government we would have. The class-leaders appointed for life, the stewards never to be removed, the preachers, to remain in the same circuit or strtion for life, President to continue in office as a Bishop, and to be clothed with absolute and dictatorial power; this is the skeleton of a government without restrictions, we do hope we shall never hear any thing more against this principle, since it is that and that only, which, render our church as well as our political government, the best and most salutary of all other, upon the face of the entire earth.

"Now I fearlessly challenge the objectors to furnish a copy of such restrictive rule which circumscribes the labors of the Apostles." We might with equal propriety ask him and his associate to furnish us a "copy" of the constitution of the M. P. Church from the N. Testament.

We shall now notice his proposition, that our spstem of appointing ministers is, "contrary to Apostolic usage;" upon the same principle of reasoning, this thing of holding General and Annual Conferences, is "contrary to Apostolic usage," and the office of President is also wrong. from the fact that there was no such an office amongst the Apostles; and lay representation is also "contrary to Apostolic usage." Thus you see that this course of reasoning would blot ou our entire constitution and book of discipline, save the general principles alone, which are taken from the Divine Code. HOMO.

The Moral Revolutions of the Gospel.

Extract of a Sermon by Rev. T. Potter, from a volume of Sermons now in press.

"These that have turned the world upside down have come hither also."

Yes! O yes! ye Enemies of the Cross, this, this is the revolution of the World, which the Gospel aims, and is calculated to produce! Not the subversion of all that is dear in domestic life! Not the disruption of civil society! Not the overthrow of human government! No!—no!—but a revolution of sentiment, that will "bring every thought into obedience to the law of Christ;"—a transfer of the affections, that will make mankind "but a little lower than the Angles;"—an alteration of conduct, which precludes all evil, and is productive of all excellency,—originating and promoting "whatever is lovely, whatever is of good report, whatever is holy, and whatever is praise-worthy!" O glorious revolution! Delightful inversion of the moral world!—We challenge Deism, or its kindred systems to do a work so great,—so good! Let Deists, if they can, furnish a moral lever, that will thus "turn the world upside down!" Let all the many, and mongrel clans of Scepticism,—from the rude Blasphemers to the sly Sophisters,—find, among their moral means, a power equal to the mighty task of turning round the universe of Man! Where can philosophy, with all her lofty looks, point us,—where can Deism, with all its arrogant boasting, direct us,—to similar transformations of character; to revolutions of principle and of practice so sublime, and so complete! Deism! that arrogates to itself the Age of Reason. Infidelity! that was to rescue man from the degradations and impositions of Priestcraft. Philosophy! the self-styled High-priest of Nature. Where are your triumphs, ye pretended Conservators of the World? Where your conversions of men? Where the "New Creatures," you have created,—the moral creations among mankind, you have accomplished?—In vain, we inquire for the reformed profligates, you have saved; for the returning prodigals, you have reclaimed; for the erring wanderers, you have brought back to duty, to virtue, and to God; for the unhappy sufferers, you have lifted up to light, to hope, and to happiness! In vain, we look around to discover, the Homes you have blessed,—the neighborhoods you have reformed,—the Communities you have purified and improved,—the Nations you have have exalted and crowned with glory! Where are the Temples, which Deism has built for God?—where are the Services, which Infidelity has done for the World?—where are the Individuals, whom Philosophy has made happier and better?—Triumphs!—Revolutions!—Conversions!—O yes! Deism has had its triumphs; but they were triumphs of misery and of mischief!—Deism too has had its revolutions; but they were all revolutions of blood, of massacre, and of terrer!—Aye!—and Deism does sometimes convert men; but it is a conversion, which makes the Convert "tenfold more a child of the Devil," than he was before his change!—When Deism prevails, what but unmitigated and unmingled evil is the result? It demonizes the heart:—it dethrones humanity:—it denaturalizes the soul:—it stultifies the intellect:—it brutifies the man:—it curses every connexion,—clouds every prospect,—confounds every motive,—cuts off every hope,—and conducts downwards to the lowest depths of moral degradation! Away then, thou Vain Boaster! Away, thou false Child of Devil! Infidelity, away; and hide thy dishonored head before the all-conquering Cross! The glorious Gospel of God our Saviour has triumphed,—does triumph,—and will continue to triumph, until the whole world of mankind shall be brought to realize its recuperative energies, and shall be resuscitated into a new, purer, nobler, and more felicitous state of existence! Error shall break away, like the dissolving mists of the morning, before the effulgence of its spreading light, until "all shall know the Lord, from the least to the greatest:"—its renewing grace shall go on "from conquering to conquer," until "every knee shall bow," and every heart shall yield, to the scepter of Sovereign Love:—its hallowed influences shall operate broader, and deeper, and more effectively, and more extensively, until the last vestage of Satan's rule, or of sin's defilement, or of Man's degeneracy, shall be annihilated; and this Earth shall be as "a New Earth, wherein dwelleth" universal "righteousness." Then the World will be "turned upside down!"

Western Sketches.

From the Lutheran Observer.

The Swedish Colony in Henry County, ILLINOIS.

It is probably known to most of the church that such a colony exists; but their principles and the cause which primarily led to its establishment may not be so generally understood.

Having recently spent several days with two of their preachers, I availed myself of the opportunity to obtain facts on those points, as far as their imperfect acquaintance with the English language would enable them to communicate.

From their report, it seems that religious intolerance and persecution, together with the corruption of the Swedish clergy in their region, led to the measures which resulted in the emigration of a considerable number—and the formation of the colony above named. In illustration of such statements, one of them related the following circumstance. The Lutheran priest was in the habit of inebriating indulgence in "strong drink," and consequently often appeared in the pulpit under its influence.—This Brother, who was a member of the Lutheran Ch., having better views of the sanctity of the gospel ministry was shocked at such wickedness, and refused any longer to attend tho ministry of the priest. Instead of going to church, therefore, on the Sabbath, he spent the day in reading the Bible for himself and some of his neighbors, who participated in his sentiments. This soon came to the ears of the priest, who immediately proceeded to the young man's house, and inquired as to the truth of the report. He at once admitted it: whereupon the priest denounced him, and commanded him to desist from reading the Bible and to attend church on the Sabbath.—This he positively refused to do, on the ground of the priest's frequent intoxication and general immorality. The priest then threatened him with imprisonment, if he proved obstinate. He replied that he could not do otherwise, and if the penalty was imprisonment, he was ready. The priest left him, and in a short time the officers appeared with orders for his arrest. He was accordingly torn from his young wife, and infant daughter, only ten weeks old, and led to prison where he was confined sixteen months! He was then brought to trial, and had it been in the power of the priest, he would have been subjected to further suffering; but no civil offence being substantiated against him, by the interference of a superior officer he was liberated.

The colony comprises about six hundred.—They have purchased about 12,000 acres of land, which they hold, with all else that they possess, as common stock. Their design in this, is, by the union of their labor, to secure a larger surplus, than they could by individual efforts and individual contributions, which surplus is to be devoted to the assistance of indigent Swedes who wish to leave their own country for one where the can enjoy security in the indulgence of their religious preferences.

One of the preachers has a wealthy father in Sweden, who intends to unite with the colony, resigning his property to its disposal. They did not state any other motive than this, and the example of some of the first christians, for their adoption of a community of goods. They make no efforts to perpetuate their own language by the exclusion of English schools. On the contrary they desire to have them, and have accordingly employed English teachers. Those brethren, before mentioned, are at the present time travelling for the purpose of more rapid improvement in the language of the country, by being separated from their countrymen and compelled to use the English; so that may be able to avoid the expense to the colony of employing English teachers, and thus render greater assistance to their brethren, who wish to leave Sweden. This is certainly the principle of christian benevolence to an unusual degree; and if they persevere in their enterprise, and all accessions to the colony pursue the same object, they will doubtless succeed in introducing many of their countrymen to the privileges which they have secured for themselves. They appear to be highly pleased with the country and its institutions, so far as a residence of not more than fifteen months has enabled them to form an opinion, prizing above all their religious liberty. They devote themselves to their work with a most commendable singleness of heart, and endure self denial, labor and fatigue, with great fortitude. There is, however, an element of exclusiveness pervading their association, that may debar them from that cordiality of sympathy which characterizes our citizens toward the persecuted and distressed. This may be excusable in some degree, when we remember the state of things in Sweden in regard to religion; and their ignorance of the condition of religion in the United States; and the limited education of their preachers which extends very little beyond the Bible.

Upon the whole, they constitute an object of interest to the Lutheran church; and a better acquaintance between the two might result in much encouragement and good to the colonists.—They have assumed no denominational distinction; but, if found sound in doctrine and correct in practice, the Lutheran church should not be backward in recognizing them. But this we have had no means of fully ascertaining as yet, for it would not be just to take the imperfect representations that their broken English enables them to give, as a correct exposition of their sentiments.

A Letter of Some Importance.

My own parlor, Feb. 14, 1848.
Maryland District.

Mr. Editor,—From your last paper I learn that the Conference of the Maryland District wil be held in Georgetown, D. C., in a few weeks from this time. I do not reside in Georgetown, but I have some friends that do, and I therefore disposed to drop you a line, which I hope may be effective in doing some good.

I believe that our preachers, generally, are as gentlemanly a set of men as can be found anywhere. I am proud of them. I could name a number who know how to render themselves perfectly agreeable to any family in which they may be accommodated. But this may not be said of all; and it is for the benefit of the few, that I write these lines, hoping thereby to correct the evils I shall name.

My husband says that I am the most particular woman in the world. Dear man, he has not an opportunity of judging of others, for his home is his castle, and he is generally content to stay securely within it. He is as warm-hearted a man as exists, and if I would consent to it, would make our house a hotel for every travelling friend he ever knew. To this I most strenuously object, except in the case of Methodist preachers, and they are always welcome—when they avoid what I am about to complain of.

It takes a woman a good while to tell anything, and you must therefore excuse me, if I am not quite so concise as some of your writers. I must tell a thing my own way, as my husband has often reminded me, or can not tell it at all.

Well, to make a long story short, I will begin. Some years ago my husband was kind enough to have my house neatly re-papered with a light and beautiful article. Our chairs, which had been in use some fifteen years, were superceded by new ones of a delicate and beautiful finish,—and my parlor was quite set out with a handsome new carpet, elegant rugs, and a pier-table with marble-slab. It was plain, neat, and comfortable furniture. I confess I felt pleased that as conference was approaching, I should have it in my power to accommodate the preachers with desirable comfort. Four were sent to our house; two of them finished gentlemen. The other two tried my patience beyond endurance, and at the risk of a severe scolding from my husband I am determined to tell upon them, for their own improvement and for the benefit of others.

On the night after the arrival of the two who annoyed me so greatly, I went into the parlor for the purpose of entertaing them. One of them was smoking a very offensive cigar most furiously, and my new carpet at once entered my mind. I energetically drew the spittoon from its place, and set it beside him. But he was so engaged in conversation that he did not see me, and continued to spit, first to the right and then to the left, until my patience became so exhausted that I could scarcely contain myself. Changing my seat, I encountered another and similar annoyance. His companion was a gentleman chewer, who supposing the rug upon the hearth was intended to save the carpet, used it, as sand boxes are used in hotels, and was quite free in his expectorations. I thought I should burst, but I did not, yet I cannot think of it to this day, without endangering my equanimity.

The next morning, on entering the parlor, I was horror-stricken. There sat the two gentlemen, with their feet upon my new chairs, scratching and defacing the finely polished rounds at a terrible rate. One of them was reading the newspaper—with his head thrown back against the wall, as a support, and my beautiful paper bears to this day the marks of his oily locks. My little girl, two years of age, came in just then, and arrested the attention of the man against the wall.

"Come here, my darling," said he.

The child approaching him; and laying down his cigar, he took her up, and placing his foot upon the seat of a chair, and the child upon his knee, he began to dance it up and down, while the heel of his boot at every movement left its melancholy memorial upon the edge of the cane work. I never look at that chair without feeling excessively worried. It has been an eye-sore to me ever since.

I had in my parlor two very handsome mahogany lounges. The veneering was delicate and beautiful, and very easily injured. Judge of my feelings, when, at night, our man of the cigar, instead of waiting for a boot-jack, unceremoniously placed his foot, to the top of the instep, under one of the said lounges, and with the application of the toes of the other foot, began to draw his foot, by this new mechanical contrivance. I fancied I heard the mahogany surface cracking, and could scarcely help screaming out, when my husband very coolly said.—"Brother ——, we have a boot-jack. It shall be brought for you."

The same night I was destined to another trial of my nerves. The chewer had taken his seat near my pier-table, and drawing his knife from his pocket he amused himself awhile in trimming his nails and cleaning them. Presently he applied his knife to the marble, and absoluely tried to cut it. Only think of that. The mark of his knife remains there to this day.

Now, Mr. Editor, do you not think I have had cause to complain? My husband says it was 'thoughtlessness' on the part of my guests. Well, be it so. I hope if they read this, they will think before they spit, scratch and soil paper, and cut marble, next time. I know that I was peculiarly unfortunate in my company that year, & that the majority of our preachers are not so thoughtless. But if you publish this, I venture to assure you, you will not offend the wives of your subscribers. I shall be happy when Conference comes round to our town next time, to accommodate, as usual; but I shall take care not to ask the smoker or the chewer before-mentioned.

Yours, truly,
PHOEBE MANNERLY.

Miscellaneous.

New Lands in New England.

Hon. Isaac Hill is reported to have made at Lebanon the other day the following remarks:

Prompted by an ardent curiosity to learn locations and duly estimate the value of that part of the north which has been passed by, as scarcely fit for settlement, I made my way through the northerly part of Vermont into the Canada townships to the Indian stream country, and down through New Hampshire, during the past winter. I was surprised at the extent and value of this whole country for farming purposes. I believe the belt of country for one hundred miles south of the 45th degree eastward of Lake Champlain, over Vermont and New Hampshire, thro' the whole extent of Maine to the Bay of Fundy and the sea, to be the most valuable tract of land in New England. The Canada townships of ten miles square farther north are splendid; Stanstead may be taken as a sample. The best township of Vermont is said to be Derby, lying side by side of it. The cattle and the productions of these two towns are all upon a larger scale than we find down south. Both in the Canada townships and within our own limits are thousands on thousands of beautiful lands, covered with the heaviest and most valuable timber, yet to be taken up. The climate here, most conducive to health and long life, should be regarded as no obstacle to the settler. The railroads are destined to make every standing tree valuable; the splendid growth need not be cut down, girdled, or wasted upon these lands. Upon this region the snow falling in November sometimes covers the ground till May. Contrary to my previous expectations, I am led to consider this annual covering a benefit rather than an injury; it gives a time for active business to all who have a desire to stir about; there the winter is the gayest and most desirable season. Clothed with its white covering, the ground is generally preserved from deep frosts, and the spring opens as a continued summer for the growth of vegetation. —Vt. Chronicle.

Slavery Abolished in Sweden.

The following proclamation has been issued by the Governor of the Swedish island of St. Bartholomew:

PROCLAMATION.

We, James H. Haasum, Knight of the Royal Order of the Sword, Governor in and over this Island of St. Bartholomew, &c., &c., &c.

James H. Haasum.

Whereas our proclamation, of the 17th September last, informed all whom it might concern, that the abolition of slavery in this island would be proclaimed on this day, and that His Majesty by an especial favor had been most graciously pleased to grant a new and last term, which by the same proclamation was limited to the 8th instant, at 12 o'clock in the day, within which all slaves belonging to the inhabitants of this island should be reported and presented for emancipation, under the consequence that no claim or claims whatsover, to compensation for slave or slaves not so reported and presented, should be accepted and acknowledged by the crown. And whereas, that term expired yesterday, and the slave emancipation is now thoroughly completed; the crown having in a fair and just manner compensated the inhabitants for all slaves belonging to them, which were reported and presented in due time.

Now, therefore, we do by these presents, in the name of our most gracious sovereign Oscar, King of Sweden, Norway, &c., &c., &c.,

Ordain and decree, that all bondage and slavery shall forever henceforth cease to exist and be tolerated in this island of St. Bartholomew and dependencies, which is hereby promulgated for the dutiful observance of all whom it may concern.

Use of the Lungs.—It is quite an accomplishment to be able to breathe properly. The functions of the lungs are so important that too much care cannot be taken in order that their action may not be impeded. The stays, corsets, braces or any kind of apparatus by which the full inflation of the lungs is hindered or prevented, is nothing better than a gradual suicide. It is very well, in addition to the removal of all external pressure, to take pains to form a habit of fully inflating the lungs at every inspiration. They are composed of innumerable small air cells, into which the pure air is designed to be constantly pouring to purify the blood which is constantly brought there to meet it. If these cells are not constantly filled by the pure air, the impure blood is hurried off to perform its rounds once more through the system, bearing the elements of disease and death with it. Draw long, deep, gradual inspirations, and give the lungs a chance to perform faithfully their work, if health is desired.

The Conference was much gratified by the visit of bro. C. F. Gillaspie, as a friendly messenger sent by the Mississippi Conference.

Bro. S. Norton, President of the South Carolina Conference, paid us an unofficial visit, much to the satisfaction of the brethren.

At about 12 o'clock on the 15th, the Conference adjourned sine die.

The next annual session will meet at Montgomery, on Friday before the third Sabbath in November, 1848.

Religious Intelligence.

PITTSBURGH DISTRICT.

New Brighton, Pa., March 2, 1848.

BR. BASSETT: Eighteen months having elapsed since my appointment to this station, it is, perhaps, time that the silence thus long preserved unbroken should be disturbed. It has not been, however, I assure you from any indisposition to communicate religious intelligence that I have remained silent so long: from time to time I had designed to write, but something new would transpire, some new feature on the face of the affairs of the station would start out into bold outline, and, in order to discover what might be the result, in hope that I might have something more or better to tell you, I have been induced to postpone my communication of the state of things as they are thus far.

When I came to this station in September, 1846, it was just beginning to revive from under the influence and effects of a sore and calamitous struggle, into which it had been plunged by the counsels and conduct of one who is happily gone from among us.

Though the agitation was deep and hard, yet, owing to the unwearied diligence, and untiring zeal of my predecessor, the little ark out-rode the storm. The register, at this period, presented the names of thirty members; two of whom have since withdrawn—one by death, the other by certificate. From that time to the present our congrations have steadily increased, so much so, indeed, that we are often in want of room, finding it extremely difficult to seat all that attend, some having to take a stand outside of the door.—There is one thing respecting the congregations which would strike the attention of a stranger, and which brethren helping me at my meetings have remarked, that is, that a very large majority consists of young persons in all the prime and vigor of life, who, if they could be weaned from their pleasures and persuaded to become religious, would make active and energetic christians. The membership has not however increased as fast as the circumstances would seem to justify: yet, in this respect, we have abundant cause of encouragement. As the register now is it presents a membership numbering fifty-two: seven of these form a class organized in the village of Freedom, last December, but, in consequence of a variety of circumstances, I have not been able to serve them with regular preaching.

Notwithstanding this outward success there is one thing that weighs heavily upon my feelings, and casts a shade upon that which, otherwise, would smile with gladness. That is a neglect of the means of grace. Class meetings and prayer meetings are sadly neglected. Would you credit the tale were I to tell you that, out of more than forty members, who live within coming distance, we have upon Sabbath morning at class, and upon Wednesday evening at prayer meeting, a turn-out of eight or ten? Yet this is the solemn fact. I have in public and private, preached upon these means of grace—I have visited, exhorted, prayed, entreated, even with tears—still the scene remains unchanged. They will not come. As a consequence of this neglect there is not that growth in grace—that deep, fervent current of devotion—that spiritual oneness—that meeting and sympathy of spirit with spirit, begetting a spiritual relationship, fond and dear, which are so often witnessed as the happy results flowing from a faithful use of these means of grace. Has not the saddening reflection, my dear brother, often presented itself, with unwelcome force, to your mind, that class meetings are now thought of as they once were, and as they now ought to be? Are we not as a church becoming too careless of this interesting and important means of advancement in the divine life? In the midst of our reforms and controversies is there not a growing danger of class meetings being numbered with the things that were, but are not? O! let us, brethren, beware of this danger—let us crowd to the rescue of this institution!

In this neighborhood there exists every necessity for warm and devoted piety. The cold and chilling atmosphere of Skepticism hangs around the whole village: for here almost every possible form of Protean shaped Infidelity has its patrons and votaries; from the mildest featured Universalism up, through every gradation, to Parker Pantheism and covert Atheism. It is true we do not meet with open and avowed opposition, but, what is equally as bad, with a current of infidel feeling and apathy, dark and deep. Still "in the name of the Lord of hosts we will set up our banners:" and, though so many are timid 'to take up, and fearful to sustain the consecrated cross,' we will sound the alarm; for there are yet a few, a faithful few, good and true, who always rally at the call, and "come up to the help of the Lord." May the Lord bless—revive the others—and save us all.

I remain yours in the Gospel.

GEO. B. M'ELROY.

Newark Ct., Gilmer Co. Va., Feb. 4, '48.

BR. BASSETT: I am requested to write a few lines to your excellent paper, to inform Brother Brown, our worthy President, of the condition of Newark circuit. I came here the 15th of December last to visit my friends who live in this (Gilmer) county, where I was solicited to teach school which I consented to do. This part of the country has been destitute of Protestant preaching until this winter, when I came here and concluded to stay until spring. We sent for Brother Williams to come and preach for us and he did so. He preached twice when he first came and all the people in the neighborhood seemed much pleased with him, he preached at the house of an old side brother. He told them that he did not know the minds of the people here, but as he was the servant of the church he thought it was his duty to open the doors of the church, but said he did not wish to interfere with any other church, but if the people were disposed to join he would give them the opportunity to do so. None joined, but the people seemed so well pleased that they invited him back and insisted that he should leave an an appointment at the same place, which he did in 4 weeks from that time, but during the time the agent of the Bishop came round and put his veto on it and said that the Protestants had no right to come here and preach, and said that if any of the members of his church went to our meeting they had better get their certificates first, for they would forfeit their standing in the church, and said that Williams should not preach at that house, and gave out meeting for a local preacher to preach on Thursday, and then said I will now take the vote & see how many vote to come here to meeting. They took a rising vote and some 4 or 6 rose up. He then said that those who kept their seats could have their certificates if they wanted them. They told him they did not know whether it was necessary to take them.—Then a neighbor rose up that did not belong to any church and said, You will not let Williams preach here, then? No sir, said the preacher.—Well, then, I will take the appointment to my house, and I now tell you we will have the largest congregation. Now the man that owned the house was the man that had invited Brother Williams to preach there, but when he saw the iron wheel come round he was afraid and closed his doors or let the preacher do it for him. But Sunday came and we went to meeting, though a bad day for meeting as it was snowing and blowing hard. Brother local had 7 hearers and Brother Williams had 45 to hear him. The meetings were just one mile apart. Brother Williams preached and then opened the doors of the church and 8 joined, 7 from the old church, and at night we had meeting again, and 5 joined, 2 from the old church and 3 from the world. We then organized and elected a leader, and are since getting along well. One joined since, which makes 14 members. We are going to live here. The flag of mutual rights takes well here, like it did at the upper end of this county last year, when Brother Martin was on Braxton circuit he was invited to come down and preach for them. He did so, and this same preacher was on this circuit at that time, he and his colleague that tried to prevent Brother Martin from preaching there, but he preached and the result was that 24 members joined the Methodist Protestant Church in less than 3 months, notwithstanding they did all they could against us. Brother Williams has taken into the church this conference year 75 members. He is much beloved on this circuit.

Yours truly.

In the bond of christian love,

WM. M. BETTS.

MUSKINGUM DISTRICT.

Zanesville Ct., Feb. 29, 1848.

BR. BASSETT: In compliance with your friendly request, permit me to say to our worthy President and friends generally, that this year thus far has been the happiest part of my life. We have been breathing the spirit of revival on this circuit ever since about the middle of December, when a gracious work broke out in Brownsville, Licking county, which has been gradually progressing ever since. Clay creek society shared next in the out-pouring of the Holy Spirit. Then came our second quarterly meeting at Gratiot: Brothers Potter, Bassett, and the mighty hosts of our local ministry and officiary, came pouring in from all parts of this good old circuit; and as might be expected, from their fervent prayers and well directed labors, a gracious work was soon commenced. And that mighty man of God, Brother Potter, continued to labor with us 4 or 5 days; when Brother Munhall came and gave us a good lift; and the result of this meeting was the addition of upwards of 20 names to the church, and we trust, the hearts of as many were given to the Lord.

Last Thursday evening we closed a very interesting six day's meeting at the Bushy-fork chapel. Seven united, which added to the accessions in other societies, makes about 70 of an increase this conference year. Praise the Lord, O my soul, and all that is within me bless his holy name! On account of the very severe affliction of Sister Springer, who has been in a lingering condition for 4 or 5 months, Brother S. has not been able to give his usual efficient service to the circuit. O may the Lord spare his amiable and useful companion, and restore her again to health, if consistent with his will, that the hearts of our circuit may be cheered with their united labors of love! Our revival prospects are still opening before us. We are now in Zanesville, doing what we can. Brother Maynard preached last night; Brother Potter is with us, but in rather poor health. What our success will be in this place we can't tell. Lord send now prosperity! Brethren and sisters, I imagine, I hear you all say, Amen.

Yours in christian bonds,

E. S. HOAGLAND.

Georgetown Ct., Feb. 25, 1848.

BR. BASSETT: God is reviving his work in Bridgeport. We have just concluded a protracted meeting here, which has been in progress for the last two weeks. It has been a time of refreshing to the members of the church. They have been made to drink plentifully of the stream which makes glad the City of God. The power of God was manifested in the congregation every time they met in the awakening and conversion of sinners. Between forty and fifty have professed to have found peace in believing.—Thirty-six have given their names to the church, and we trust, their hearts to God. O that they may so live that they may receive a home in heaven. Brothers J. L. Disselm, R. Scott, and H. Hebberling were here and labored like men of God.

I remain yours,

In the bonds of a peaceful Gospel,

S. CATLIN.

OHIO DISTRICT.

Mt. Blanchard, O., Feb. 17, 1848.

BR. BASSETT: Through the Recorder I wish to inform the friends of the cause of Christ, that we are still alive on this circuit. We commenced a protracted effort at Mt. Blanchard, on new-year's eve—and notwithstanding the rain fell fast and the roads were very bad, the Lord met with us in a powerful manner, and many sinners were brought to feel the need of a Savior, bow at the anxious seat and cry for mercy. We protracted the meeting 10 days, and in that time there were about 40 professed to get religion.—Thirty-two gave us their names as probationers and 6 united with the old church. At that meeting we were favored with the very acceptable labors of Father Swaney.

We also held our 2d quarterly meeting at Mt. Blanchard, which commenced February 12th.—At this meeting we were favored with the labors of Brothers Thornburgh, Chapman, and Swaney, but best of all the Lord of Hosts was with us and his mighty power was made known among the people. The work again broke out and the meeting is still in progress. I cannot say how many have been hopefully converted but truly it has been a time of great grace, and 26 have given us their names making 62 since conference nearly all from nature's quarry. Among them are many men and women of the first rank in society who bid fair to be pillars in the church. The work is still going on. There are still many inquiring the way to Zion and the anxious seat is still crowded—there is a great field here for M Protestantism. Brethren pray for us that the cords of Zion may be lengthened, and her gates crowded with living converts.

Yours, T. B. GRAHAM.

WESTERN RECORDER.

PUTNAM, OHIO:

Thursday, March 9, 1848.

☞A series of religious services is in progress at the M. P. Church, Zanesville, conducted at present by Rev. T. Potter, Con. Mis. of the Muskingum Conference. Meetings will be held each evening the present week and throughout the ensuing Sabbath.

ACKNOWLEDGMENT.—We again tender our thanks to our Representative in Congress, Hon. N. Evans, for his kindness in sending us documents, which we are almost daily receiving.

"CHURCH OF THE CLERGY," &c.—Those of our readers who were conversant with the controversy "twenty six years ago," will recognize in the above named article on our first page, the vigorous pen and thoughts of the Editor of the "Wesleyan Repository."

ANNUAL CONFERENCES.—The Maine An. Conference of the M. P Church meets March 2d, 1848.

The Maryland Conference meets at Georgetown, D. C. March 9th, 1848.

The New York Conference meets at Tarrytown, N. Y., March 15, 1848.

The Philadelphia Conference meets at 1st Methodist Protestant Chapel, Philadelphia, Mch. 23d, 1848.

The New Jersey Conference meets at Dover Chapel, April 6th, 1848.

We should be glad to see more full and satisfactory Reports of statistics, with the published minutes of Conferences, holding their sessions about this time, than have heretofore been given by several of them.

☞Several correspondents will excuse us that chiefly for want of time, we cannot attend to their claims, till another week.

WEATHER.—After a mild February, the first week in March has been a wintry time indeed. On Saturday morning last, the mercury sunk to within 14° of zero, and on Sunday morning, it stood at 20°. The weather is now moderate again.

THAT LETTER.—A worthy friend of ours who is in the constant use of tobacco, has insisted that we should insert the letter of Mrs. Mannerly, from the "Methodist Protestant," which will be found on our first page. Wonder if the publication of that letter in the "Protestant," will cause half the sensation at Georgetown, D. C., which occurred at Waynesburg at last Conference, on the publication of a like epistle from one of our correspodents. If so the Editor of the M. P., may know it by some one's offering to discontinue his excellent paper. It won't scare him, we know.

THE RECENT BANK FAILURES.—The March number of Van Court's Counterfeit Detecter which is just received, communicates some information of interest to those who have on hand the paper of sundry eastern banks, reported to have failed. We copy the following statement, from which it will appear that all save two are rapidly gaining in value.

U. S. CONGRESS.

Thursday February 24—House.—There was a full attendance of members and a crowded audience present. After prayer by the Chaplain, the Speaker, (Mr. Winthrop, of Massachusetts,) rose, and in a feeling and affecting manner addressed the House as follows:

Gentlemen of the House of Representatives of the United States: It has been thought fit that the Chair should announce officially to the House an event already known to the members individually, and which has filled all our hearts with sadness.

A seat on this floor has been vacated, towards which our eyes have been accustomed to turn with no common interest.

A voice has been hushed forever in this hall, to which all ears have been wont to listen with profound reverence.

A venerable form has faded from our sight, around which we have daily clustered with an affectionate regard.

A name has been stricken from the roll of the living statesmen of our land, which has been associated for more than half a century with the highest civil service and the loftiest civil renown.

On Monday, the 21st instant, John Quincy Adams sunk in his seat, in presence of us all, by a sudden illness, from which he never recovered; and he died in the Speaker's room, at a quarter past seven o'clock last evening, with the officers of the House and the delegation of his own Massachusetts around him.

Whatever advanced age, long experience, great ability, vast learning, accumulated public honors, a spotless private character, and a firm religious faith, could do to render any one an object of interest, respect, and admiration, they had done for this distinguished person; and interest, respect, and admiration, are but feeble terms to express the feelings with which the members of this House and the People of the country have long regarded him.

After a life of eighty years, devoted from its earliest maturity to the public service, he has at length gone to his rest.

He has been privileged to die at his post; to fall while in the discharge of his duties; to expire beneath the roof of the Capitol; and to have his last scene associated forever in history with the birthday of that illustrious patriot whose just discernment brought him first into the service of his country.

The close of such a life, under such circumstances, is not an event for unmingled emotions. We cannot find it in our hearts to regret that he has died as he has died. He himself could have desired no other end. "This is the end of earth," were his last words, uttered on the day on which he fell. But we might almost hear him exclaiming, as he left us, in a language hardly less familiar to him than his native tongue, "Hoc est nimirum magis feliciter de vita migrare, quam mori."

It is for others to suggest, what honors shall be paid to his memory. No acts of ours are necessary to his fame. But it may be due to ourselves and to the country, that the national sense of his character and his services should be fitly commemorated.

Mr. Hudson of Massachusetts then addressed the House on the virtues of the deceased, gave a historical out-line of his life, and moved the resolutons of respect. Mr. Holmes of South Carolina, spoke very feelingly at some length in support of the resolutions. He was followed by Mr. Vinton of Ohio, and Mr. McDowell of Virginia. The resolutions were unanimously agreed to. Also the following:

Resolved, That the seat in this Hall, just vacated by the death of the late John Quincy Adams, be unoccupied for thirty days, and that it together with the Hall, remain clothed with the symbol of mourning during that time.

Adjourned to Saturday.

Senate.—A message was received from the House announcing the death of Hon. John Q. Adams, a member of that body, and the proceedings of the House thereupon. Mr. Davis of Massachusetts, rose and addressed the Senate on the character and services of the departed, and moved the resolutions of respect. Mr. Benton of Missouri, then rose, and made allusion, tenderly to the absence of the other Senator from Massachusetts, Mr. Webster, who is confined, he said, to "the chamber of private grief." [Alluding, doubtless, to the death of his son, Major Webster, in Mexico.] Mr. B. then as senior member of the Senate, seconded the resolutions, and supported them with appropriate remarks. The resolutions were unanimously adopted, and the Senate adjourned to Saturday.

Saturday 26—House.—Pursuant to resolutions of both Houses, this day was set apart for the funeral solemnities of the departed Ex-President. After the Speaker had taken the Chair, the Journal of Thursday was read. Soon after, the Senate entered, their presiding officer taking his seat beside the Speaker. As the Senators passed up the centre aisle and took their seats, the Speaker and members of the House rose and continued standing till they had taken the seats assigned them. Soon after the President of the United States entered, and was received by all in like manner, while he took his seat at the right of the Speaker. The members of the Cabinet, Foreign Ministers, and Judges of Supreme Court, also had seats assigned them. The relatives of the deceased were then conducted to a position reserved for them. Next entered the members of the Legislature of Maryland, preceded by its officers, that body, in session, having passed resolutions to attend the funeral. Next entered the corporate authorities of Washington. At length came the corpse, escorted by the committee of arrangements, and followed by the Delegation from Massachusetts as mourners. Thousands crowded the galleries, lobbies, and every spot where it was possible for a human being to stand. Scarcely a sound of any kind was to be heard, when the Chaplain of the House, Rev. Mr. Gurley rose, read a portion of Holy Writ, and offered a meek and devout prayer. He then read a hymn, which was sung with impressive effect by the choir. The Chaplain then addressed the assembly from Job 11, 17. A closing hymn was sung, followed by the benediction, after which the procession was formed, which proceeded to the Congressional Burying Ground.

Monday Feb. 28—House.—A resolution, offered by Mr. C. J. Ingersoll, granting that all letters and packets, to and from Mrs. Louisa Catharine Adams, widow of the late John Q. Adams, be transmitted free of postage, during her natural life. A resolution was offered by Mr. Hall of New York, having reference to a petition of the Marshal of the District of Columbia, praying for the settlement of an account against the United States, amounting to $5,361, for the commitment, feeding and confinement of persons claimed as slaves, in the jail of the United States, and directing the Committee on the Judiciary to report a bill, repealing all laws of Congress, and of the State of Maryland, having force in the District of Columbia, which authorizes or requires the courts, officers or magistrates of the United States, or of the said District, within the District of Columbia, to issue process or arrest, or commit to the jail of said District, any runaway or other slave or fugitive from service, or colored person claimed as such, except on due complaint and proof of some misdemeanor.—The resolution lies over. A resolution to prohibit slavery in any territories which may be acquired from Mexico, was introduced by Mr. Putnam, but laid on the table, by a vote of 105 yeas, to 92 nays. A bill was introduced by Mr. Jenkins, to regulate the compensation of Postmasters, exempt certain newspapers from postage, and to reduce the postage on transient newspapers.

Ohio Legislature.

Monday 21—Senate.—The bill to erect the new county of Van Buren, was indefinitely postponed. Ayes 21. Nays 14.

Tuesday 22.—The two houses in joint session, elected the following officers—

President Judge of the 17th Judicial Circuit, Wm. V. Peck.

Auditor of State, John Woods.

Associate Judges for Auglaize county, D Simpson, G. W. Holbrook, J. McLean.

Associate Judge for Lorain county, B. C. Perkins.

Associate Judge for Mercer county, W. McDaniel.

Major General 11th Division, O. Militia, J. Cole.

Register of Land Office at Perrysburg, W. H. Hopkins.

Receiver of Land Office at Perrysburg, J. Webb.

President Judge, 18th Judicial Circuit, G. B. Way.

Wednesday 23—Senate.—The bill to erect the new county of Morrow, after receiving some amendments was finally adopted.

Thursday 24.—The following resolutions offered by Mr. Russell. were unanimously adopted—

Resolved, By the Senate and House of Representatives of Ohio, That it is with deep and heart-felt regret that we have just learned, that JOHN QUINCY ADAMS has this day deceased, for by his death, freedom has lost a friend, liberty an advocate, philanthropy a champion, and mankind a generous benefactor.

Resolved, That the Governor be requested to transmit a copy of this resolution to the family of the deceased.

[The resolutions were also unanimously adopted by the Senate.]

The two houses jointly elected the following officers—

Associate Judges for Morrow county, R. House, S. T. Cunard. E. B. Kinsell.

The following resolution was adopted by the House—Yeas 44. Nays 8.

Resolved, That the provisions of the Ordinance of Congress of 1787, so far as the same relates to slavery, should be extended to any territory that may be acquired from Mexico, either by treaty or otherwise.

[This resolution also passed the Senate.]

Friday 25.—Both Houses adjourned, sine die.

THE CHRISTIAN WREATH.—We are gratified to acknowledge the receipt of the February number of this work. It is an interesting monthly, published by J. Van Court, Philadelphia, at $1 per year in advance. The February number contains a fine mezzotint, representing Moses going to the Fair, and the Yellow Winged Bunting, a steel plate—also, a piece of music. We commend the object of this publication, "to take the place, in some measure, of the trashy, frivolous, and in some instances corrupting issues, constantly teeming from the press." Success, say we, to the Christian Wreath. We will insert its prospectus next week, and shall be further obliged to the Publisher if he will forward us the numbers for January, March, &c.

AMERICAN PULPIT.—What has become of the American Pulpit? We have received no number of it later than number six, though we have had its prospectus standing in our paper almost ever since that issue.

MRS. C. J. SEARS.

BR. BASSETT.—I feel myself called upon to inform you, and through your paper to communicate to friends and acquaintances the afflictive Providence that has recently fallen upon me. But Oh, how hard to record the death of one we love! But as Brother Reeves said on a similar occasion, Oh for grace to check the murmur if not the sigh. It is hard to write obituary notices, but how shall I write this while nature is bleeding at every pore? With weeping eyes and bleeding heart I have to say it, my dear companion is no more. For several weeks previous to her being confined to her bed she had complained more than usual but was still able to go about the house and thought it not necessary to call for medical aid and still desired me to attend to my work, and having left home on the 8th of January to visit the west part of the circuit, I returned on the 11th and found her much better than when I left home. But Oh, it was but a moment's respite, for on the 13th the destroyer returned with more violence than before; yet she did not desire medical aid. For some time previous she had had some presentiments of her approaching end. On the 15th a physician was called who pronounced the disease typhus fever and the most violent attack he had ever met with. At first it appeared to yield to the power of the medicine. This was only momentary, for it soon developed its unyielding character. She continued to be better and worse to human appearance until the 23d when all hope of recovery was lost, and from that time she continued sinking until the morning of the 26th of January when she fell asleep in the arms of her Savior. At an early period of her illness I spoke to her on the subject of death—found her mind without an intervening cloud. Again a short time after, I asked her if it should be the will of God to take her from earth, if she was willing to go. She answered without hesitation that she had resigned all up to God and that she had not found it so hard as she had expected. Still continuing, said she only found it hard to resign up to God the one she had left behind. Frequently spoke of death with composure. A few hours before her exit she had fallen into a stupor and awaking out of which she bid us all farewell & again sunk away to speak with us no more and departed as in a sweet sleep without a struggle, groan or sigh.—Thus she left the world in the 42d year of her age, and has left a poor, wandering, mourning pilgrim in earth, to whom earth has no charms.—May God give me grace to be resigned to all his dealings with me. While I sorrow not as those who have no hope, I mourn for one who to me was almost my only earthly friend. Her remains were deposited in the Mount Zion graveyard, there to slumber until the resurrection morn, when, may God grant that we may meet where parting shall be no more forever. Amen and Amen. C. J. SEARS.

A. B. HARRISON.

BR. BASSETT: On February 23d we followed the remains of Brother A. B. Harrison to the grave. He died of a pulmonary complaint, aged 24 years and 6 months.

Brother Harrison was a young man of steady habits, although not becoming pious until about a year ago, when he united with the Methodist Protestant Church; since that time he has been a very exemplary christian. During his sickness he appeared resigned to the will of God, and frequently expressed his willingness to depart.—His lungs were so much wasted that he could talk but little, the last week of his life. On last Sabbath morning, he fell asleep in Jesus, to spend an eternal Sabbath of rest around the throne of God. S. THOMPSON.

Left parents—friends—to weep,

News of the Week.

DESTRUCTIVE FLOOD.—The reservoir of Scipio creek, several miles in extent, and ninety feet above the town of Massillon, was recently let out by those who felt the annoyance—the lake being thought unhealthy. The rush of water tore down the bank of the canal, and undermined and swept away a number of buildings in the town of Massillon. Some lives are said to have been lost.

ALIEN WIDOWS AND ORPHANS.—By a recent decision in New York, a widow, unless she is a citizen, or has declared her intentions, cannot hold real estate, although her husband, who was a citizen, devised it to her by will.

CHLOROFORM.—It seems that the recent accident has not entirely shaken the public faith in the use of chloroform. We heard and know of many who have since submitted to dental and other operations, while under its influence.

On Friday last, at the Commercial Hospital, a very delicate operation was successfully and safely performed. Chloroform was administered, and a child was taken from the side of a lady, she exhibiting no manifestations of pain. Her anatomical construction was such as to prevent birth.

DR. MUSSEY operated on a man who had been badly burned on the side of his head and neck, some years since. The flesh had been so contracted by the burn as to force his head down, sidewise, nearly to his shoulder. The patient was put under the influence of chloroform, and the Doctor severed the contracted flesh, drew the skin up from the shoulder, and placed the head in its natural position.—The patient, insensible to pain, kept his eyes fixed upon the Doctor during the whole of the operation without moving a muscle.—Cin. Com.

LIBERAL REQUESTS.—Peter Chandler, of Oswego, N. Y., formerly of Pomfret, Conn., left the following legacies in his will:—American Home Missionary Society, $5.000; American Board of Commissioners for foreign missions, $5.000; American Bible Society, $5.000; American Tract Society, $5.000; American Central Education Society, $5.000; American Protestant Society, $3.000.—In all, $23,000. His estate is valued at $125.000, the balance of which goes to his widow and two children, the latter mutes.

FATAL ACCIDENT.—Mr. E. M. Bisbee, died at the Massachusetts Hospital on Sunday morning, in consequence of injuries received on the Worcester railroad on Saturday evening. He was a resident of Boston, and has left a widow and three children in destitute circumstances. He was 35 years of age.

Three Steamboats Burned!--Loss of Life!!

In our paper of Monday morning, we made brief mention of the lamentable calamity which occurred at the public landing.

A light appeared and a cry of fire was heard at about 1, A. M., and flames were discovered to issue from the steamer Hendrick Hudson, in the ladies' cabin of which boat the fire is said to have originated. The fire quickly spread, illuminating the whole city with its lurid glare, and the flames were not checked until the steamers Hendrik Hudson, Trenton, and Circassian were entirely consumed, together with the Maysville wharf boat! The fire companies of the city were on the ground in good time, but their efforts were ineffectual, as the light material of the steamers burned like tinder.

The entire loss is estimated at ubout $75,000. The Hendrik Hudson was insured for $10,800 75 in the Columbus and Firemen's Insurance Companies—the Trenton for $11,000 in the Manufactures office, and the Circassian for $5,000.

The Trenton was partially freighted for New Orleans, and had on board a lot of live cattle, a number of which were burned to death or drowned. A large lot of hemp in the wharf-boat was much damaged, but saved from entire destruction by the exertion of the firemen.

The most sad portion of the story is yet to be told! We understand that two hands employed on the Hendrik Hudson, and a boy belonging to the Trenton, perished in the flames.

The missing lady, about whom much anxiety was felt yesterday morning, has been found—she having escaped unhurt.—Cincinnati Commercial.

Melancholy Death from Chloroform.—Yesterday afternoon, Mrs. Symonds, living on 4th street, near Elm, went to the office of Dr. Meredith, on sixth street, between Main and Walnut, for the purpose of having some teeth extracted. Chloroform was administered, and the usual symptoms were exhibited. After the extraction of the teeth, she began to sink, and every effort thereafter to revive her, proved ineffectual, and she finally fell into the arms of death! The husband of Mrs. S. witnessed this sadly sudden scene, he having accompanied her. Dr. Mussey and other physicians were immediately sent for, and conducted to the house, but the efforts of all were unavailing.—Death's work was done. Dr. Mussey, when the messenger arrived, was in the midst of a lecture at the College, but he left immediately. A post-mortem examination was to have been had last night, the result of which we hope to give to-morrow.

Mrs. S. was the mother of a child but two months old, and her death has cast a gloom among her friends and neighbers.

We understand that the chloroform was administered in the usual quantity, and that it is the opinion of physicians, that her death was occasioned, partially, by some internal disease. But of this we know nothing, and we must therefore await the report on the post-mortem examination.—Cin. Com.

Felix Renick, Esq., was crushed to death on the 29th ult, at Scioto O., by the falling of a heavy timber upon a carriage in which he was sitting.

Great Presence of Mind.—As Mr. Addison Spaulding, of Dracut, Mass., was trying to extricate his wagon from a rut, the axletree broke and the loaded wagon box fell upon him, breaking his leg and pinning him to the earth. He reached for his shovel and unloaded the wagon and extracted himself in about an hour; then crawling to his horse, he mounted by means of the harness and rode home. His leg was amputated by Dr. Kimball, who administered chloroform to relieve the patient.

Railroad in Illinois.—The directors of the Chicago and Galena railroad, have advertised for sealed proposals for grading and bridging on that portion of the line from Chicago beyond the Dupage river, a distance of thirty miles.

U. S. Patent Office.—The revenue of the Patent Office, for 1847, from all sources, was $63,111 19; expenditures, $41,878 25—surplus, $21,232 94. The surpluses of the last three years were as follows: In 1845, $11,680 49; 1846, $4,105 45—dimunition owing to the reject of British patents 1847, $21,234 92—total $37,-118 88. On the 1st of January, 1847, the patent found was $186,465 14: and surplus of 1st of January, 1848, $21,232 94; actual patent fund 1st of January, 1848, $206,798 08. The war seems to have stimulated inventions—the fees from patents for 1847 having been remarkably large. The examinations, owing to extraordinary increase of business, are seven months behind hand; all the other business of the department is up. There are but two examiners in the office; there ought to be at least four. Both Mr. Ellsworth (Mr. Burk's predecessor) and Mr. Burke, have at various times applied to Congress for aid, and a bill making provisions for the increase of scientific force of the Patent office—two principal examiners and two assistants—has just passed the Senate.—N. Y. Sun.

Frightful Situation.—The Montreal papers contain a long description of the loss of a mail stage in the ice, followed by the death of the driver and a narrow escape from death of two passengers. The loss occurred on a very cold, stormy night, recently, and as the stage was on its way from Port St. Claire to Lachine the horses got off the track, and gradually edged to the unfrozen portion of Lake St. Louis. There were but two passengers, Mr. Ogden of Quebec, and Mr. Russell of Ancaster. When the leaders plunged into the water, Mr. Ogden and Mr. Russell both leaped from the stage; the first made good his footing on the main ice, but Mr. Russell's cloak unfortunately got entangled, and before he could extricate himself, he found himself in deep water. The driver was swept from his seat, and lost. Mr. Russell was carried about two miles when the stage grounded on a shoal. He was rescued after five hours of suffering, nearly dead, and so covered with ice, that he had to be extracted from it with axes.

Almost a Fatal Accident to Henry Clay.—After retiring to rest on Thursday evening, being a guest of Mayor Swift's, of Philadelphia—the servant who waits upon him, instead of stopping off the gas in the usual way, 'blew it out,' and left the room. The Mayor was awakened near daylight by an unsufferable smell of gas. He proceeded immediately to the room of Mr. Clay, and with difficulty opened the window—the room being filled with gas. On enquiry of Mr. Clay if he was alive, the reply was "Yes, my old friend, and never felt better in my life!"

It is contemplated by the respectable portion of the colored inhabitants of Philadelphia and its vicinity, to make some public demonstration of respect to the memory of John Q. Adams and have a committee appointed to confer with the Mayor of the city with the view of ascertaining whether a procession of various societies to which they belong will meet his approbation.

Obsequies of Mr. Adams.

The appearance of Washington last Saturday, the day appointed for the obsequies of Mr. Adams, was peculiarly impressive. The city was hung in black. Every store was closed, and all business was suspended in the public offices. The streets were deserted, except en Pennsylvania Avenue, where a procession formed at eleven o'clock, and soon after proceeded to the Capitol, the rotundo, and halls, and passages of which, as well as magnificent portico and immense flight of steps on the east front, and the adjacent grounds, were already filled with people of every age and class and condition, assembled to pay the last tribute of respect to the remains of the great statesman.

The President and his Cabinet, the Congress of the United States, Judges of the Supreme Court, Officers of the Army and Navy, and the Corporation of Washing, were present in the hall of the House. The Diplomatic Corps, consisting of the reprentatives of France, Spain, Portugal, England, and other nations, European and American, appeared in full costume, with the exception of M. Pageot, the French minister, who wore his usual dress—a circumstance not very creditable to the taste or tact of that gentlemen. The obsequies of an ex-President of the United States, if that ex-President had not been John Quincy Adams, could not have been too honored by the representatives of 'the Citizen King."

The services in the hall of the House of Representatives, whither the corpse was taken, were closed a little after one o'clock, an appropriate discourse having been delived by Mr. Gurley, chaplain of the House. The scene at the east front of the Capitol, as the body was borne towards the hearse, was most imposing. A vast multitude crowded the lofty flight of steps—strangers from all parts of the Union, ladies in richest attire, soldiers in brilliant uniform, with nodding plumes—and the ample area below was thronged with an endless crowd of people on foot, and splendid equipages, a troop of horse, meantime, keeping the way clear for the procession. And still beyond all this, was another multitude, clinging to the iron railings that encompass the ample area, clustering in trees, gathered in groups within the beautiful enclosures surrounding the Capitol, at the windows of which appeared myriads of faces awaiting in anxious expectation the moving of the mournful pageant.

At last, the procession emerged from the Rotundo, and began its slow descent.

Then came the occasional tolling of bells; now and then, the roll of distant cannon added to the solemnity of the scene; and, just as the corpse appeared under the portico, borne by the pall bearers, such a wail of mournful music arose from the band in attendance, as awakened associations that drew tears from many eyes.

Twenty-three years ago, Mr. Adams, had been inaugurated President of the United States, in the portico where now rested his coffin. How few of all who witnessed that splendid ceremonial, were present at this sad spectacle! Of the eleven Presidents of the Republic, seven have retired to "the silent halls of death," and another was about to be gathered to their side. Of his fellow members of the Cabinet of Mr. Monroe, immediately preceding his own Administration, Mr. Calhoun was the sole survivor, and his thin form, scarcely able, one might think, to separate him from the world of spirits, was now seen among the pall bearers. What thoughts must have struggled in his restless heart!

The dead rests with the dead, and once more the living pass on as buoyantly as if being on earth were eternal. A noble bark has sunk beneath the waves; but the great ocean of Life rolls on, while the myriads of passengers, borne upon its bosom, forget the dead who slumber in its depth.—National Era.

Deaths.—Dr. Thomas T. Hewson, one of the most eminent medical men in the country, died at his residence in this city on Saturday morning, in Walnut street above Ninth. Dr. Hewson was often confounded with Professor Huston, of the Jefferson Medical College, owing to the similarity in sound in pronouncing the two names. The deceased was a physician of the highest standing, and was familiarly known as "little Doctor Hewson." He was so very small in stature, as to compete with some of the famous dwarfs.—Scott's Weekly Paper.

The Money Market, Peace, Stocks, &c.—Money is gradually becoming more plenty in this city, and can be obtained at less rates than for some time past. This may be said also of N. York and Boston. Charles & Son's N. Y. Bank Note List of a late date, says:—"The ruling rate of interest in the street is seven per cent. and the banks discount liberally to their customers. We have no doubt but that money will in a few months, be as great a drug as it is now in England; that the rate of interest will rule as low as at any previous time, and that speculative movements in our principal staples, will commence in market, instead of in London and Liverpool as usual."

This, and the strong probability that we shall have a speedy peace with Mexico, has had the effect of sending up nearly every description of stocks, and the market has been exceedingly bouyant for some days past. If the treaty of peace is confirmed, there will be still further advances, and speculation will run wild again; but if, on the contrary, any thing should occur by which the peace prospects should be blighted, there will be a grand tumble.—Van Court's Counterfeit Detecter.

Great and Rapid Extension of the Telegraph.—We are destined to be the country of telegraphs. A despatch from Cincinnati, of the 29th ult., gives the following items of interest connected with the spread of telegraphing:

"The lines will be opened in a few days to complete an entire connection with Detroit, and the Atlantic and Mississippi lines, and also with Nashville. In a few weeks Chicago will be annexed to the telegraphic world, as the posts are now nearly up between that point and this city, a distance of nearly four hundred miles, and the wiring will take but a short time after their completion.

"A line is also in progress to connect St. Louis with Chicago, and arrangements are in progress for the Missouri valley line, from St. Louis up the banks of the river to Fort Leavenworth, thence westward. I hardly know which way the enterprizing Henry O'Reilly will go next."

American Colonization Society.—The receipts of the American Colonization Society, the last month, were $5,469, 83. There will be needed, during the next two months, $13,500 to meet the present indebtedness of the society and carry on its indispensable operations. There have been already, this year, 173 emigrants sent to Liberia, and there are now 209 more waiting for an opportunity to embark.

☞Ex Governor Seward has been selected to address the New York Legislature, on the life and services of Mr. Adams. The 29th of March is the day fixed.

A Word of Censure.

THE FUNERAL OBSEQUIES OF MR. ADAMS.

Accounts from Washington describe the pageant in honor of Mr. Adams, and that, as one of the arrangements, his remains were placed in a "splendid coffin." We doubt not that the coffin was "splendid," that the pall over it was richly embroidered and laid with gold, and that the white horses which drew the hearse were "splendidly caparisoned" and decked with ostrich feathers, and led by colored men fantastically dressed in Turkish costume. These funeral ceremonies will probably be repeated in some of our great cities, each of which will strive to exceed the other in gaudy pageantry. And we expected all this, because the public taste is continually running down from the noble simplicity of the revolutionary age which produced such men as Mr. Adams, to the lowest depths of European aristocracy or Asiatic despotism.

And while we expected all this, we do not the less regard it, as bad tase, and almost an insult to the memory of Mr. Adams. We applaud the President for suspending public business for two days, and for putting in mourning the Executive departments of the Army and Navy. And we do not complain of the House for placing a badge of mourning upon the chair of their late venerable and venerated brother.—And we should complain of the people in Washington, citizens and public officers, if they did not unanimously pay the last tribute of respect to one whose history is his eulogy. But we say that all the arrangements for his funeral ought to have been made in that style of severe and dignified simplicity which alone becomes our country, and which so forcibly characterized the great republican who has just departed. With these views, we think that the "splendid coffin" and the "pageant" are entirely out of place.—"Splendid affairs" and "pageants" may become hereditary kings and queens, people great in vulgar estimation by accident. But they do not become the statesman who was great in the estimation of all the enlightened, through his own intellectual merits, and who was dignified by the spontaneous choice of a free and enlightened and powerful nation, to its highest trust. A plain, neat coffin, and a plain and solemn and severely simple funeral, attended by all, would have been conformable to the taste of the great dead when living, and most appropriate to the noble simplicity of his character and history.—Dol. Newspaper.

Leap-Year.—Our readers are aware, we presume, that the year we have just entered is leap year. Every fourth year contains, by the calendar, 366 days, one day being added to the month of February. The Calendar of the Roman Emperor, Julian, made the year 365 and one-fourth days. It was found, however, that there was some minutes less, which, in the course of centuries, had made a difference in the astronomical equinox of about ten days. Pope Gregory XIII, in 1782, corrected this error by suppressing ten days in the calendar; and to prevent such a discrepancy in future, he established the rule of adding one day every four years.—This is why it is called Leap-Year.

☞The Wheeling Times says the bridge over the Ohio at that place is rapidly progressing, & gives evidence of the structure being one which will last as long as earth itself.

Reception of Mr. Adams' Remains.—The Common Council of New York have resolved that the chambers be dressed in mourning, and that the flags of the city be displayed at half-mast during the day of the arrival of the remains of the deceased. They have also appointed committees with a view to funeral solemnities on the occasion.

It is proposed in Philadelphia, that when his remains reach that city, on the way to their final resting place, the windows of dwellings and places of business be hung in black.—Baltimore Sun.

Fatal Accident.—A Mr. Oliver, of Ohio was killed at the stone ferry in Medford, (Mass.) on Tuesday, and another man named Smith was considerably injured. Mr. Oliver Fuller, seventy-five years old, was killed on the railway, between Lynn and Boston, on Friday, while walking on the track. A man named Patrick Drum, at work on the Stonington railroad, was buried alive on Friday, by the caving down of a bank. A man, name unknown, was killed on the Cheshire railroad, lying on the track, supposed to have been intoxicated.

Honors to Mr. Adams at Home.—Both Houses adjourned on Friday, after appointing committees to consider and report what measures it may be proper for the Legislature to adopt as a testimonial of its gratitude for the public services and respect for the memory of Mr. Adams. The bells in Boston were tolled from 12 to 1 o'clock on Friday, out of respect to Mr. Adams, the flags were at half-mast, and the common council are considering further measures to testify the respect of the citizens.

Cholera in Russia.—The official reports reach to the 14th December, and are as follows: In Moscow, new cases, from 7th to 14th December, 159; deaths 84. During the three weeks, ending with the above date, the epidemic has prevailed to the same extent, but latterly the proportionate number of deaths has rather increased. In the neighborhood of Moscow it continues in a mild form. In the government of Tver, as before, it is almost exclusively confined to the town of Torjok; from the 5th to the 13th Dec. 7 new cases and three deaths have occurred there. In the beginning of the month two cases were reported in Vishary Volotchok, of which one died. Distance from St. Petersburgh 397 vesrts on the Moscow route.

The cholera appears to be spreading in a south-western direction, having made its appearance on the 2d December, in Vitebsk, on which day two Jewesses were attacked and both died. Up to the 9th 11 cases had occurred, of which 8 recovered. We hear privately that since the above dates, it has increased much in severity.

In the government of Orenburg, Karan, Nishny, Novogorod, Viatha, and thence in the intermediate governments to Vitebsk, it exists in different degrees of severity.

It does not appear to be expected here (in St. Petersburgh) before the Spring or Summer, tho' it seems useless to speculate on a thing which baffles all calculation.

Final Effect of the Peace News.—The news as to a treaty of peace has had a very favorable effect upon the money and stock markets generally. The New York Express, of Tuesday afternoon, says:

"Treasury notes sold to-day at 101¾ a 102 per cent., with still an upward tendency. Money is more abundant than it has been. Confidence is hourly increasing. Good notes that sold in the streets two weeks ago at 1½ per cent. a month ago, are now taken at nine per cent. per annum. Government securities are much sought for. It is believed that if peace is concluded they must rise very high.

Fallen Heroes.

Henry Clay and Daniel Webster both condemn the war, yet each has lost a son in fighting its battles. One fell a year ago at Buena Vista, at the head of his troops; the other has become a victim to the climate of Mexico, and died of disease. Mr. Freaner, bearer of the treaty and despatches, &c., left Mexico on the 3d of February. He says Major Edward Webster, son of Daniel Webster, died at St. Angel, eight miles from Mexico, the head quarters of Gen. Cushing's brigade, on some day between the 20th and 25th of January. His funeral was attended by the regiment. His remains will be sent home. One of his horses was sold in Mexico, and one retained. He died of a typhoid fever. Mr. Freaner says he saw an account of the funeral ceremonies in the "American Star." This is the first intelligence that has reached the country of the sad event. Major Webster was one of the first to enter his name as a volunteer in the regiment raised in Massachusetts. The patriotism which prompted him was the more commendable, inasmuch as there was great difficulty encountered in that State in raising troops at all, as the public sentiment was so overpowering against the war.—Dol. News.

Interesting Dutch Colony.—The Holland Immigrants, recently settled in Iowa, have named their new settlement "Pella" from Pella beyond Jordan, to which the early Christians fled upon the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans. It is two or three months old, and numbers eight hundred inhabitants. Large numbers are to join them in the Spring when their Pella will suddenly become a populous prairie town. It is a singular sight, says a correspondent of the Ch. Intelligencer; the velvet jackets and wooden shoes of these Puritans of the 19th century in the midst of the prairies of the New Purchase, that stretch from the Des Moines to the Cheaque, in Central Iowa. They are living in camps covered with tent-cloth, or grass and bushes—the sides barricaded with all sorts of odd-looking boxes and chests from the Netherlands.

These people are respectable and intelligent. When they took the oath of allegiance to the United States, a few weeks since, but two made their marks. Many of the leading men possess unusual refinement and education.

A Fearful Leap and Narrow Escape.—One of the most extraordinary instances of preservation under circumstances of imminent peril, occurred a few days since in this vininity. On Friday morning last, at the silk factory of the Northampton Association, a building four stories in height, George Washington Sullivan, a young man connected with the association, went out on the roof for the purpose of picking up a mineral which he had accidentally dropped there while standing in the belfry. To secure himself from falling, he took off his shoes. Notwithstanding this precaution, after descending the roof a few steps, finding himself slipping, he took off one of his stockings, but whilst attempting to take off the other, his motion became so much accelerated, that a fearful fall was unavoidable. He then, with remarkable presence of mind, rolled himself over upon the roof whilst he was sliding, in order to prevent falling upon the platform, and when he reached the eaves, having first drawn in and held his breath, clenched his teeth and hands, and contracted his muscles, he leaped to the ground, a distance of 40 or 45 feet, and came down on his feet!

The concussion was so great as temporarily to deprive him of the power of standing. He was carried into the house, placed in bed, and soon after examined by a surgeon, who decided that no bones were broken and no joints dislocated, although there was reason to apprehend serious injury to the muscles about the spine, where there appeared to be great soreness. The young man's friends then wrapped him in sheets wet in cold water, after the manner prescribed by the "water-cure" system, which soon produced perspiration. A cold bath was afterwards administered. In the afternoon of the same day, he walked out without assistance, and the next day he was running about with his usual hilarity, complaining of no unpleasant effects from his fall, excepting slight lameness in one of his feet! A remarkable fact, connected with this occurrence, is, that symptoms of serious disease which he was previously suffering, have since in a great measure disappeared. It seems as if the change of action which was produced in so unusual a manner, has been salutary, and that instead of so frightful an accident being fatal in its effects, as might be expected, it has been the means of restoring him to health!—Northampton Democrat.

A Revolutionary Hero Gone.—We learn from the Frederick Examiner, that Mr. Henry Bear, of that city, who departed this life on Thursday last, in the 91st year of his age, was the last of the revolutionary heroes of Frederick county. He entered the army in 1776, as a volunteer. He was one of that company of patriotic and gallant young men who marched from Frederick under the command of Captain Peter Mantz, and formed a part of the old Maryland Line. He passed through much peril and hardship, and was in several battles. He was attended to his last resting place by the Masonic fraternity, of which he was a member.—Baltimore Sun.

Frauds Upon Emigrants.—Many complaints have recently been made before Alderm'n Bulkley, by persons who have made payments to A. K. Amies, as the agent of a New York house, Mr. P. O'Hern & Co., for the passage of their families from Europe, the result of which has invariably been, that after waiting from six to nine months, no wives or children, sisters or brothers, have made their appearance, nor can any responsible man be found to refund their money. The New York firm put off the applicants by saying that they expect soon to hear from their Liverpool agent, when the delay will be explained; and in answer to letters applying for the advance being refunded, they say they have returned the advance to the Philadelphia agent, but on application to him he denies the fact. Thus hundreds of dollars have been filched from these unsuspecting people, who, in addition to their pecuniary loss, have been deprived of the society of their families for months while daily expecting their arrival. These payments amount from twenty to sixty dollars. Persons desirous of engaging passages for their relatives should be warned by these nefarious transactions, and make their contracts with responsible and trust-worthy mercantile firms. One poor man who had been defrauded out of the hard-earned fruits of his labor, saved for the purpose of bringing his family over to the land of his adoption, burst into tears on being informed of the fraud which had been practised.

To the Public.

Mr. Editor—As I have been frequently enquired of about fruit trees, I take this method of informing all interested in the matter, that Mr. Eli Nichols, at his nursery at Loydsville, on the national pike, fifty-eight miles east of Zanesville, has about one hundred thousand fruit trees of good size, consisting of apple, peach, pear, and cherry trees, which he will sell on the most accommodating terms, as he wishes to dispose of his stock. There are a number in this neighborhood who have procured trees from this nursery, and as far as they have fruited, produce a good article.

Mr. Charles Nichols, the son of the proprietor, will be at the Eagle Hotel on Saturday the 10th of March, at Norwich on the 13th, and at Cambridge on the 15th, who will make any arrangements that the demands will justify.

Yours, &c.

Br. Burns, we will make it a point to label our package for New Alexandria, Via Cadiz, as requested. Please say in your next whether papers for Mt. Pleasant, and the rest of Jefferson county, should not go by Wheeling.

Br. B. Roby, the pay for pamphlets was duly received by Br. L.

The P. M. at Bulltown, Va., informs us that S. A. Hickell, has moved away, and that his paper is no longer taken from the office. That subscriber owes for nearly three volumes of our paper. We hope that our agent, nearest him, will collect what is due.

Br. C. Sumption, we have ever considered you one of our best subscribers, and if we omitted to send you a pamphlet, it was an unintentional oversight, which would have been corrected, had you but given us a hint.

Br. J. Jack, we stand corrected in the case of Br. J. L. He has paid to No. 11, of present volume. Glad to find him such a good natured man as not to get provoked with us for accidently sending him a bill. Surely this ovidences good sense on his part, for we are glad to make the correction, and to ask his pardon besides.

GENERAL CONFERENCE

PROSPECTUS

Of a Daily and Weekly Pittsburgh Christian Advocate during the session.

We propose to issue, during the approaching session of the General Conference in this city, a "Daily Pittsburgh Christian Advocate," half the size of our present large Weekly, containing full, accurate and authentic reports of proceedings, speeches and documents, together with all other matters of general interest occurring during the time.

TERMS—For a single copy, 'one dollar.' Any person sending us five subscribers shall be entitled to a copy for his agency; and one sending ten subscribers shall have three additional copies at his disposal. Advance pay, in all cases.

It is supposed that the General Conference may continue in session six weeks—that being near the length of the last two sessions. Should it continue longer, the Daily will be furnished to the end of the session at the above price. If it adjourns sooner, the Weekly paper will be substituted to make up the deficit of the six weeks of the Daily—allowing one Weekly for two Dailies. Thus, if the General Conference adjourns in five weeks, subscribers to the Daily will receive three copies of the Weekly to compensate for the six Dailies wanting to complete the sixth week. The Delegates will be furnished a copy gratis.

Weekly Session Paper.—We will also send, to such as may prefer it, the Weekly "Pittsburgh Christian Advocate," for six weeks, during the session of the General Conference, and until the whole of the proceedings are published. Terms—thirty three cents for one copy—four copies for 'one dollar.'

It is desirable to have the names as soon as possible, that we may know how large an edition of each will be needed. The money may be forwarded by the delegates where convenient. Great care will be combined with dispatch, in both printing and mailing, that subscribers may receive authentic intelligence at the earliest possible period.

All communications to be addressed to Rev. W. Hunter, Editor of the Pittsburgh Christian Advocate, Pittsburgh, Pa. Let those who send subscribers be careful to say they are for the session paper, and whether they are for the Daily or Weekly.

We respectfully request of our Methodist cotemporaries an early insertion of the above Prospectus—a favor which we will reciprocate if ever we have the opportunity.

Any paper inserting this Prospectus, and sending a copy containing it to this office, will be entitled to a Daily during the session of General Conference.

ALL those afflicted with that most distressing disease the PILES, can obtain certain relief, and in nineteen out of twenty cases a positive and permanent cure, by calling at S. B. Johnson's Agency, Putnam, and obtaining a box of Johnson's Vegetable Pile Ointment. This remedy has been in use in this vicinity for several years. And it is admitted by all who have tested its virtues to be superior to anything of the kind ever before offered to the public. A large number of certificates, from those cured by the use of the Vegetable Ointment, could be given in proof of its virtues, but it is here most necessary.

RETURN OF JOHN QUINCY ADAMS TO CONGRESS.

Saturday, February 13, 1847.

I saw him as he enter'd. Age had thinned
The white locks clustering round his ample brow,
And recent sickness chained him: yet he came
Still strong in spirit from his Northern hills,
To the high conclave, where he longed to be.
—I saw him, as beneath thet lofty dome,
Where throng the chosen and the gifted men
From all our many States, he took his seat.
Up, like a cloud, they rose, and noble heads
Were bowed before him; and unfettered hearts
Paid homage to that "old man eloquent"—
Such homage as doth honor him who gives,
As well as him who takes.

Heaven bless thee still,
Statesman and sage, of high ancestral line.
Who, with the force of a far-reaching mind,
Enriched by discipline of studious lore,
Hast served thy country even from thy boy-hood's prime,
Till fourscore winters settled, and has borne
The highest honors. Be thy fame her care,
And, 'mid her pictures for a race unborn,
Be this uprising in her Hall, to greet
Thy hoary head, with priceless wisdom crowned!

Written for the Western Recorder.

Br. Bassett:

I recently read a short sketch, in the "Western Recorder," from a minister of the Gospel, who intimates, that he had, in his own estimation, become wiser in his old age.—He says, when a boy, he foolishly thought, that thunder killed; but that since he become a man, he had made a very important discovery respecting those movements of the elements, at whose stunning noise and zigzag streamers of vivid brightness all nature trembles. Now he presumes, it is the lightening that does execution; and therefore, practicing upon this example of the operation of the elements, he had, in his preaching, taken to lightening more and thundering less. Well, from this statement, I suppose. that this good Brother wishes us to understand, that he has got into the right track at last!—Let me ask him to consider if he is not mistaken after all!— Say, Brother, who has ever seen lightning do great execution, when not accompanied with loud, long, and repeated claps of thunder? On the contrary, do not our observation and experience teach us, that when there is lightning, with little or no thunder, it is a sure sign of dry weather? If therefore the case be anonogous, I think the Brother, who contents himself with lightening preaching alone, would, for certain, make a second discovery, were he to look into the spiritual condition of the people of his charge:—he would undoubtedly find them parched up with a great moral drought! After all his flashes of noiseless lightning thrown upon them, I have no doubt, he would be compelled to say, "they are dry, very dry." Being convinced that this is the fact in his case, I would persuade the Brother, for the good of the people, to go to thundering again, and that not merely in the positive or comparative, but in the superlative degree,—loudest. And lest he should earn the name of a dry preacher, let him say nothing more against the Boanerges, the loud sons of thunder!

For the information of the friends of the good cause, I wish to state a few facts. It will be recollected, that when I first came on this circuit last year, I published through the Recorder, that I found many of the members dead and buried in a state of spiritual coldness and religious indifference; but we were expecting for them a resurrection. Some of our brethren thought, that this did come to pass; but alas! time and experience have taught us that the work in some instances was not quite perfect, or if it actually was, some of these resurrectioned souls had not the gift of continuance! It seems to me from, the fact of their going back so soon, that they had been dead too long,—that they were considerably tainted, and, in fact, the decay had gone on so far, that they were past restoration to vital energy. We gave them, I assure you, the very best restorative remedy with which the Divine Physician has provided his Church; and we added to this, good nursing, which is always more than half of the cure; and for a while we had great hopes of them,—for the word of life appeared to have upon them its desired effect.—Yet some, notwithstanding this approved medical treatment, have gone back into their former deadness and inactivity, and as it is well known, that when persons die,—especially when their death is from a contagious disease,—decomposition takes place, the sooner they are removed and buried the better it is for the health of the living,—so with those church-members that will not live when they can,—the sooner they are thrown out from among the living the better; and so we have done with those dead members. It may perhaps be useful, to give some of the symptoms of this fatal disease, that preys upon and carries off so many professors of religion in this our day. Well, upon examination, I find the symptoms very varied.—Class first is marked with an unusual thirst. The diseased of this type, have an insatiable thirsting after land speculations, beautiful farms, and large houses; while others of them have no rest for their eagerness for cattle and horses. So strong is this constant thirst upon them, that it frequently throws them into great agitations,—hurries them on till they get into difficulties with their neighbors,—and keeps them agoing so completely that they may be seen, even on the Sabbath, engaged hauling with their teams, or employed in their business operations.—Class second of the subjects of this disease are distinguished for dissipating tendencies. They have an unconquerable propensity to be at vain parties; and in these pernicious assemblages, imbibing the unholy spirit of the world, and being in great glee, they spend more of their time "in cracking jokes and telling old witch stories," than they do in saying their prayers. Among the symptoms of both these classes of spiritual invalids, there is not any indication of an inclinatien for the worship of God, and such is their affliction, that their seats in the sanctuary are frequently vacant. Or should they find time to get to the house of God, they of the first class have worked so hard through the past week, that they are too stupid to worship God, and if they be wakeful enough, spend the sacred hour of worship in secretly thinking about making a good bargain; and those of class second are too full of levity and vanity to be fit for the solemn exercises of worship; for now you will see them simpering, and then whispering with one another.—Whenever you see the symptoms now described, you may look out for spiritual death. Soon, very soon, they will appear like Pharoah's kine, "lean and ill-favored!"—It may be thought from what I have written, that we have rather dull times on Delaware Circuit; but I have merely given the dark side of the picture. But thanks be to God, the bright side is to come. If some of our brethren in the ministry would not be so fearful, but come and help us, they would see for themselves, and perhaps share with us in those copious showers of refreshing, which our Heavenly Father pours out upon us.

Written for the Western Recorder.

Some notice of Br. Paul's "Hard Case."

Mr. Editor,—In the 16th No. 9th vol. of the Western Recorder, there is an article from Br. W. W. Paul, in which he complains that his is "a hard case." Br. Paul may rest assured that (so far as I am able to judge) his long toils, his sore trials, and privations, for the church of his choice, are appreciated by his brethren, and have indelibly fixed his name in their affections.—Some of the facts of the case to which he refers as I recollect them are as follows: At the Conf. of 1846, there were brethren appointed to visit the Ohio and Wabash Conferences. It was afterwards discovered that the Indiana, and Wabash Conferences were to meet at the same time. Br. Shipp in view of the fraternal visitation, as contemplated by the Conference consulted with a majority of the preachers (Br. Paul with the rest,) and also a considerable number of the members, about changing the time of meeting of the Indiana Conference, from the 13th October 1847, to the 29th September 1847. They mostly gave their consent. Br. Shipp gave notice of the change. The members sustained his views in their primary assemblies, by electing delegates in most of the circuits to meet on 29th September. One certificate was signed by Br. Paul as an officer of Quarterly Conference, and it was said that he raised no objection to the 29th September being the time of his choice. When we met, all passed smoothly, and no one would have thought that there was any illegality in our doings. Br. Paul's seat was vacant—his name was called in examination of character but he did not answer. The letter referred to was presented. We were told that perhaps he would be there in a day or two—his case was laid over. In the letter he on the ground of the illegality of the time, denied the Conference the privilege of meddling with his character in any way at any time, previous to the 13th October 1847. We were somewhat in the fag. And although some of us had our scruples as to the legality of the time, yet I believe the Conference unanimously sustained Br. Shipp in his course in changing the tune. At a subsequent call of Brother Paul's name, the writer moved the language as found in the published minutes in Conference. The committee returned his name as they found it. That he was published as being present was through mistake. But, Sir, it was far from the thoughts of the mover, and we think of Conference, to hold Br. Paul up to public gaze as guilty of any crime. We knew of no better course believing that he would take no field of labor assigned him at the time. And yet I have doubts whether we did just right. He speaks of the publishing of his letter; I do not think this would have done any good. But I leave you to judge whether both sides is not a hard case.

Narrative.

From Green's Arts and Miseries of Gambling.

An Affecting Account

Of a Young Man brought to Ruin and an Untimely Death by Gambling.

They had not been on the ground long, before the horses were called up by the drum, and Mr. C. was very much delighted with the gay dress of the riders, and the bustle and animation of the scene generally; and upon seeing one of Mr. T.'s black boys in his jockey dress, he remarked to Miss Amelia, 'I believe that is your uncle's boy, is it not?' 'O yes,' said she, 'uncle has a beautiful grey colt to run for the sweep-stake to-day; you recollect seeing him run the other day at home, when they were training him? He replied, 'I do not understand the meaning of the term sweep-stake.' 'Oh, that is, when they make a race, they will, as many as wish, put up perhaps a hundred dollars each; and each man that has a horse, which he thinks can win, enters him, and they run, and the fastest horse takes the whole of the money:' 'then,' she added, 'you are at liberty to bet on any one you please, being the lucky horse: do you ever bet?' 'No, Miss,' said he, 'I never bet a straw on anything in my life, and to say the truth, I never knew how.' 'Then,' she observed, 'you must watch me, and I will instruct you.' The time came for the horses to start, and Miss Amelia wished to make a bet, in which she was accommodated by some other lady. She made a number of bets on her uncle's colt. At length the horses were started, her uncle's horse keeping behind, and one of the other horses winning the first heat.—There was great excitement, and a great many offering to bet four to one that Mr. T.'s horse would not win. Miss Amelia was taking all the bets she could, until the horn called them up to start. Mr. C. had now become excited, fearing Miss Amelia would lose her money her bets amounting in all, to several hundred dollars.—Still, however, she appeared desirous to bet more; and her uncle sat and laughed at her giddy notions; but said that he liked to see her have so much nerve and courage to bet. The horses started the second time, and ran very handsomely, Mr. T.'s colt in the rear, until they had run about three-quarters of a mile, when Mr. T. made a motion with his handkerchief, and immediately his horse made an effort, and passed them like a flash, and won the second heat. Mr. C. appeared to be very much elated with the result, and there was a great change in the countenances of the people present: after this, Miss Amelia seemed perfectly easy. The horses started on the third heat, and Mr. T.'s colt continued in the rear for about the same distance as in the preceding heat, when Mr. T. raised his handkerchief as before, and then his colt, like a shot, passed them all, and won the third heat with ease, which brought the race to a conclusion.

Miss Amelia, having received her winnings, departed for the city, in company with Mr. C., who was evidently highly delighted with the amusements of the day; and upon their arrival at the hotel, this was the whole theme of their conversation. The next day there was another fine race; and Mr. T. having entered another horse, was again successful: Mr. C. seemed as much delighted with the sport as on the day before. On the third day Mr. T. did not enter for the purse, but everything passed off very agreeably. That night Mr. C. was invited to a card party, to which he went with Miss Amelia. The opposite partners (Miss Amelia having selected Mr. C. as hers) proposed betting wine and sweetmeats: Miss Amelia took the bets, and she and Mr. C. beat the others quite easily; and when they retired, Mr. C. began to think that he might be classed among the good whist players, and considered it a very pleasant amusement. The following day they went to the races, and witnessed a very delightful day's sport, closing the day by a visit to the theatre, where Mr. C. was highly entertained. On their return, Mr. T. asked the young gentleman how he had enjoyed himself at the races and the theatre. His reply was about as follows: 'I am very much delighted, indeed, with both the races and the theatre; so much so, that I am determined to buy me some young horses, and join the club, and will visit the city with you every spring.' 'Good,' said Mr. T.; 'there is no sport equal to it; and then, you know, Mr. C. that you will always have a chance to win your expenses.'—Mr. T. bade him good evening and departed.—Mr. C. retired, congratulating himself on the speculations that he would realize upon maturing the plans he then formed. Throughout the night, the card-table, the theatre, and the horse-race, were uppermost in his dreams.

In the morning, while he was meditating upon the pleasures he had enjoyed at the races, and in other amusements, he recollected that his father had sent some five hundred dollars with him to purchase a fine carriage in the city, and some other articles for the family and himself. He thought he would go out and make the purchases before the time appointed for the races to begin. He went and made the purchases, and when he was about to take his pocket-book out to pay for them, what was his surprise to find it was gone! He knew not, for the moment, what to do or to say; he finally told the merchant to lay the articles aside for him; and that he would call shortly and take them. He started out very much enraged at finding that he had been robbed; he met Mr. T. near the door of the hotel, and related his misfortune to him. 'Poh!' said Mr. T., 'that's a mere nothing, sir, it is only a trifling turn of fortune; I have not the least doubt but my neice will make or lose two thousand this day.' 'Yes, sir,' said C., 'but my poor old father and mother will think I have been dissipating—not that I care a fig for the amount. I must go and advertise it, or I shall certainly never get it; what do you think of it?' 'I can tell you, Mr. C., you should do no such thing; you see, sir, if a dishonest man should find it, he will not notice your advertisement, and if an honest man finds it, he will advertise it himself.' 'Well, sir,' said the young man, 'I shall have to go home without my carriage and other articles; and, besides, some of the neighbors sent money with me to make purchases for them, and if I return without them, they will say there is no dependence to be put in me; and then, sir, there will be so many different conjectures as to the kind of company I was in. They will inquire, could you have lost it, or did some person steal it from you? and other questions of this kind.'—'Never mind,' said Mr. T.; 'I can put you in a way that no person about home shall know anything about it. I will loan you the amount and you can pay me when you are able, and not even Miss Amelia shall know it; and as you are going to raise some fine stock, you will be able to refund me the amount in a short time.' Mr. C. was so much pleased with this offer, that he gratefully accepted the money, about nine hundred dollars, and went and paid for his carriage and other articles, and returned to Mr. T. very much gratified with the success he had met with.

The time for the race had now arrived, and Mr. C. was so much pleased with the kindness and generosity which Mr. T. had just shown him, that he had completely won his confidence; and upon their reaching the ground, he asked Mr. T. which was his favorite horse. 'Oh! the black, of course,' said he, 'and, sir, you must know that we scarcely ever fail to win when it comes to test the bottom of the horses. The black is my entrance, and don't you see how much Miss Amelia thinks he will win? she is largely on the black.' The horses being ready, at the tap of the drum away they go, the black winning the first two heats. The result of this race induced Mr. C. to conclude that if the race was repeated he would venture to bet himself, and this he mentioned to Mr. T. 'Well,' said Mr. T., 'on to-morrow there is to be a very interesting race, and my fine colt is to run again. The race will not be of the same kind we had to-day; it will be the best three in five; the horse that beats three heats first, takes the purse; this they call the best three in five. And now Mr. C., if I were to bet high on any kind of race, it would be on that; but, (said he,) I scarcely ever bet much; I sometimes go as high as two or three hundred dollars to make it interesting.

In the evening, they visited the theatre as usual, and Miss Amelia was constantly talking of the great success she had met with, and how she intended to bet on her uncle's gray colt the next day. Mr. C. found himself so much interested in the anticipated race, that he thought he would take some money with him and venture to bet also. His inclination to do so, was strengthened by Miss Amelia's insisting that he would; but, by the next morning, he had come to the determination not to bet, fearing that he would be unlucky, and believing that in such an event, he would not be able to pay it without his parents knowing that he had lost the money in that way. Mr. T., in conversation with him, remarked that his colt would win the race at the three first heats, but that it was his intention to lose the first two heats, and to win the third, fourth, and fifth.

The time for commencing the race had nearly arrived, very few offering to bet, but those who did, offered to bet on Mr. T.'s gray. The drum was tapped, and the gray lost the first heat. Bets were now offered to large amounts that it would not win a single heat; these bets were all eagerly taken up by Miss Amelia. The horses started, and the gray lost the second heat. Then every body believed that the horse that won the first two heats would win the third also. Mr. C. saw Miss Amelia betting very largely that the gray would win one heat out of the five. They started again for the third heat, and when they had run nearly three-quarters of a mile, Mr. T. waved his handkerchief, the gray shot forward like an arrow, and won the heat. Mr. C. was now vexed with himself that he had not bet on the race. Bets were still offered and taken that the gray would not win the next heat; Miss Amelia took a large number of such bets. The horses got off, and as before, the gray kept behind for about three-fourths of a round; again Mr. T. waved his handkerchief, and scarce had the signal been given, when the gray passed the others and won the fourth heat with great ease. The betting now seemed silenced in a great measure,—the young lady had been successful in every one she had made. There appeared to be but one man on the track that wished to bet, and he said that he would stake one thousand dollars that the gray horse would not win the next heat. Miss Amelia replied that she would bet with him; this he politely declined, saying that he never bet with ladies, but that he would bet with the gentleman sitting in the carriage by her, meaning Mr. T., who observed, 'I do not bet sir; but if I did, I would bet you any amount that my colt would win; but, sir, I do not bet on my own horses.' Upon which the banterer inquired, 'Is that young man afraid, too? 'No, sir,' said Mr. C., 'I would bet you one thousand dollars as soon as one dollar, had I the money with me.'—'I will loan it to you,' said Mr. T.; and Mr. C. seeming to hesitate about accepting the loan, the man, as if about to turn away, rather sneeringly observed, 'I find, gentlemen, that you have not got much nerve.' Mr. C. finally borrowed the one thousand dollars and staked it upon the gray; the one that took the first and second heats, being the only horse that was to contest the heat with him. The drum tapped as usual, and the other horse was in the lead as before, for about three-fourths of the way, Mr. T. again gave his customary signal, upon which his horse speedily overtook the other, & in passing, passed on the inside, and came out several yards ahead. The gray's passing on the inside created a great excitement; and the judges gave it as their decision that the gray horse lost the race by foul riding. This news was like an electric shock to Mr. C., who thought he had certainly won. He tried to restrain his feelings as much as possible before Miss Amelia; but when he arrived in the city, he took Mr. T. and told him to give himself no uneasiness about the money he owed him, and to let no person know there was any transaction of the kind between them, and that he would wait his (Mr. C.'s) pleasure for the sums he had loaned him, amounting in all to near two thousand dollars. This appeared to satisfy Mr. C., as he knew that in the course of a few months he would be in possession of an estate of perhaps ten thousand dollars. This property his father and mother then held, and had been left him by his grandfather, who had died when he was quite an infant and had made him his sole heir after he was twenty-one years old, but his father was to have the interest arising from it until he came to that age. He was now within only two months of that period.

Prospects of the West.

Never was the prospects of the West so flattering as now. The venal and log-rolling legislation of past years, which so much injured the West, has, in a great measure, given place to more enlightened views. The interests of the mass are now consulted; formerly it was the interests of speculators. Improvements were made by the States, and in some cases located to points owned by high political functionaries, on routes that no company would have made them.

By the last news from Indianapolis, we learn that a charter is now becoming a law which gives the right of way to the Cincinnati and St. Louis Railroad through that State—Lawrenceburgh and Vincennes being made two points in the route. The intention of the company taking these points, is to make the road as straight as the nature of the country will permit. The right of way on the line proposed, we think the most important measure to a large portion of the West of anything that has been done for years. The charter obtained, we doubt not, the road will be built without any unnecessary delay. The importance of a communication with Cairo, in low stages of water, our merchants will all admit.—This will be secured by a railroad from that place to Vincennes, of sixty miles. By connecting the Cincinnati and St. Louis railroad with the Indianapolis and Madison road, Cincinnati will enjoy all the advantages we could derive from a road direct to Indianapolis, and the people of central Indiana have a choice of markets. By making the road direct to St. Louis, the line will be shortened, and secure all the travel from St. Louis and the Missouri to the East, through this place, and thus enable our manufacturers and merchants to enter into a competition they could not, were the travel diverted from this city. The great commercial and manufacturing advantages will, by means of directing the principal thoroughfares of the West to this point, be stimulated, and the aggregate of our business greatly increased.—Cincinnati Commercial.

Two Steamboats Sunk.—The Sallie Anderson, arrived at Memphis, reports the steamers Wm. H. Day and Amulet sunk in the Arkansas. Boats and cargoes entirely lost.

Indiana Enterprise.—At the last session of the Indiana Legislature, a charter was granted for the construction of a railroad from Jeffersonville to Columbus, Ind. The present Legislature a few days since, so amended the charter as to divest it of all obnoxious features. In less than two hours after the amended charter was brought to Jeffersonville, $125,000 were subscribed by the citizens of that place, and it was expected that in a few days the subscription would reach $500,000 by citizens of Jeffersonville, Charleston, and the vicinity of the two places.

Indiana Legislature.—The New Albany and Salem Railroad charter has passed the Indiana Legislature by a two thirds vote. The bill authorizing the people to vote on the question of calling a convention to amend the constitution, has passed the House.

☞If the sick wish a diseased stomach restored and impure blood cleansed without endangering the constitution, go to J. Deen, Grocer and Shoemaker, Putnam, and obtain a box of Dr. Le Roy's Sarsaparilla and Wild Cherry Pills which is the best family medicine now in use. So says Mr. O'Neil the Agent.

DR. LE ROY'S

Wild Cherry, and Sarsaparilla PILLS.

DR. LE ROY has most happily succeeded in combining Wild Cherry and Sarsaparilla with other vegetable ingredients, so as to produce a medicine at once tonic, and purgative, the only perfect discovery of the kind ever made. Their great peculiar excellence, and that which distinguishes them from all other purnatives is, that their operation is followed by no re-action. Their unrivalled purifying and purgative properties, for which they are indebted to the essence of Sarsaparilla, and other ingredients, being controlled by their highly tonic virtues, derived from the extract of Wild Cherry, they do not strain the digestive organs into action, as is the mode of operation with other cathartics, but on the contrary strengthen them into action. Thus all other purgative medicines produce more or less subsequent costiveness, and sluggishness of the gastric juice, while Dr. Le Roy's Pills leave all the machinery of the system full of life and activity, and the bowels open and natural. "Hence," writes Dr. Cheeseman, "they are the only active purgative which I can recommend with confidence, and without alarm; for they remove nothing but what ought to be removed—neither rack, nor strain—occasion no apathy or debilitation—and leave the bowels free, open, and vigorous." But the great virtue of Dr. Le Roy's Pills—the virtue which has spread their fame over the two hemispheres with a rapidity almost miraculous—lies in their purification of the blood. Here they not only stand altogether unrivalled, but fill up the measure of desire. They at once arrest the formation of bad blood, by removing all impurities from the chyle, of which the blood is formed; and moreover keep it clean, by toning and strengthing the digestive organs, so as to be able to exclude from it all matter of an innutricious nature; and then they purify the blood already in circulation; and never cease operation until it is entirely free from every noxious particle, & full of health, life, and vigor. THE OHIO CULTIVATOR FOR 1848

Published at Columbus, Ohio, on the 1st and 15th of each month, M. B. Batcham, Editor and Proprietor. Terms, $1 per year—four copies for $3—payment invariably in advance.

THE fourth volume of the Ohio Cultivator will commence Jan. 1st. 1848. This paper has now become so well known that it is scarcely necessary to speak of its character, or to allude to the commendations it has received from the Public Press and other sources. The editor is determined to spare no pains on his part to sustain the reputation of the work, and make each succeeding volume more useful than the preceding one. Our motto is "upward and onward;" and the object of the "Cultivator" is not only to collect and disseminate valuable facts and information relating to practical agriculture, but to inspire 'Farmers' with more just conceptions of the dignity of their profession; to induce them to cultivate the 'Mind' as well as the 'soil,' and thus elevate themselves to that position which it is their duty and privilege to occupy as 'American Agriculturists," in this age of Progress and Improvement.

With its very large list of contributors, numbering over "two hundred," most of them practical farmers in the West, the pages of the "Cultivator" will contain the results of "Experience," as well as the teachings of "Science;" and being written or selected with special reference to the climate, productions and farming of Ohio, this paper will be found more valuable than any other for the farmers of this and the adjoining States. It will contain the latest intelligence of the "Markets" of this country and England; notices of the weather and the crops; descriptions (with engravings,) of improved implements, machines, &c.; instructions in gardening and fruit culture; rearing and management of domestic animals; construction of farm buildings, fences, &c.; and a "Ladies' Department" devoted to household affairs, useful receipts, &c.

The friends of Improvement in Ohio and adjoining States are requested to obtain and forward subscribers for the Ohio Cultivator. Remember that the price is only "seventy-five cents" each, when four or more names are sent by one person. All subscriptions must commence with the first number of the volume; a complete index is furnished at the end of the year. Specimen numbers and a prospectus will be forwarded to all who desire them.

☞"Now is the time to subscribe!" Letters with remittances may be sent by mail at the risk and expense of the publisher. Address,

A Monthly Miscellany of moral and instructive information, embellished with numerous ENGRAVINGS of the various subjects treated of in the course of the year. Published monthly, in parts of 48 large octavo pages each.

PROSPECTUS FOR THE FIFTH VOLUME.

For four years the Pictorial Family Magazine has been before the American public, and it is peculiarly gratifying to the Publisher to know, that his efforts to do good through its medium, have met with the universal approbation of the public & the public prints, wherever it has found its way. It is now too firmly established upon the broad foundation of public confidence, to require a great flourish of trumpets to proclaim its continued existence, or the tricks of 'puffery' to allure the people to its support.

To those who are acquainted with the Magazine, it is unnecessary to speak of its design & merits; to those who are not, we will make a brief statement of both. The original design of this work was a noble one, and worthy of all praise. It was intended as a vehicle for conveying solid information to that class of citizens whose circumstances denied them the privilege of drinking abundantly

Selected Poetry.

I'D BE A SPIRIT.

I'd be a spirit, happy and holy,
Wandering at will o'er the fields of the blest,
Never to visit this dark world of sorrow,
But when despatched on some kindly behest;—
When at His bidding, the Spirit of spirits,
With soft wing descending to regions of night,
To whisper to some dying mortal the promise,
That turns his dark grave to a temple of light.

I'd be a spirit, happy and holy,
Bound to be the bright and the blessed above,
Not by a chain that in time can be broken,
As the light links that bind us poor mortals to love;
But highest communion of thought and of feeling,
Ineffable love, that no self can control,
All centered in 'One,' e'en the Sun of redemption,
That calls in blossom the spring of the soul.

I'd be a spirit, happy and holy,
Waking my lyre in those love-lighted skies,
Where sun, moon, and stars never shine, but the glory
That streams from the Godhead is light to all eyes;
Or by waters of life, where the bright tree is growing
Of knowledge, not given to 'proud' suns of dust,
Weave garlands to crown the blest beings that enter
Through "much tribulation," the rest of the just!

Ecclesiastical.

Written for the Western Recorder.

The Church of the Clergy—The Church of the People—The Church of both the Ministry and the People.

CONCLUDED.

Developments of ecclesiastical systems have been of the utmost importance to mankind, whether they have produced churches of the clergy, as the church of Rome, possessing civil, political, and ecclesiastical, dominion; or of the Methodist Episcopal Church producing civil and ecclesiastical masterdom; or the State and Church establishment of England—or as is proposed in Prussia, as the future church of that kingdom, a church of the nation, to which all the subjects shall belong.

"The Lutheran Reformation commenced upon the principles of the universal priesthood of Christians and the independence of nations on the decrees of the clergy. It discarded human mediators, and invited mankind to draw nigh to God immediately in Christ, who is the only Mediator between God and man, for the Mediator is Himself God. Christianity thus restores to man's moral responsibility its true position, and makes his moral responsibilities—not the responsibilities assumed by others for him—his central feelings. Thus far every man becomes a priest of the Most High, morally responsible to Him alone. This is the priesthood which St. Peter ascribes to the whole body of believers, the true sacrifice and reasonable service, which both he and St. Paul invite them to fulfil." This great idea requires for its full development churches of the ministry and people. Not the people without the ministry; for, to the ministry the church owes its existence, and upon it it greatly depends for its edification and perpetuation—and hence no manifestation of the universal priesthood of Christians is conceivable without the ministry."

Mr. Wesley believed and taught that Christians constitute a universal priesthood, and in it he found his lay-preachers, exhorters, praying men and women. For them and for all, he claimed liberty of conscience—but there was a germ of patronage which soon spread itself over this liberty to some extent during his life, tho' no man was more trustworthy of power—a germ which fully developed itself in the Deed which transmitted his absolute power to successors chosen by himself! He never dreamed that any one had a shadow of reason, as long as they remained Methodists, to question his right or his power. But Mr. Wesley could not bequeath his experience, self-denial, disinterestedness, and pure religion to his successors. He certainly bequeathed nothing to American Episcopacy that we know of; and if he had, he could not have bound free American citizens to remain in a state of ecclesiastical serfdom forever. It requires the choice of white Americans to be bondmen. It seems they may choose this condition if they will—and Judge Edmonds says, that a some have voluntarily so chosen, they must abide by their own act and deed, or bargain. 'Tis a hard case!

We will conclude with an extract from a letter dated February 24th, from a local preacher of the Methodist Episcopal Church, to a minister of the Methodist Protestant Church:—"Just here I would ask if you have seen the decision of Judge Edmonds in the case of the suit about the Church property. So much was I astonished about it, and disbelieving the decision to be a just one, (that is that the churches belonged to the bishops) I laid the matter before Judge ——, (one of the Judges of the Supreme Court of the United States) privately, and he said that the decison was not a correct one. If the decision is correct, it will cause a revolution in Methodism. If these things are so, the church should be enlightened on the subject—if they are not so, the church has been misrepresented grossly.—For my own part I am inclined to think that the decision of Judge Edmonds was correct. If so, it is a species of tyranny unknown in our civil government, savoring much of Romanism in its worst usurpations, and kept secret from the great Methodist family. Suppose after sufficient enlightenment of the Methodists the question were to be decided by the members, whether or not they were willing to be subjected to such a government? This poll would tell an awful tale—such a tale as would soon be the death knell of Methodist Episcopacy. Notwithstanding I incline to the decision of Judge Edmonds, I can but hope that it is not correct. I love the M. E. Church."

It was a strange want of discernment in the bishops to press this matter to a legal decision—and passing strange that American citizens, having any regard for their manhood, would acknowledge such pretensions before the public up to the time when a judge officially declared that having alienated their religious rights, they could not resume them—could not, as Methodists, resume them! But, should the decision be reversed, will not the preachers be free, and the people likewise? Then, and in that case, what will happen to the bishop's prerogative? What value to them will be their office without the right of presentation? Bishops, or at least their supremacy—may not be needed when church communicants are allowed to choose their own pastors—and if they are not worthy of this right, they are unworthy of membership in the universal priesthood. We do not say unworthy of American citizenship. S.

Strictures, &c.

Mr. Editor: We are sorry to witness a disposition on the part of certain brethren, to get up and continue a discussion, at the present time, on the Restrictive Article of the Constitution. The controversies on abolitionism, secret societies, &c., and especially, that on missions, have prevented our increase for the last few years; and, if persisted in, will, in a few years more, cripple, if not destroy our young church. People will not join a church whose fundamental principles are made the theme of weekly discussions, in view of tearing up the foundations and relaying them in some other manner, as is evidently the design of some of your correspondents. The Methodist Episcopal Church has, from this cause, lost of her membership, at the rate of one thousand members per month for the last twenty-four months; and the controversies & consequent decrease are still going on. We should learn wisdom by her folly; and, while she is engaged in violent disputation, our true policy will be to direct all our energies to the great objects of our calling—the spread of the Gospel—the conversion of sinners, and the establishment of our Zion on the broad basis of Mutual Rights, as laid down in our excellent Constitution.

Prudentia is much displeased with the restrictive article, which forbids the General Conference to pass any rules authorizing the respective Annual Conferences to station their ministers longer than two years, successively, in the same station, and three years, successively, in the same circuit; and under the pretext of exposing the imaginary evils of this article, he attacks the entire system of itinerancy, which has been productive of so much good, for so many years, and urges the absolute necessity of abolishing the system and substituting settled pastorates. He has published several numbers in the Recorder explanatory of his views and wishes, but it must be obvious to every reader, that his real design is to disparage itinerancy and render it unpopular, and secure for himself a permanent charge. The arguments, however, that he employs against itinerancy though numerous, are stale, and the few levelled at the restrictive rule, are equally applicable to, and subversive of, the itinerancy. His manner of managing the whole subject will, at once, enable his readers to estimate his true character, and to know where to place him.—They will perceive, that he is not to be classed with the honest opposers of the restrictive article, but with the reckless enemies of our entire system. He has, indeed assumed the signature of Prudentia, but we incline to the opinion, that one of an opposite character would be more appropriate.

We will proceed to make good our opinion as above expressed. Prudentia says: "Itinerancy is a creature of circumstances, and the circumstances which introduced it, have now ceased, and it is evident that the plan has had its day of greatest usefulness. Circumstances in the country, now call for something different."—"The time was when there was but little difference, the country being new, and there were but few settled pastors. Mostly all ministers were travelling ministers. But now other churches have their settled pastors, in almost every neighborhood, and the attention of the greater portion of the community is directed to them to the neglect of such transient visiters as Methodist itinerants." He proceeds to shew, in his way, that itinerancy was "contrary to primitive usage," and that, "there was nothing in the itinerancy of the Apostles that justifies modern itinerancy," and quotes largely from Lord King to prove that settled pastorates was the primitive plan, & consequently, itinerancy is in direct opposition to primitive usage, and, therefore, ought to be abolished forthwith. After reading the above quotations, we presume, the brethren will not be at a loss to decide on Prudentia's real design in publishing his series of essays on the restrictive rule.

But let us attend for a few moments, to some additional considerations offered by Prudentia, in view of inducing the Meth. Protestant Church to abandon her itinerancy and substitute settled pastorates. He tells us, "that an influential minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church told him in conversation, that theiritinerancy must eventually be given up for a settled pastorate." Ironically speaking, this is surely a weighty consideration. An influential minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church has given it as his opinion, that their itinerancy must eventually be given up for a settled pastorate, therefore, as this is the opinion of an influential minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church, the Meth. Protestant Church must, as speedily as possible give up hers! Verily, this is wonderful logic. But can any one believe that this influential minister's opinion is well founded or trustworthy? Is it to be expected, that the Methodist Episcopal Church will ever abandon her itinerancy which has in despite of her bad government spread her over these United States with a rapidity which has astonished all men, for a system of settled pastorates that her original actors found utterly inadequate to the wants of this great and growing people? She may alter and amend her government, by the introduction of laymen into the councils of the church, and she may modify her episcopacy, but she never will, while she has a particle of grace or good sense remaining, give up her itinerancy for a system of settled pastorates.—Much as we are opposed to the iron features of her government, we should prefer her communion with her itinerancy retained, to the Methodist Protestant Church when saddled with settled pastorates. And we believe there are thousands in our fellowship of the same mind.

Another consideration of apparently great weight with Prudentia is, that "an Annual Conference has, in effect, abolished the restrictive rule, and that half the church generally would be willing to have it abolished." It has been suggested to us, that the Annual Conference here alluded to is the Philadelphia Annual Conference. The last one made. A distinct set off from the Maryland Annual Conference, by the late General Conference. A Conference in its infancy, with no influence whatever in the Methodist Protestant Church, scarcely extending beyond Philadelphia, whose original projector has himself abandoned her, and gone west, and left her to the fostering care of sponsors and dry nurses. This Conference, Prudentia says, "has, in effect, abolished the restrictive rule," therefore, all the Conferences in our church, in these United States, ought to follow the example of this little young one, and do the same thing! Wonderful, wonderful logic!

But further, "half the church generally would be willing to have the rule abolished." Here we must ask our brother Prudentia. Has he proof of this assertion? Has he travelled thro'out the entire work, and made himself acquainted with the views and wishes of the membership, or does he make the declaration at random for effect?

We have been given to understand, that he is an assistant preacher on a ct. in the Musk. Conference and has travelled some few years, but we are not disposed to take his ipsi dixit, until he shew clearly, that he has the means of knowing, and what he says is, indeed, the truth. He appears, however, to have convinced himself that a large majority of both preachers and people are decidedly in favor of a speedy repeal of the restrictive rule, and of doing away with the itinerancy; and in the full persuasion of this deception, he cries out at the top of his voice, "If there is any one yet in favor of its continuance, I hope he will speak out."

Well, sir, we are in favor of the restrictive rule, and of an efficient and permanent itinerancy, and purpose to "speak out" in this and our future numbers.

Brother Joseph Barns, the fellow-laborer with Prudentia, in this crusade against our system of changing ministers periodically, we perceive, disavows all intention to abolish our itinerant ministry but the course he is pursuing is calculated to break up our church. It would be well for him to recollect the fable of the stork caught among the cranes. He may, like the stork plead the general harmlessness of his character, but those who are found in bad company must expect to share their reproach. The arguments produced by this brother are the same old threadbare articles for a long time worn by his predecessors, and like all other old garments, will fetch in the market just what they are worth and no more. We shall now stop to notice them as one of our western brethren has already taken him in hand.

PALEMON.

Written for the Western Recorder.

Mr. Editor:

As for the Restrictive Rule, my time has not come to offer one word by way of argument. Our young men began the discussion—so far all is mild—let them go on. I have served many years under the Rule as it now stands. I am now getting old; its tyranny, if there be any in it, can't affect me much longer, nor can a change benefit me. My days are in the yellow leaf—my sun is in the western sky—the finger of God himself is pointing me to eternity. Peace for the church, and peace for myself, is much to be desired. The abolition struggle is not more than over, in these parts—must we now have another? If so, O for heavenly wisdom and mildness. If all the light that our beloved brethren can cast upon this subject, shall go to convince the M. P. Church, that itinerancy without restriction, will be best for the people, let a change be made. But, if a change is only to benefit the preachers, while the interests of the membership are crippled and injured, I cannot favor a change. The corrupt doctrine of by-gone days, and other countries, that the people were made for the King, and not the King for the people,—that the churches were made for the priesthood, and not the priesthood for the churches, don't suit me—it don't suit our times. The question mooted, I take it, is not the divine authority of the Restrictive Rule, but its utility. Will it be best for the Church?—will our itinerancy be more useful for mankind, if the restrictive rule be removed? Who but God himself can answer this question in the affirmative? We know the past—not the future. I can hardly muster up courage enough for another change, though that change should take me to paradise.

Answer to a Question.

Mr. Editor,—"A friend" wishes to know what Annual Conference I allude to in my first number on the Restrictive Rule, where I say, An Annual Conference has in effect abolished the rule.

I allude to the Philadelphia Annual Conference.—It will be remembered that the law upon Home Missions, enacted by the last General Conference, in answer to a movement of the Philadelphia portion of the Meryland Annaul Conference, authorizes the appointment of a minister to the service of a Home Mission any number of years successively. And that a field of labor, existing under the title of a Mission, may so remain, until it is the pleasure of the Annual Conference to change its name. Therefore, if the Circuits and Stations of an Annual Conference all existed under the title of Missions, the restrictive rule could not have its effect upon them. And when an Annual Conference declares all of its territory to be "unoccupied" ground, what do they do, but in effect abolish the rule? Every appointment in that territory is then free from the restrictive rule, and may remain so, if they chose to be called a mission, and the Annual Conference sanction that choice. The following extract from the minutes of the Philadelphia Annual Conference, held March 1847, will show how true is the assertion which is called in question.

"Division of the District."—The committee appointed to prepare an expression of the sense of this Conference, on the subject indicated, submitted the following Report.

Whereas, the General Conference, held in Cincinnati, in May 1846, acting on the Bible principle of accommodation, in all things innocent and useful to the wants and wishes of the ministers and members of the churches in relation to, and for the furtherance of the work of our holy religion, changed the law of our confederacy in regard to Home Missions, set off the Philadelphia District, and authorized the organization of this Annual Conference; and whereas, it is deemed expedient by this body, because of the peculiarity of its origin and position, to make a distinct declaration of the course which it decides to pusue under the new law: Therefore,

Be it Resolved,—4. That in the application of this principle to the division of the District into Circuits, Stations and Missions, the whole territory be regarded as hitherto "unoccupied;" and that the churches now represented in the Conference be registered and supplied in accordance with their present selection of position.

5. That such churches as may unite with the Conference hereafter, shall have the same privilege of selecting their position as Circuits, Stations, or Missions.

6. That the same regulations which govern Circuits and Stations, except the restrictive rule, be adopted for the "temporary government" of the Missions—the only difference between the two classes of appointments, consisting in this exception.

"The above report was accepted and adopted."

I have now answered the question, as to the bearing of my assertion, and have also, I think, shown its truthfulness. If you will give this an insertion I will not trouble you more, until some "friend" shall require it.

A LETTER FROM IOWA.

Iowa, Jan. 6, 1848.

Iowa City, the Capitol of the State, is situated on the banks of Iowa River, in Johnson County, seventy-five miles north-west of Burlington, and thirty-three miles west of Bloomington, which is its port and nearest river town. The city was laid out in 1839, and in less than one year after its first settlement contained about seven hundred inhabitants. Its progress since, has not been equal to its early advancement, as the population now numbers but about one thousand.—The prairies in its neighborhood are large, and timber scarce, and the settlements are consequently not numerous. The site is an indifferent one, but the town is regularly laid off, and contains some very fine buildings. The State-House is a large edifice, built of Iowa marble, in the real Hawk-eye style of Architecture, tho' some call it of the Grecian order. It is situated about a quarter of a mile from the river, in a spacious square. Its length is one hundred and twenty feet, and breadth sixty feet, and when finished is to be surmounted by two domes and a tower. The Representative's Hall is a spacious room in the upper story, being sixty feet in width and about fifty in breadth, and twenty in height. It is nearly finished and carpeted. The Senate Chamber and Supreme Court room are commodious apartments. The library, which contains about five thousand volumes, and various offices for the public authorities, are also in the building.

This town is exceedingly well supplied with commodious churches. There are six erected and a seventh nearly finished, and all are large and built of brick or stone. There is a College, as it is called, located here. The building is of brick, two stories high, and of commodious size. There are also quite a number of very handsome private residences. The hotels are not sufficient to accommodate comfortably the crowd that is here at present, but the fare is very good. The different professions and trades are strongly represented in point of numbers, as is usual at the capitols of our States. Society is very good, and social intercourse quite general.

A law was passed, last winter, by the Legislature to remove the capitol from Iowa city to a more central location. During the past summer, the Commissioners selected a site, about eighty miles west of Iowa city, on what is called the "Divide," being a ridge of land between the Skunk and Des Moines Rivers. A town was laid out, and called Monroe city. A beautiful plat of the new capitol was lithographed, and several hundred of the lots offered for sale. The prices ranged from one dollar to three hundred, the majority bringing four or five dollars. I have not heard of any one settling upon the new site. In fact, some say that the proceedings of the Commissioners will be deemed illegal, and the capitol not removed to Monroe city. In view of the capitol being removed from this place, the Legislature donated the State-House to the "University of Iowa."—Saturday Gleaner.

Ministerial.

From the Cumberland Presbyterian.

The kind of Ministry the World Needs.

Last week we presented conversion to God as the first important qualification. The second is learning.

They should be learned in the word of divine truth. That one can do the work of a gospel minister, without a knowledge of the nature and object of his office, the duties it enjoins, and the character it is to effect, is impossible. That he will without such knowledge, commit egregious errors, and in all probability disgrace his calling, is evident. He will be as one walking in the dark, and ever liable to stumble. The Bible inculcates all this important learning. It is found nowhere else. It teaches that the office is of God, therefore holy; that the object of its institution is to enlighten and save men from their sins, by pointing to him that taketh away the sin of the world; and therefore cannot be turned into a means of earthly gain, without perversion and ruin to souls; that he upon whom it is conferred must be holy, and keep himself unspotted from the world, and be devoted to no other object, in his life, than the salvation of men. It teaches the doctrine, he must preach, (warns against those that are dangerous) the spirit in which he is to speak, the sacrifices he must make, and in short all the duties and doctrines which pertain to his office, and the nature of him to whom he is to preach. Every thing necessary for a minister to know relative to the nature, object, and duties of his calling are clearly set before him. The more learned he becomes in these instructions, the more completely will his heart be brought under their influence. His love to God and souls will increase daily; and the more will he be impressed with the eternal importance of the gospel and of its becoming the power of God unto salvation. The greater necessity will he discover of self-denial, and devotedness to his work. To commission and send forth a ministry unacquainted with these things, whatever might be their qualifications in other respects, would be directing the blind to lead the blind; ruin and nothing else must be the consequence.—The world could not receive any important benefit from such teachers. But it would be far otherwise with those who are well instructed in the kingdom. They will be lights. And those who sit in the region of darkness, and shadow of death, will see the light, and rejoice in it, for the day of their deliverance is at hand, and "the day spring from on high" is about to succeed the darkness, with a glorious brightness.

To a knowledge of the Bible, we care not how extensively they add a knowledge of science & literature. The study of these will discipline the mind and prepare it for close thought, and vigorous action—will afford copious, powerful, and useful illustration.

All who are seeking the office of the ministry, should if possible receive a liberal education.—They will find use for it. And if they commence their career, as preachers, without it, they will always feel the need of it. There have been men distinguished for their usefulness in the church, whom circumstances prevented from reaping the advantages of a liberal education. But we have no reason to suppose they would not have been more useful, had they been well educated. One very important reason why the world should have a ministry learned in science and literature, is found in the efforts made by infidelity to turn them against the Christian religion. We not only need men who can meet and refute this infidelity, but we should look forward to the day when learning shall proceed from the bosom of the church, when our youth shall be taught not from the lips of infidels but by those believing the christian religion; and who are more fit persons to desseminate learning than the ministers of Christ? By whom will it be taught with more disinterested motives?—By whom, that love the souls of men more, and have made more sacrifices for their good?

Educate the ministry. Let them be learned, and above all learned in the Scriptures.

Tight Lacing.

Br. Bassett: I have read with some interest a number of strictures in your excellent family paper, on the deliterious effects of over lacing, on the health and life of females. Viewing them as I do, not only the noblest part of God's creation on earth, but holding in their hands to a great extent the destinies of the entire family of man, physically, mentally, morally, every effort that tends to elevate, and ennoble them, must in the very nature of things, have its influence on the entire race. If I could suggest a thought that would be of any service towards their improvement in any point of view, it would be to me very gratifying. The principal object in this communication is, if possible, to elicit some thoughts from some one able to do justice to the subject. The question is, whether the evils immediately on the victims of fashion, are not also borne consequently by succeeding generations? Dr. Rush, in several of his treatises, holds the hereditary character of a number of diseases. Morrison, Hygeist of London, (tho' not a writer of any great celebrity, yet holds some truths,) alleged that all diseases exist in the blood, of consequence are transmitted, but that in many instances the disease of the child varies from that of the parent. Combe on the constitution of man, if he can be relied on, (doubtless his work possesses considerable merit,) teaches that the whole constitution is hereditary—that is, every thing that constitutes, whether in the physical organization, the mental faculties, or moral powers. We may add that by far the largest proportion of medical writers, and almost every practicing physician with whom we have conversed, believe in hereditary liability to disease. We are of opinion that the subject has not yet been sufficiently investigated—that is, the problem whether the compression of the chest, so as to injure the vital organs of life, does not of necessity produce such an organic derangement, as to lay the foundation for untold suffering in posterity. If the above hints have any foundation in fact, ought not parents to wake up to their duty towards their daughters. We opine that there is a fearful responsibility. Would that in this age of improvement, the magic wand of public opinion might sweep so injurious a practice out of existence, and save our daughters from a course fraught with so much misery.—We are no advocate for slovenliness, but on the contrary, we love to see our daughters neat as well as accomplished; but neatness and distortion are two very different things.

Mrs. John Quincy Adams.

Washington, Feb, 26, 1848.

This lady, rendered illustrious for the long list of honors she has shared in common with her husband, & with whom she lived for more than half a century, is a severe sufferer in mind and body from the death of her lamented partner. Some few incidents in the life of this lady may not at this time be uninteresting to the readers of the Gazette.

Mrs. Adams was born in England on the 11th of February, 1775. She was the daughter of Joshua Johnson, a Maryland gentleman, who went from America to London, where he became eminent as a merchant. During the war he left England for France, where he acted as the Commercial Agent of this country, and returned upon the ratification of the treaty of Peace. Mr. Adams found his future wife at London, when acting under a commission conferred upon him by General Washington, in 1794, for exchanging the ratifications made under the treaty of November of that year. Mrs. A. was married at All Hallows Church, London, on the 26th of June, 1797, and followed her husband to Prussia, where Mr. A. was presented as the first American Minister from the United States. Mrs. Adams conferred honor upon the country at a time when the United States was just recognized as an equal among the nations of the earth.—Her next theatre of service was in Washington, and after this again the Court of St. Petersburg, and this from 1809 to 1814, the most exciting, and perhaps the most revolutionary period in the history of Europe, and embracing a part of that interesting period of our history when the country was at war with England. Mr. Adams resided longer at St. Petersburg than any one of our American Ministers, excepting Mr. Middleton, and his lady was left there for a brief period, while her husband was called to another field of service. Mrs. A. came alone from St. Petersburg to Paris, after the treaty of Peace had been signed by Mr. A. at Ghent. She was at Paris during the most memorable period of Napoleon's supremacy, and passed the world wide "hundred days" at the French Metropolis, in the midst of the whirl of excitement incident to the struggle between the Bourbons and the Revolutionists. After short residence in France, followed by a longer one with her parents in the neighborhood of London, Mrs. Adams came to Washington in 1817, where her husband had been called as the principal member of Mr. Monroe's Cabinet. Eight years as Secretary of State, four in the White House, and fifty-one years the companion of her distinguished husband, Mrs. Adams has seen more of Court life, and that in every variety, from the boastful ostentations of Royalty to the simplicity of our own Republican habits, than perhaps any living woman.

The illness and death of Mr. A. seems to have quite overcome her, and twice while at the Capitol before his death, she fainted, and was borne to her own home.—Pittsburgh Gazette.

PITTSBURGH DISTRICT.

Allegheny, Pa., March 9th, 1848.

Br. Bassett: Gratitude to the Divine Giver of all good, constrains me to say something of the gracious out-pouring of the Holy Spirit, which we have lately enjoyed in this Station.

We held a protracted meeting during the holidays, at which we were assisted by Brs. Brown, and Clawson, who labored zealously and acceptably. Several were awakened and a number converted. But from various causes the church did not come up to the help of the Lord, as they should have done. We then suspended our efforts, for a time and then a number of us resolved to go to work in good earnest, and work until we were blest with a revival. The Lord heard our prayers and blest our efforts. The Spirit's awakening power was soon felt among sinners and backsliders. The altar was crowded with penitent souls, who sought and found pardon through faith in the Redeemer's blood. About forty professed to find the pearl of great price, and about as many were added to the church. Among those converted was a descendant of the original inhabitants of this country, of the Mohegan tribe, and so far as he knows, the only one alive of his nation. He sought and found peace in believing. He is an intelligent sensible young man, and we hope if faithful may be useful to the church. With so much to attract the attention of the young, as we have here, it is difficult to promote the interests of religion among them. Yet by God's grace we will do the best we can.

Yours respectfully.

JAMES ROBISON.

Valley Mission, March, 2, 1848.

Br. Bassett: We are glad to have it in our power to say through the Recorder that the Lord has to some extent revived his work of grace on Valley Mission. We reached our appointment about two weeks after the rise of Conference, but found our Zion in a gloomy condition, with about 12 or 13 members scattered over the country like sheep without a shepherd. Our first object was to secure places for preaching, which we did without difficulty, for the people are kind and hospitable, and receive us with kindness wherever we go. Thirty-six have been added to the church, believers have been built up, and the cause appears to be advancing. We have good congregations and good prospects at several other places. May the Lord revive his work more abundantly.

In christian love I am yours with esteem.

W. P. ELLISON.

George's Creek Circuit, Springhill, Pa., March 6th, 1848.

Br. Bassett: I wish to inform you and your readers through the Western Recorder, that we have had a good meeting at the New Frame. Fourteen gave their names to the church, and several professed to get religion at that time. We have great reason to thank the Lord for his goodness to us. There have been a great many removals from this circuit, this year, owing to the failure in the iron works in this country, but I am in hope that times in this respect will grow better. May the Lord send prosperity amongst the iron men. The farmers are doing well now, for this world, and I hope for the world to come.

S. CLAWSON.

MUSKINGUm DISTRICT.

West Chester, Ohio, March 7th, 1848.

Br. Bassett: Perhaps some would like to know something relative to Br. Case's whereabouts and whatabout.

For the satisfaction of those who may be thus solicitous I would say that I arrived on Pleasant Hill circuit, and filled two appointments on the first Sabbath after the rise of Conference. I have not been absent from the circuit but one Sabbath since, at which time I went to assist Br. Baldwin on Leesburgh circuit.

When I came to this circuit the plan was arranged for a four weeks' circuit, this plan has been altered and I travel the circuit once in two weeks.

At an early period we commenced a series of protracted meetings at which we labored long and hard with but very little success.

However, congregations were large, attention good, and interest seemed to be very great. I think I never witnessed such apparent efforts to stifle convictions and banish good impressions. In many instances I noticed individuals trembling on their seats, tears forcing their way in quick succession over their cheeks, and anon the head fallen and the face covered for a time; but after a little the heart would seem to be hardened, the neck stiffened, the tear wiped away, an air of indifference assumed, and the meetings concluded with very little to encourage or build future hopes upon. Yet looking to him who said, "Lo I am with you," and "my grace shall be sufficient for you" we commenced a second series; and in each of these meetings the Lord has owned and blest his word. And I now think that the labors of the 1st series were not in vain in the Lord, as many of those who were almost constrained then, are now in possession of a hope which is an anchor to the soul and reaches within the vail. Our first meeting in the second series was commenced in West Chester the first Saturday in February—it lasted 6 days, and continued to increase in interest to the close. Convertions were frequent, convictions general, and the attention of the entire community became aroused. We have received sixteen members at this place since the commencement of the meeting. We were compelled to close this meeting, as the time to commence our second quarterly meeting at Hartwood was at hand. Thither we directed our steps. Here we were assisted by Br. W. L. Baldwin who labored with ability and efficiency. May this good Br. be long spared and retained among us in his perseverance and usefulness. Brs. Hoover and Noble also did us good service here. Br. Fairchild's health prevented his being with us on this occasion. But when health and circumstances permit Br. F. is at his post & very efficient.

Our meeting at Hartwood lasted some 10 days. Never since I have been in the ministry have I seen in the same time so many instances of the beneficial effects of the gospel upon individuals, families and neighbors as here. Some 50 or 60 persons were converted—25 united during the meeting and 9 since, with the Methodist Prot. Church.

Keeping up our regular appointments we arrived at Amity on Wednesday evening. With the friends here we tarried one week except Sabbath (on that day I travelled 14 miles preached two sermons, led one class, and returned on Monday,) this was a special season—conversions seemed very bright and satisfactory—the enjoyments of all very great. Our meetings were in progress from 10 to 16 hours in 24, and it seemed to me very much like Heaven upon earth.—Here we received 40 members in the Methodist Protestant Church, and what is rather remarkable, 24 of them heads of families. On the next Saturday evening after the close of this meeting, we commenced a protracted meeting at High Hill. Here the work seemed equally prosperous and bid fair for a great ingathering, but my strength being entirely exhausted and having no ministerial aid, the members also being worn down, we were compelled on last evening to close the meeting, having continued three days—but in this short time a number were converted and six members were received into the Methodist Prot. Church. This morning I reluctantly turned my back upon High Hill and am now with my family, where I shall remain a few days to rest. We have received at the various appointments during this Conference year One hundred and five members. On Pleasant Hill circuit, I find many valuable members, and I feel as much at home with them as with any people with whom I have sojourned since I have been in the Itinerancy; Br. Clancy's meeting for P. H. ct., will be at the Pleasant Hill appointment.

Yours, &c.,

J. W. CASE.

Home, March 3d, 1848.

Br. Bassett: I take the present appportunity to write a few lines for the purpose of informing the President of Muskingum District that we are still doing the best we can for Leesburg Circuit. Peace and some prosperity have attended us this year so far, and hope through the blessing of the Divine Being we shall have better times; at the present we cannot say we have so extensive revivals as some of our brethren but are not discouraged. At our first quar. meeting we had the efficient labors of Br. J. H. Hamilton from Coshocton circuit, protracted the meeting a week—some professed to obtain peace—the church at Liberty much revived—three joined. We held a protracted meeting at Harmony class, Br. Case assisted, labored faithfully, a good time among the membership. Our second quarterly meeting commenced on the 19th of February, we gave announcement of the time of our meeting through the Recorder, but not one of our ministerial brethren come to our assistance, so we had to do the best we could without a strange preacher. The meeting was protracted ten days, ten professed to obtain the pearl of great price; six of these were young men who bid fair for much usefulness. Twelve joined. May they be steadfast, abounding in the work of the Lord. If it was not for the expected removals of some ten or twelve of our brethren, our prospects at Pleasant Valley would be quite flattering. We desire to be thankful to the Great Head af the church for what he did for us at this meeting. Brethren came from the different parts of the circuit of one heart and mind. The Lord poured out his Spirit abundantly, the membership were greatly cheered and built up in the holy faith that works by love.

Yours in love, and peace,

W. L. BALDWIN.

Pisgah Ct., March 11, 1848.

Br. Bassett: Permit me through the medium of your paper to make a brief statement relative to this circuit. At our first quarterly meeting, Br. Piper, (for reasons I may not here state) took his leave of us. Nothing of interest was connected with that meeting. Four weeks subsequently, Br. Clancy's meeting for this circuit commenced. A worse time for a meeting I have seldom seen. The rain fell incessantly, yet notwithstanding these forbidding circumstances many evidenced their attachment to the cause by making their way to the house of God. It was a season of benefit to those that were present. The church was much revived. Two gave us their names on Monday, at which time the meeting closed. Our first protracted meeting was at the Union appointment, commencing on New-years. At this meeting we enjoyed the acceptable aid of Br. W. G. Scott; the meeting resulted in an accession of twelve to the church. On the 12th of February, I commenced a meeting at Ebenezer appointment. Owing to ill health I was obliged to leave it; four joined. Here the friends have taken steps towards building a new house, one that will do honor to that people. In about one half hour there was $277 subscribed. On the 19th of February our second quarterly meeting came on. It continued some days. We were favored with timely aid from our afflicted Br. Sears, who labored with his usual energy. May grace sustain him amid his affliction, this was a meeting of great interest. Our lovefeast was one of the richest scenes I ever enjoyed of the kind. This meeting ultimated in the happy conversion of eleven. Ten gave us their names, making in all between 30 and 40 this year. The most devout prayer of my heart is, that God may send much more abundant prosperity to this people this year.

Yours in Christ,

O. V. WARREN.

OHIO DISTRICT.

Cincinnati ct., March 4th, 1848.

Br. Bassett: I take my pen to write "glad tidings of great joy." The Lord has once more visited old Bethesda Church with a gracious outpouring of his Spirit and grace. On the 12th day of February, we commenced a protracted meeting at Bethesda meeting house in the fear and relying on the Lord for success. It was like taking a leap into the dark. The state of things in the church produced by former difficulties seemed to forbid a belief that God would visit his people in mercy and with prosperity, but the incredulity of the Church was put to flight by the powerful displays of divine goodness in causing backsliders and sinners to tremble and cry for mercy. And one good brother was constrained to acknowledge in a morning meeting held for religious experience that he "had no idea the Lord was going to work this way." O we had a melting time when brother and sister Martin came back to the church. The meeting was first appointed to be held just one week, and during the week the Lord worked powerfully in the church, so that at the close of the week prospects bid fair for a more thorough work of reformation amongst sinners; for as yet but few were converted, and brother Langdon and myself were pretty well worn down. I went to the City for ministerial help, and here I found a "man of God" ready, willing and able to work for the Lord, Rev. Z. Covel from the State of New York one of the first Methodist Protestant ministers. This good brother is still with us and the Lord by him is still carrying on a work of grace in the reformation of sinners. Surely an overruling and special Providence is manifested in directing this good brother amongst us to help carry on the work of the Lord, when help was most needed. The meeting has been in progress upwards of two weeks, and just as long as sinners are inclined to seek the Lord, the meeting will continue. The work of conversion has been very gradual thus far, hence not so many have been converted as the reader might naturally suppose from the length of the meeting. Only about eighteen or twenty have been "BORN AGIAN," and twelve have joined as probationers for membership in the church, and the prospect is fair for more. Before I close I must record a singular circumstance, which my eyes never witnessed before. The unconverted collected in groups during divine service to sing the songs of Zion and while penitent mourners cried for mercy the unconverted would sing appropriate pieces to encourage them, but the work of conviction became so powerful that a good many of our unconverted singers have hung their harps on the willows. Our prayer is that they may be brought by the operation of the Holy Spirit and the truth of God to receive a "clean heart," and then shall they be able to sing with the Spirit and with the understanding also. Let me say to all who shall read this communication, that have the work of God at heart. Take courage and go ahead in the performance of duty, and leave the event with God; for "Paul may plant and Apollos water but God giveth the increase."

I remain yours in Christ,

A. H. TRUMBO, Supt.

Bellbrook, March 9, 1848.

Dear Br. Bassett: Having occasion to write on business, permit me to say that continued spiritual prosperity attends the efforts of our church in this place. We commenced our second quarterly meeting here on Friday evening February 19th with a public prayer meeting.—On Saturday night our President, Brother J. M. Young arrived and labored with us faithfully and profitably until the 25th when he was obliged to leave for Washington circuit. Large and deeply attentive congregations attended throughout the meeting—a holy influence seemed to pervade the house of God, and under the influence of Divine truth the decision was made, with many, to submit to Christ and enter upon the duties of a pious life.

On Thursday the 24th the ordinance of baptism was attended to, one by pouring, one by sprinkling, and nine by immersion, on the evening of that day after a sermon twelve persons came forward and united with the church. During this meeting thirty-two persons united with our church, so that since Christmas we have had an accession of seventy members in this place.

At Xenia we have had several accessions recently, and the church is encouraged to hope for prosperity.

Yours in Christ,

J. WHITE.

[From a private letter from Brother White, we take the liberty to extract the following additional particulars.—Ed.]

Our cause in this region is progressing finely. The brethren are now collecting money to buy a large library for Sabbath School in this place. They also are talking of building a parsonage house on the church lot. Since I came here, they have paid off the last cent of debt on the Bellbrook Church. At Xenia they have painted, white washed and carpeted the church, within the last two weeks. An old debt of nearly $200 hangs like an incubus, however, on that church. When I was last there, a subscription paper was got up, in view of paying it off.—When I left, $65 had been subscribed, and I think before conference the whole amount will be paid off.

From excessive labor, I have suffered considerably in health, rest however, will recruit me again. Never since I have engaged in the ministry have I labored so incessantly as the past winter, either in my own field of labor, or in assisting others.

I have used all my influence to procure subscribers for the "Recorder," on my field of labor, but have hitherto been unsuccessful. The heavy expenses of this small circuit, is urged as a plea, and calls for money to meet obligations previously contracted. I shall still urge the matter upon our friends, and hope to procure some good subscribers before the year closes.

Clarksville Circuit, March 1st, 1848.

Br. Bassett: We are at present among those who are favored of the Lord. We have just closed a protracted meeting which resulted in the accession of twenty members to the church. Many more bowed at the altar of prayer, and requested the prayers of the church in their behalf, and many more were convicted of the necessity of a change of heart. Truly we had a refreshing time and the presence of the Lord of Hosts, the God of Israel was with us. Unto him be all the glory. Amen. Brethren, pray for us. Yours in Love.

W. TIPTON.

Darby Mission, March 7th, 1848.

Br. Bassett: I would inform Br. Young and the friends of our Zion generally that the Lord has visited us in great mercy on this Mission. Our second quarterly meeting commenced on Saturday the 19th Feb., and did not finally close until one week from the following Monday evening. Our brethren from Union circuit were present, and labored with great acceptability and usefulness. But best of all, the Lord was with us, to show forth his mercy, love, and power; the result was, the conviction of sinners, the conversion of mourners, and building up of God's people in their most holy faith.

The work commenced at our first assembling on Saturday, and continued until the final close. Some nine or ten professed justification by faith, and twelve united with the church; principally from the world, perhaps not one exception.

We have had many discouragements on this field of labor for eighteen months past. But obstructions have been and still are gradually removing out of the way. We want to be truly grateful for what the Lord has done for us, and we look forward in hope of still better days. Our prayer is that the God of battles may be with us, and graciously bless us in all our labors of love. Brethren, the cause of Christ is advancing. Our ears are almost daily saluted, and our hearts cheered with revival intelligence. O let us nerve up to the work, and victory will soon turn on Israel's side. Let preachers and people come up to the help of the Lord against the mighty, and infidelity will hide its deformed head, and christianity shall perform the work of a mighty conqueror in our earth.

Yours in christian love,

R. K. DAVIS.

Destructive Fire.—We learn that the tannery establishment of Col. Robert Annan, near Emmittsburg, Md., was destroyed on Friday night, being the second time within the last 12 months. His loss is estimated at $6,000 or $8,000. He was insured to the amount of $5,000, in the Mutual Insurance Company of Frederick.—Balt. Sun.

Fire at Oberlin.—On the night of the 21 instant, a fire broke out in the bookstore of J. M. Fitch, proprietor of the Oberlin Evangelist.—This store was consumed, as also four other buildings—one occupied by Wm. H. Plumb as a store, another by Mr. Rider as a store, others by the Post Office, a shoe shop and goldsmith's shop. The dwelling house of Mr. Fitch, was destroyed, and the establishment of the Oberlin Evangelist, together with the books, list of subscribers, &c. After the water was exhausted in the nearest reservoir, the ladies formed a line to a more distant one, and rendered efficient aid in saving other buildings from destruction.

WESTERN RECORDER.

PUTNAM, OHIO:

Thursday, March 16, 1848.

Treaty of Peace.—The Baltimore Sun of Saturday last announces that the Treaty of Peace with Mexico, after undergoing some amendments, has been duly ratified by the U. S. Senate. The vote stood, Yeas, 38, Nays, 15. The particulars of its provisions have not yet been announced. The amendments of course will be subject to approval or rejection by the Mexican Government. It is gratifying however that hostilities are suspended whilst the negotiation is in progress. O, for peace—an honorable peace.

Revival Intelligence.—The hearts of many will be cheered by the unusual amount of intelligence of religious prosperity in various quarters of our Zion, which we are enabled to furnish in this week's paper. And we still hear of revivals in other circuits and places, which have not yet been regularly reported to us for our paper. Whilst we would give glory to God for the wondrous work of grace he hath wrought in various sections, we feel thankful that our paper is made the favored vehicle for communicating so much cheering intelligence and encouragement to the church. "Let them that are of a fearful heart, be strong, fear not—for he (the Lord) will come and save you." We cannot resist the conclusion that our M. P. brethren, would do well to extend the circulation of our paper where there have been numerous accessions, as a medium of information and encouragement, in religious, and ecclesiastical matters.

☞Will our friend Dr. Dorsey of Steubenville, have the goodness to inform us whether he can furnish us No. 2, Vol. I, of the Mutual Rights and Christian Intelligencer?

☞Three of the early writers of "the controversy," which arose in the M. E. Church, more than a quarter of a century ago, appear in the columns of our first page this week.

Mournful Pageant in the Eastern Cities.—The earthly remains of the late Hon. John Q. Adams were last week conveyed to their final resting place at Quincy, Mass. A committee of escort consisting of one member from each State of the Union, (thirty persons) was appointed by the House of Representatives, and accompanied the corpse through the whole of this sad journey. The escort with its honored charge, left Washington City, on Monday morning, 6th instant, and reached Baltimore at noon of that day. Extensive preparations had been made by the Mayor, Councils and citizens of that city, for showing forth their respect for the honored dead. The roar of cannon, the tolling of bells, the throng of an immense procession, and the suspension of business, manifested the feelings of the Baltimoreans, on the loss of the venerable Ex-President. The procession passed through some seven principal streets, and at about three o'clock halted at the Exchange, in the Rotunda of which the corpse was deposited, in charge of the Independent Blues until the following morning. The remains were accompanied to Baltimore by the Mayor of Washington City, to Philadelphia by the Mayor of Baltimore; and we presume that the like attention was paid in the escort between the other cities on the route.—On Tuesday morning, 17th instant, the remains of Mr. Adams were removed from Baltimore, a special train of cars having been fitted up to convey them with the escort to Philadelphia. The following day they were to leave that city for N. York, where they were to spend the ensuing night, and then depart for the New England cities. Extensive preparations were made in each of the cities on the way, for a public solemnization, but we have not yet received the particulars.

Thus has passed away from earth, a great and good man. But,

"The tall, the wise, the reverend head,
Must lie as low as ours."

Solemnization at Cincinnati.—Two successive public meetings have been held at Cincinnati, to take measures for a suitable expression of the feelings of community, on the death of J. Q. Adams. Wednesday, 22d inst. is set apart for a public solemnization. There is to be a great procession, religious exercises, an oration, &c. Extensive preparations are in progress to carry into effect the above design. This is just what we were anticipating. The citizens of the Queen city will delight to do honor to the memory of the "old man eloquent." No public man ever received a more cordial welcome from all hearts in that city than Mr. Adams on the memorable occasion of his visit there in Nov. 1843, for the purpose of laying the corner stone of the Cincinnati Observatory. His name was immortalized on that occasion, by a resolution of a public meeting giving the name of Mount Adams to the hill upon which the Observatory stands, and which is included in the corporate limits of the city. The resolution passed we believe by acclamation. As the astronomical address of Mr. Adams on that occasion, has had but a limited circulation in pamphlet form, we intend at a convenient time to give it place in the columns of out paper, for the benefit of our readers.

Long Island.—A meeting of Delegates from various parts of Long Island has been held for the purpose of adopting measures to make that Island a sovereign and independent State.

The Wires.—We learn by the Cincinnati Commercial, that the telegrapic communication between Cincinnati and Nashville, Tennessee, is now completed. Those two cities exchanged compliments for the first time by telegraph, on the 6th inst. About the same time, the line from Buffalo to Detroit was completed, and despatches were received at Cincinnati, from Detroit by way of Cleveland and Wellsville, on the 1st inst.

A Chronological Question.

With pleasure we insert the following queries by an esteemed brother, who is one of our subscribers in Hamilton County, and the subjoined response and explanation by Br. Potter, written out at our request.

Written for the Western Recorder.

Br. Bassett:

Having to write to you on business I embrace the opportunity of asking a few questions, which I wish you, or some of your correspondents would answer. In Exodus 12, 40, it is stated that the Children of Israel sojourned in the land of Egypt four hundred and thirty years. Now in the Chronological table it is stated that Jacob went down into Egypt 1706 years before Christ, and that the Children of Israel came up out of Egypt 1491 years before Christ, which makes but 215 years that they were in Egypt according to the common chronology. Now the questions which I would ask are these,

1st. Is there a mistake in the chronology? or 2d. Did they not recken time then as they do now?

JOSEPH M. BUXTON.

Montgomery, Ohio, March 4th, 1848.

Br. Bassett:

The passage, to which Brother Buxton's query refers, reads in our Translation thus:—"Now the sojourning of the children of Israel, who dwelt in Egypt was four hundred and thirty years." The statement in this verse is allowed on all hands to be extremely difficult. The difficulty has apparently arisen from an omission in our present copies of the Hebrew text. Dr. Kennicott, a great Biblical Scholar, says, that the Samaritan Pentateuch, in all its manuscripts, and in all its printed copies, has the additional words,—"their fathers"—"in the land of Canaan,"—in the above verse, and reads the passage, with these emendations, thus: "Now the sojourning of the children of Israel, and of their fathers, which they sojourned in the land Canaan, and in the land of Egypt, was 430 years."

The same sum is given by Paul, Gal. 3, 17. who reckons from the time of the promise made to Abraham when he was commanded to go to the land of Canaan, to the date of the giving of Law, which was shortly after the departure of the Israelites out of Egypt. This account of the Apostle coincides with the Samaritan version, which, by preserving the two passages,—"their fathers,"—"and in the land of Canaan,"—lost out of the present Hebrew text, has rescued the statement in question from perplexity and contradiction. The Samaritan Pentateuch, to which reference is here made, is allowed, by learned men, to be the most correct copy of the five books of Moses, now extant. This corresponds, in its emendations, with the Alexandrian copy of the Septuagint, which is also admitted to be one of the most authentic, as well as the most ancient copies of this version, we possess. As to the Apostle Paul, no one will doubt the correctness of his assertion. Thus then in the mouth of three witnesses, the account is indubitably established. The explanation, according to the emendations, is as follows: From Abraham's entry into Canaan to the birth of Isaac was 25 years, Gen. 12. 4.—17 chap. 1—25. Isaac was 60 years old at the birth of Jacob, Gen. 25 chap. 26 verse. Jacob was 130 at the time he went down into Egypt, Gen. 47, 9. These three sums amount to 215 years. Now Jacob and his descendants continued in Egypt 215 years more, and thus the whole sum of 430 years is made out.

From Abraham's entry into Canaan to the birth of Isaac	}	25 years
At the birth of Jacob, Isaac had lived	}	60 years
When Jacob went to Egypt, his age was	}	130 years
Jacob and his children continued in Egypt	}	215 years
		430 years

A Constitutional Question.

As the excellent brother who sends us the following enquiry, refers to "the men still living who were members of the Convention who framed the Constitution of the Methodist Protestant Church," we trust that some one of them will accommodate the request by responding at once to the enquiry. We see no difficulty in the matter, but shall be gratified to see what will be said by some one of the senior brethren referred to.

Written for the Western Recorder.

Mr. Editor: As the Methodist Protestant Church (comparatively) is in her infancy, there are many questions connected with the administration of her government, upon which her ministry and membership, and those of her best friends seem to disagree. I hope therefore it will not be thought amiss to ask information, inasmuch as there are a number of men still living who were members of the Convention who framed her Constitution, and understand the genius of her government, and would doubtless be pleased to impart any information that might be desired.

Now Mr. Editor, the question I seek information on, is the first item of the 4th Article of the Constitution, which I suppose to be based on the first elementary principle; and will ask my question by supposing the following case: Suppose any number of believers in Christ, should unite together as a religious society, or church, and embrace the principles of religious truth held by the Meth. P. Church, and adopt her Constitution, and desire to conform to her book of discipline, and means of grace, but not at the present time wish to be a component part of any circuit. Suppose they should request the superintendent of some circuit, or station, near by, to recognize them as a Methodist Protestant Church, or society, and present them to his quarterly Conference, for its concurrence on the question of recognition. Could it be done in accordance with the said 1st item of the 4th Article of the Constitution? Or must the question of recognition, and reception, as a component part, of some circuit or station go together? INQUIRER.

Memoir of Sarah B. Judson, Member of the American Mission to Burmah, by "Fanny Forrester," New York, L. Colby and Company, 1848, pp. 250.

This is a beautiful book just issued from the press, which has been anticipated by the public with much interest. We are indebted to the politeness of the publishers for one of the earliest copies. This work is from the pen of an American lady distinguished as one of the most popular writers of the day. It has been prepared by her too, under circumstances of remarkable interest. "Fanny Forrester" is the present Mrs. Judson, the successor of the lady whose biography she writes, as the wife of the celebrated Dr. Judson. But a few months ago her marriage took place, soon after which she accompanied her spouse, that devoted Missionary, in a probably returnless voyage to the far off land of Heathenism, to aid him in the blessed work of evangelizing those who sit in pagan darkness. The work was written at her new home, Rangoon, Burmah, & is now first published from the press of the Empire City. Our time has not yet allowed us the pleasure of reading through the book, but we anticipate a rare feast in so doing, when opportunity serves. Mrs. S. B. Judson was a native of New Hampshire. And as she spent full twenty years in the service at foreign missions, her life must be full of interesting incident. We have no doubt that the publication will be extensively patronized and read.

M'Makin's American Courier.—We take pleasure in announcing the recent change and improvements in the Philadelphia Saturday Courier, heretofore so called. It is generally known that in the final adjustment of the business of Mr. Holden deceased, who was one of the editors, and Mr. M'Makin, his surviving partner, and who is the present publisher, a public sale of the establishment recently took place, Mr. M'Makin was the only bidder at the sale, and is now exclusive proprietor. The Saturday Courier has been one of the most popular of the eastern Weeklies, for several years past. Its seventeenth volume having just closed, the publisher has again greatly enlarged and improved it, and has just issued the first number of Volume XVIII, under the new heading above indicated. The sheet is of truly mammoth size, and contains an almost endless variety of general reading, and general intelligence. The news from the various chief cities and quarters of the union, is arranged under tasty headings, with miniature views of the cities, &c. Each number also contains several good engravings, of landscapes, portraits, &c. The terms of the American Courier, are $2 in advance for a single copy—four copies for $5, eight copies for $10. Address, Andrew M'Makin, Philadelphia.

Congressional Globe & Appendix.—Some time ago we published the prospectus of this work As we have been regularly receiving it for several years, and find it a very convenient and valuable work, containing a full and faithful report of the proceedings of Congress, we are gratified to learn that it meets with extensive patronage. By a note from the Publishers, we are informed that having struck off a large edition, they are prepared to furnish the back numbers to new subscribers. Up to the first of April, new subscribers can be furnished at the original charge, $2 for the present session of Congress. After that time the price will be enhanced to $3.

Biographical.

Written for the Western Recorder.

NICHOLAS AMOS

Was a native of Harford county, Md., born in 1771. He left that State for Kentucky in 1794, and located himself in Bourbon county. At an early age he 'laid hold on the hope set before him' in the gospel, adopting highly spiritualized ideas of its requirements and teachings. He adorned his profession with a well ordered life and goodly conversation, to the end of his long pilgrimage, which terminated at the age of seventy-six years. You are aware of the even tenor of his way, and the consequent barrenness of incident which an account of his life must present. Still he acted well his part, and there all the honor lies. Occupying his place in the quiet paths of common usefulness, he still exhibited in a high degree those sterling virtues essential to true goodness and real greatness. He had a lively sympathy for the suffering, a strict regard for truth and justice, great decision of character, and an unfailing fund of common sense. Show and pretence, the unreal in whatever it was manifested, whether in politics, religion, or morals, he detected as if by instinct, and abhorred as the crying evils of the times, the shews of things substituted for the real. This ready and lively appreciation of the substantial and the essential, may possibly have led him to undervalue the signs and ceremonies so commonly regarded as of much importance—for he did not admit the ordinance of Baptism or the Lord's Supper to be of perpetual obligation to the church, but rather regarded them as a part of those things which

"stood only in meats and drinks and divers washings, imposed until the time of reformation," contending only for that inner life, which is the result of "Christ, formed within, the hope of glory."

Mr. Amos was an esteemed member of the Methodist Protestant Church, almost from its first organization in Bourbon county, Ky. until his death. He took a great interest in its prosperity, and some of his brethren will remember seeing him at the General Conference, in Cincinnati, 1846. Mr. A. was a most useful member of the Methodist Protestant Church, until the society in his neighborhood was dispersed by the vascillating and unfaithful conduct of some of its pastors. But he rests from his labors, and his ear is no longer pained with the sounds of strife, and contention, which he long considered the premonitory symptoms of ruin both to the church and state. L. M.

DELILAH ANN MESSER,

Daughter of Jared and Elizabeth Messer, took her leave of earth and friends on the 19th of November last, after an illness of three weeks, during which time she suffered much. Yet amid her sufferings, she manifested christian resignation. During the former part of her illness, she indulged a desire to recover, but as she neared the valley, she dismissed the world. Her longings were to depart and be with Christ which she conceived would be far better. During the latter part of her illness, religion, and that alone, was her theme. Many of her young associates visited her. She exhorted them to commence doing their work for eternity. She spent much of her time in praying and praising and only seemed contented when the family or visitors were engaged in singing or praying. Frequently she would join with them when her strength would permit.

A more triumphant death could not be experienced by any one than was the death of this sister. She gave the best possible evidence of a perfect preparation for death, there can be no doubt but her released spirit is now imparadised in the bosom of its God.

ANNA CATHARINE SMITH,

Consort of Alexander Smith, departed this life on the 30th of October, after a brief illness of one week. She had been laboring under general debility for some months. Long has she been in the church exhibiting a promptness in the discharge of duty that ever does honor to the Christian. To the last she gave evidence that her ambition was to be found in the sanctuary, although obliged to contend with many infirmities. She has left an aged companion to mourn her departure. The circumstances indicate most positively that his stay will be short. May grace sustain him amid the infirmities of old age with which he is obliged to contend. Their house has long been the itinerant's home. Welcome and plenty have always been found there.

It appears that the whole number of persons killed on the sixteen Railroads in the Commonwealth, during the year 1847, was 44, and the number of persons injured, 41. Town Swallowed by an Earthquake.—Malta.—The Neapolitan steamer Capri, has brought intelligence from Syracuse, that the earthquake which was felt here on the 11th, had laid the city of Augusta in ruins. The first shock was felt at 1 p. m., and was so violent that all the people fled from their houses. The following one a few minutes afterwards, destroyed the whole place except twenty-seven houses;—the mole sank, and where it formerly stood there was no bottom at fifty fathoms. The last accounts received at Syracuse state that thirty-five dead bodies had been found and fifty-nine wounded recovered from the ruins. The earthquake was also felt at Noto, Syracuse, and Catama, with partial damage, and at Messina, without damage.

Emigration to Texas.—The Journal du Havre, of the 8th, contains the following:—"A colony of Communists, composed of seventy-five persons, of all professions, uniformly clad, passed through the town to-day, and embarked in the American vessel Rome, bound for New Orleans. It is called the Icarian Colony, and is going out to settle upon and cultivate a tract of land of 4,000,000 acres, on the Red River, in the State of Texas, which has been bought by the Society, the head of which, M. Cabet, remains in France. They live completely in common with order and economy, and call each other brothers. They are furnished with all the necessary tools and implements for their undertaking."

Cholera.—At Constantinople, on the 17 January, the cholera had not diminished, eight to ten cases occurring daily. The disease was making great ravage, among the Jews of Kuskundschak, on the Asiatic side of the Bosphorus.

Bank of Susquehanna County.—We copy the following from a letter recently received from W. L. Post, President of the Susquehanna Co. Bank: "I see your last paper quotes us at 12½ per cent. discount. I don't well see why this should be so, particularly as this bank has steadily and regularly met all demands at its counter for upwards of three years past." The Bank makes a charge of 2 per cent. for exchange on this city for its own notes, and our brokers purchase them at 2 a 2½ discount.—Bicknells Reporter.

Destructive Fire at Saint Louis--Four Steamboats Burned.

St. Louis, March 10.

Editor Ohio Statesman:

The Steamboats Avalanche, John L. Hardin, Laclede, and Hibernia, also a barge, were destroyed by fire at the wharf last night.

The Avalanche had arrived from Pittsburgh, and had on board 200 boxes dry goods, most of which were destroyed. The Hibernia was loading for Nashville, & had on board 25 tons flour, hides, &c. The John L. Hardin loading for the Missouri river, and had on board 30 tons of groceries, &c.

The boats and freights are a total loss. The aggregate value of the former is about $44,000, about $1,800 of which is covered by insurance. The barge had 200 tons pork on board, which will be saved, but in a much damaged condition.

St. Louis, March 10.

The election in Illinois has resulted in the adoption of the new constitution by a large majority.

Land in Arkansas—News for Poor Folks.—A gentleman of Indiana, desirous of changing his residence, wrote a letter to the Auditor of State for the State of Arkansas, in relation to the proposition of that State to grant lands to actual settlers. He received the following reply:

Sir—Your letter of the 18th inst. has been received. I would advise you and your friends who wish to come to Arkansas, to come by water to Little Rock. You can there select the lands upon which to settle, and obtain at this office donation deeds for the lands. A man can get a donation of 160 acres for himself and also 160 for each one of his children. There is plenty of land to be donated for all the settlers you may bring with you.

Our climate is mild and delightful. A farmer can work almost every day during the winter.—In many parts of the State a man may raise as many cattle and other stock as he can obtain, without feeding them in winter or summer, as they find abundance of food in the woods and prairies.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. N. CONWAY,
Auditor of State.

N. B. Our taxes are light, and our currency good; crops have been very abundant this year, and it is a most favorable period for persons to settle in Arkansas.—Pittsburgh Commer. Journal.

Scarlet Fever.

We feel quite certain that more than half the children who die of this disease, fall victims to want of skill or energy in nursing; and if some physician would publish a few simple essays on its treatment he might confer a signal favor upon the public, that is if he could give the energy to carry out his directions. Perseverance, energy, the two first qualifications for doctor or nurse. One thing certain there can be no decent apology for letting any one die with the sore throat which attends this complaint, or for allowing it to remain ulcerated two days. We speak knowingly on this subject, having learned in that school in which even fools may learn—experience. We must surely have suffered as much with putrid sore throat as any person living, and have used as much pepper gargles, sage washes, borax, saltpetre, turpentine, hop and vinegar steams, blisters, mustard plasters, &c., as entitles us to exemption from the doctor's hands the rest of our life; and now we do know that to gargle the throat well with hard cider in a full state of fermentation, and warmed to blood heat, taking care to swallow some, about the same quantity one would of a strong pepper gargle,—bathing the throat, round the ears, and back of the neck, plentifully, with ice water, twice a day; then rubbing dry and rolling in flannel, "will cure the putrid sore throat." Of this we are certain; and that for this disease one barrel of hard cider is worth all the drugs which ever were brought over in ships. If it is attended with malignant scarlet fever, it is a powerful agent in curing that too. We have seen four almost hopeless cases of scarlet fever cured, in which the patient used for drink hard cider, two or three parts water, in which a slice of toast had been steeped. We do wish our physicians would try it. In unskilled hands it would be dangerous, because if the symptons are inflamatory instead of malignant, it is highly injurious; and it might be the means of saving many a life.—Pitts. Sat. Visiter.

An Incident in the Life of Mr. Adams.—In the Presidential campaign of 1824–5 a certain public officer employed his able pen against the claims and qualifications of Mr. Adams. After the inauguration of Mr. Adams some opponent of the officer gathered up the articles which he had fulminated against Mr. Adams & took them to Washington, when they were submitted to the inspection of the President.

Some little time after this Mr. Adams met Judge McLean, who was the Postmaster General, and asked him what kind of a public officer the one referred to was? Mr. McLean replied that he was a correct officer and an efficient one.

"Well, well." said Mr. Adams, complacently, "when you see him, please tell him that he may indulge his pen in writing against me as much as he pleases, so that he continues to do the duties of his official station faithfully."

The bill chartering the "Ohio and Mississippi Rail Road Company," by which a communication between Cincinnati and St. Louis is to be made, has passed both houses of the Legislature of Indiana, and awaits the signature of the governor to become a law. A railroad from Cincinnati, to connect at Wheeling with the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, will make one continuous railroad from Maine to Missouri.—Bicknell's Reporter.

Melancholy Accident.—As the afternoon train of cars, on Thursday evening last, was passing from Fitchburg to Athol, (Mass.) on the Vermont and Massachusetts line, and when near the crossing, about a mile and a half above the depot in Fitchburg, a horse and sleigh with two ladies passed the railroad, when the two horses became frightened and backed the sleigh on the track, by which both of the ladies were thrown out in front of the engine, run over and instantly killed. The engine, as soon as the horse was seen to back, sounded the alarm, and the train was nearly stopped when the fatal collision took place. The unfortunate ladies who thus lost their lives were Mrs. Osborn, wife of of Mr. Abraham Osborn of Fitchburg, and her daughter, Mrs. Jacob Tolman of West Sterling. The head of one was severed from the body.—Dol. News.

M. E. Church at Norfolk Destroyed.—The Methodist Episcopal Church at Norfolk, Va., was destroyed by fire on Friday last. It was erected in 1833, at a cost of $18,000 to $22,-000, and is insured in the Mutual Insurance Co. at Richmond, for the nett amount of $13,760.

Sons of Temperance.

A difficulty recently occurred between certain members of a Cambellite (or more properly Disciple) Church in Wellsville, on account of a portion of the congregation having associated themselves with the Sons of Temperance. The Wellsburgh Herald thus notices the settlement of the difficulty: "The difficulty which has for a long time existed between the Elders of the Baptist Congregation of this place, and two of their members, Messrs. John D. Nichols and Joseph R. Taylor, has finally been disposed of, and Messrs. Nichols and Taylor have been excommunicated from the church, upon the charge of being Sons of Temperance. They took with them twenty members of the congregation who were of the same belief, and on last Sabbath they organized a new church claiming, however, to be the true 'Church of Christ.'"—Pitts. Com. Journal.

Fire.—Four dwelling houses were burned last Friday night, in the Fifth Ward, and nine or ten families turned out of house and home. Three of the houses belonged to Mr. John Donnell, & the fourth was owned by Mr. Nesbitt. A stable belonged to Mr. Bridenthal. There was no insurance on any of the property.—Pitts. Com. Journal.

Mail Robber Caught.—A mail robber was caught at his depredations last week, between Towanda and Eaton. His name is James Sickler, and he was the carrier of the mail upon that route. The Postmaster at Mehoopany mailed $200 to Philadelphia, Sickler being present at the time. The Postmaster then followed the mail to Eaton, where the package containing the money was missing, and returning immediately arrested Sickler, and on being searched the money was found concealed in the toe of his boot. When he found he was caught, he confessed the deed, and also previous depredations at different times during the past eight months.

Chloroform.—A Liverpool paper says that the new agent "is very pleasant to the palate, and yields a delightful perfume, not much unlike that of a ripe apple, or good sherry wine. Its inhalation produces the most delightful sensations, and, in the course of a minute or so a state of the soundest somnambulism. Sulphuric ether, on the contrary, is very disagreeable, both to the palate and the olfactory nerves, and is much longer in producing the required result. It also produces great nausea, and has not always been administered without acting for a time somewhat injuriously upon the nervous system." No special kind of inhaler or instrument is necessary for its exhibition. A little of the liquid, diffused upon a piece of linen or sponge, and held over the mouth for about a minute, is all that is required.

In one of the cases, at the Ophthalmic Institution in Liverpool, a patient, a female, "was speedily thrown into a state of complete unconsciousness. During the inhalation of the vapor through a sponge, which of course allows a free passage to the atmospheric air, her countenance wore a most pleasurable expression; nor did it alter in the least during the trying moments of the operation upon her eye. She remained in a sound slumber for several minutes afterwards, and did not evince the slightest sensation of feeling, when repeatedly pinched by many of the gentlemen present. In this case, the eye was turned so completely inwards that greater force with the forceps was required, and, had the patient been operated upon in her natural state, the pain would have been proportionably excrutiating. Upon waking to consciousness, in about quarter of an hour, she said she was not aware that anything at all had been done to her."

Rights of Assigners.—A decision of some interest to commercial men and bankers is reported in the New York Journal of Commerce:

On the 29th of June, 1846, cotton was shipped from Savannah to New York, for sale on commission. On the same day a draft, at sixty days, was drawn by the shipper and discounted for the holder by a third party, the shipper declaring that it was drawn against and payable from the proceeds of the shipment. The draft reached New York on the 6th of July, and was accepted. But in the meantime, on the 30th of June, the commission merchant, on whom it was drawn, had failed and made a general consignment for the benefit of all his creditors. The shipper also failed at or about the same time.

The cotton arrived on the 9th of July and was taken possession of by the assignee. A bill in equity was filed, praying that the proceeds of the cotton might be applied to the payment of the draft. The bill was demurred to, but the Supreme Court, sitting in equity, gave judgment against the demurrer, holding that when the assignment was made the assignor had no property in the cotton, the draft not being then accepted, and that afterward, when the cotton arrived, he held it only as trustee for the holder of the draft. Of course his assignee took it subject to the same trust.

Decision in the Supreme Court.—The Supreme Court at Washington, has decided the case of the Merchants' Bank, vs. the New Jersey Steam Navigation Company, arising out of the loss of specie by the burning of the Lexington.—A special contract, it appears, had been entered into by Harnden & Co., with the Steamboat Company, by which the former agreed to pay two hundred and fifty dollars a month for the carriage of a crate of specified dimensions, upon the conditions that the company should not be responsible for the safe carriage or delivery of any article carried on board of the steamboats between New York and Providence. They were required to advertise, and to attach to their bills of lading, a notice to this effect. Notwithstanding this, the court decided that the owners of the steamboat were responsible, and they give this decision upon the ground that there was gross carelessness on board the Lexington. They say that she was on fire on the voyage before the ill-fated accident—that there was a box of goods partially consumed then—that on the last voyage bales of cotton were placed in close proximity to the boilers—that the engine was in one place below, the hose in another—that the fire-buckets were few and good for nothing—that the specie boxes were used for water buckets—that iron tiller-ropes were not used according to the requisitions of the law of Congress—that no heed was paid to many provisions of this law, & that in fine, therefore, the respondents are liable. A question of jurisdiction is now raised, which is not yet decided.

The Case of Major Daniel.—On Saturday the decision of the Supreme Court was given in the case of Abner G. Daniel, being an application for his discharge from the Eastern Penn. Penitentiary, on the ground that the Court erred in including hard labor in the sentence, as the law under which he was tried and convicted, did not prescribe it. Judge Rodgers delivered the opinions of the Court. It was decided that the words "hard labor," be stricken out of the sentence. In all other respects, the sentence of the Court below was affirmed.

Interesting Correspondence.

Clinton, Lenawee County, Michigan,
February 4th, 1848.

H. Greely, Esq.—Please send me the New York Daily Tribune, and I will pay you at the end of the year. By so doing you will promote the Whig cause in this section of country, & oblige yours,

HENRY W. STEPHENS.

REPLY.

New York, Feb 15, 1848.

H. W. Stephens—Dear Sir—Yours of the 4th has just reached me, and your request has been duly considered. I beg leave to say in answer, that I cannot do as you wish, under existing circumstances, for the following reasons: 1st. I can't remember that I ever had the honor of knowing you: 2d. The fact that you did not pay the postage on your letter is not calculated to impress me favorably as regards your pecuniary reliability; and 3d. I published newspapers seven years on credit, with lots of subscribers, and came near starving to death thereby. For the last seven years I have gone on the opposite track, sending my paper very rarely to any one who had not paid for it in advance; and I think it will gladden your philanthropic heart to know that the change has worked admirably for my constitution. I have since had not only a goodly array of subscribers, but enough to eat, a good suit of clothes, and very often some change in the vest pocket. Wishing you a share of the some blessings, I remain

Yours, truly,

HORACE GREELY.

P. S. I should like well to do any thing fairly within my power to 'promote the Whig cause' in Michigan, where there really seems to be need of some effort in that direction. If, therefore, a dozen Whigs of your town will write me that sending the Tribune to any named address will have the effect you intimate, I will give the paper gladly; but as to sending it on credit, to a stranger, I would most respectfully ask to be excused. Disliking to tax any one with postage, unless he has requested it, I send this printed in the Tribune, post paid. Adieu.

From Western Africa.

We have received our file of Africa's Luminary, coming down to the 12th of Jan.

The first Legislature of the "Republic of Liberia" convened on the 3d of Jan.

On the 16th of December a number of slaves collected for sale at King Gray's town were captured and taken to Monrovia, where they will be indentured. The purchasers escaped. King Gray, whose town is about twelve miles from Monrovia, having put himself under the protection of the Liberian Government, is amenable thereto for any attempt to sell slaves. It is also intimated that the slave factory at New Cesters will be broken up, that tract having become part of the territory of Liberia.

The Luminary confirms the account of the spread of religion among the Congo youths.

The newly purchased province of New Cesters is described as abounding with the palm tree, and offering a profitable field for mercantile adventure.

The mission stations appear to be unusually prosperous, revivals of religion taking place at all or nearly all of them. The Luminary says:

About one hundred and fifteen have been admitted on probation in the Methodist Episcopal Church; about fifty-four have been admitted to the ordinance of baptism; of these, five were immersed. We have not the means of knowing what number have united with other churches.

Hon. J. B. Gripon, the principal of the Liberia Conference Seminary, died very suddenly at his residence in Monrovia, on the 27th of November. He fell from his chair without warning, and died in a few moments. He had been elected Senator under the new constitution, which he assisted in framing, and was associate judge of Montserrado county.—Dollar News.

Serious Collision—Narrow Escape.—On Wednesday evening, about 9 o'clock, as the steamboat Trenton was coming down the river from Taconey with the mail pilot line, she came in collision with the sloop Two Sisters, Captain Marston, when opposite Five Mile Point. The pilots both strove to avoid the collision, but were unable, and the sloop was struck amidships, cutting her down to the water's edge, and causing her to fill almost immediately. As the wreck careened over towards the steamboat, by which the latter was raked her whole length, carrying away much of her light work, besides the injury caused to her stem by the violence of the collision. The sloop at the time was bound up the river with a fair wind. Of the four persons on board, two were thrown into the river by the collision, on the opposite side to that where the sloop was sinking. One of these saved himself by getting up into the wheel, while the other caught by one of the braces beneath the guard, which was fortunately opposite a window, and the attention of the passengers being attracted by his pounding on the glass, he was hauled into the cabin. His prompt exclamation in relation to the situation of his comrade was the means of saving him, as the wheel was just about to be put in motion. The other two men belonging to the sloop escaped in the small boat to the Jersey Shore, where they put up at a farm-house, and reached the city yesterday morning. The sloop belonged to South Trenton, and was laden with an assortment of dry goods for the merchants of that place.—Dol. News.

The Law of Newspapers.

1. Subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, are considered wishing to continue their subscriptions.

2. If the subscribers order the discontinuance of their papers, the publishers may continue to send them till all cash charges are paid.

3. If subscribers neglect or refuse to take their papers from the offices to which they are directed, they are heldt responsible until they have settled their bill, and order their paper discontinued.

4. If subscribers remove to other places without informing the publishers, and the paper is sent to the former direction, they are held responsible.

5. The Courts have decided that refusing to take a paper or periodical from the office, or removing and leaving it uncalled for, is "prima facie" evidence of intentional fraud.

Liabilities of those who take Periodicals.

Thes law declare that any person, to whom a periodical is sent, is responsible for payment, if he receives the paper, or makes use of it, even if he has never subscribed for it, or has ordered it to be stopped. His duty in such a case is not to take the paper from the office or persons with whom the paper is left, but to notify the publisher that he does not wish for it.

If papers are sent to a Post Office, Store, or any other place of deposite,, and are not taken by the person to whom they are sent, the Postmaster, Storekeeper, &c., are responsible for the payment, until he returns the paper, or informs the publisher that they are lying dead in the office.

GENERAL CONFERENCE
PROSPECTUS

Of a Daily and Weekly Pittsburgh Christian Advocate during the session.

We propose to issue, during the approaching session of the General Conference in this city, a "Daily Pittsburgh Christian Advocate," half the size of our present large Weekly, containing full, accurate and authentic reports of proceedings, speeches and documents, together with all other matters of general interest occurring during the time.

TERMS—For a single copy, 'one dollar.' Any person sending us five subscribers shall be entitled to a copy for his agency; and one sending ten subscribers shall have three additional copies at his disposal. Advance pay, in all cases.

It is supposed that the General Conference may continue in session six weeks—that being near the length of the last two sessions. Should it continue longer, the Daily will be furnished to the end of the session at the above price. If it adjourns sooner, the Weekly paper will be substituted to make up the deficit of the six weeks of the Daily—allowing one Weekly for two Dailies. Thus, if the General Conference adjourns in five weeks, subscribers to the Daily will receive three copies of the Weekly to compensate for the six Dailies wanting to complete the sixth week. The Delegates will be furnished a copy gratis.

Weekly Session Paper.—We will also send, to such as may prefer it, the Weekly "Pittsburgh Christian Advocate," for six weeks, during the session of the General Conference, and until the whole of the proceedings are published. Terms—thirty three cents for one copy—four copies for 'one dollar.'

It is desirable to have the names as soon as possible, that we may know how large an edition of each will be needed. The money may be forwarded by the delegates where convenient. Great care will be combined with dispatch, in both printing and mailing, that subscribers may receive authentic intelligence at the earliest possible period.

All communications to be addressed to Rev. W. Hunter, Editor of the Pittsburgh Christian Advocate, Pittsburgh, Pa. Let those who send subscribers be careful to say they are for the session paper, and whether they are for the Daily or Weekly.

We respectfully request of our Methodist cotemporaries an early insertion of the above Prospectus—a favor which we will reciprocate if ever we have the opportunity.

Any paper inserting this Prospectus, and sending a copy containing it to this office, will be entitled to a Daily during the session of General Conference.

TO THE AFFLICTED,
READ AND BE WISE.

ALL those afflicted with that most distressing disease the PILES, can obtain certain relief, and in nineteen out of twenty cases a positive and permanent cure, by calling at S. B. Johnson's Agency, Putnam, and obtaining a box of Johnson's Vegitable Pile Ointment. This remedy has been in use in this vicinity for several years. And it is admitted by all who have tested its virtues to be superior to anything of the kind ever before offered to the public. A large number of certificates, from those cured by the use of the Vegitable Ointment, could be given in proof of its virtues, but it is deemed unnecessary.

THE OHIO CULTIVATOR FOR 1848

Published at Columbus, Ohio, on the 1st and 15th of each month, M. B. Bateham, Editor and Proprietor. Terms, $1 per year—four copies for $3—payment invariably in advance.

THE fourth volume of the Ohio Cultivator will commence Jan. 1st. 1848. This paper has now become so well known that it is scarcely necessary to speak of its character, or to allude to the commendations it has received from the Public Press and other sources. The editor is determined to spare no pains on his part to sustain the reputation of the work, and make each succeeding volume more useful than the preceding one. Our motto is "upward and onward;" and the object of the "Cultivator" is not only to collect and disseminate valuable facts and information relating to practical agriculture, but to inspire 'Farmers' with more just conceptions of the dignity of their profession; to induce them to cultivate the 'Mind' as well as the 'soil,' and thus elevate themselves to that position which it is their duty and privilege to occupy as 'American Agriculturists,' in this age of Progress and Improvement.

With its very large list of contributors, numbering over "two hundred," most of them practical farmers in the West, the pages of the "Cultivator" will contain the results of "Experience," as well as the teachings of "Science;" and being written or selected with special reference to the climate, productions and farming of Ohio, this paper will be found more valuable than any other for the farmers of this and the adjoining States. It will contain the latest intelligence of the "Markets" of this country and England; notices of the weather and the crops; descriptions (with engravings,) of improved implements, machines, &c.; instructions in gardening and fruit culture; rearing and management of domestic animals; construction of farm buildings, fences, &c.; and a "Ladies' Department" devoted to household affairs, useful receipts, &c.

The friends of Improvement in Ohio and adjoining States are requested to obtain and forward subscribers for the Ohio Cultivator. Remember that the price is only "seventy-five cents" each, when four or more names are sent by one person. All subscriptions must commence with the first number of the volume; a complete index is furnished at the end of the year. Specimen numbers and a prospectus will be forwarded to all who desire them.

☞ "Now is the time to subscribe!" Letters with remittances may be sent by mail at the risk and expense of the publisher. Address,

M. B. BATEHAM.

POET'S CORNER.

THE HOUR-GLASS.

BY JOHN QUINCY ADAMS.

[Hymn for the 200th anniversary of the old Church at Quincy, Mass.]

Alas! how swift the moments fly—
How flash the years along!
Scarce here, yet gone already by;
The burden of a song.
See Childhood, Youth and Manhood pass,
And Age, with furrowed brow!
Time was—Time shall be;—drain the glass!
But where in Time is Now?

Time is the measure but of change;
No present hour is found;
The past—the Future, fill the range
Of Time's unceasing round.
Where, then, is Now? in realms above,
With God's atoning Lamb—
In regions of eternal love,
Where sits enthroned I AM.

Then Pilgrim, let thy joys and tears
On Time no longer lean;
But henceforth all thy hopes and fears
From earth's affections wean.
To God let votive accents rise;
With truth—with Virtue live;
So all the bliss that Time denies,
Eternity shall give.

THE DAY BREAKING.

Yes, we trust the day is breaking;
Joyful times are near at hand;
God, the mighty God, is speaking
By his word in every land;
When he chooses,
Darkness flies at his command.

Let us hail the joyful season,
Let us hail the dawning ray;
When the Lord appears, there's reason
To expect a glorious day;
At his presence
Gloom and darkness flee away.

God of Jacob! high and glorious!
Let thy people see thy hand,
Let the gospel be victorious
Through the world, in every land;
And the idols
Perish, Lord! at thy command.

A DOMESTIC PICTURE.

BY OLIVER GOLDSMITH.

Blest be that spot, where cheerful guests retire
To pause from toil, and trim their evening fire,
Blest that abode, where want and pain repair,
And every stranger finds a ready chair;
Blest be those feasts with simple plenty crowned,
Where all the ruddy family around
Laugh at the jests or pranks that never fail,
Or sigh with pity at some mournful tale;
Or press the bashful stranger to his food,
And learn the luxury of doing good.

Narrative.

From Green's Arts and Miseries of Gambling.

An Affecting Account

Of a Young Man brought to Ruin and an Untimely Death by Gambling.

Upon Mr. T.'s return home, he paid Mr. C. a visit; and while talking of their trip to the city, Mr. T. remarked that he would like to visit the South the coming winter, (it now being October) and observed to the old gentleman, that if he and his son would go in company, he would be very much gratified, and as an additional inducement, suggested that they could each take ten or a dozen slaves with them. This Mr. C. protested against, declaring that he never would engage in that kind of traffic. "For my own part," said he, 'I have no wish to go; but would be glad to have my son make such a visit, but not to take any slaves with him." Mr. T. returned home, and was much pleased with the prospect of having the young man to accompany him to the South. He daily used his influence with young Mr. C. to overcome his objections to taking some slaves with him. For some time, however, he persisted in refusing to do it, contending that it was wicked and cruel to barter in human flesh. But it was not long before Mr. T. succeeded in overruling his feelings of repugnance, by appealing to the Constitution of the United States, and certainly said he, if it was not right, it would receive no kind of sanction from that quarter. He also urged that he had made a great deal of money by this traffic, and that the opening, at that time, was far more flattering than it ever had been before. Unhappily for Mr. C., these considerations had much influence with him; he began to think the business was not of so odious a character as his father supposed it to be. He accordingly told Mr. T. that he would reflect upon his proposal, and give him an answer as soon as possible. In addition to the arguments used by Mr. T., it occurred to him that it would be an easy way to make the money he then owed Mr. T., he having assured him that he would be able to make not less than two hundred dollars on each one. On the following evening he waited on Mr. T., and told him that he had come to the conclusion to join him in the purchase of some twenty or thirty head, and try his luck in that way. Mr. T. told him that there was a large sale to take place on the 20th of December, and that he thought they had better make their purchases on a credit of six months. Mr. C. said that he would as soon pay the cash, as he would have some twenty thousand dollars about the 15th of that month. "No," said Mr. T., 'it would be much better for you to keep that money; for you may meet with an opportunity to speculate with it to great advantage: you know,' he continued, 'that I have plenty of money; still, sir, we can do far better to purchase them at six months' credit, and then we have the use of our money: it is hard to tell in what situation we may catch some of those traders.' Mr. C. replied that he had still another serious objection to offer, and that was, that he was unwilling that his parents should know that he had ever engaged in any such thing, as they were both very much opposed to it. 'Oh,' said Mr. T., I can easily arrange all that; I can make the purchase, and all the slaves can be in my name, and you can let on as if you were merely going with me for company.' This Mr. C. consented to, and returning home, he told his parents, that, with their approbation, he believed he would go to the South on a visit, as Mr. T. was going, and he would be of great service to him in giving him information in regard to the various objects of interest that they might meet with. The old people felt a great anxiety for their son, and were reluctant that he should be separated from them even during the short space of such a visit. They nevertheless acceded to his wishes, and the old gentleman took this occasion to give him some affectionate and wholesome advice in regard to his filial duties, and concluded by telling him that he had now arrived at the age of manhood, and that all the property his father possessed had been left to him by the will of his grandfather, together with twenty-one or twenty-two thousand dollars in cash; a certificate of deposit for which he would now put into his hands, and he might then become his own guardian. He then told him that the farm he lived on was likewise his, & that all his parents had to depend on in their old age for their support was the kindness of their son.

This appeared to have great influence upon the mind of the young man, and for the moment, he thought that he would abandon the idea of going to the South with Mr. T.; that he had plenty to live on without engaging in any kind of speculation, and that he would act a more consistent and dutiful part by staying at home and taking care of his parents in their old days. Soon after this he visited Mr. T. and told him that his father had been giving him a long talk in regard to his anticipated journey, among other things, and that he had nearly given up the notion of going; 'And father tells me,' he added, 'that there is a great deal of deception among mankind.' 'Oh yes,' said Mr. T., 'and you know what your father used to say to you in relation to horse-racing and the theatre, and yet you found them places of innocent amusement; and furthermore, Mr. C., if young people take their parents' advice in all such matters, they will be children as long as they live; and, besides, I will be with you, and you know that I will see that no person harms you. And then, in addition to the pleasure the trip will afford, you will, I have no doubt, make several thousand dollars, which will buy you a number of fine race-horses, and my word for it, you will find that your parents themselves will soon be convinced that your course has been a wise one; but don't let me persuade you to anything that may be against your feelings in the least.' Mr. C. finally concluded to take Mr. T.'s advice, and engaged to take an equal interest with him in purchasing the lot of slaves about to be sold.

The day having arrived when the sale was to take place, the negroes were sold, and Mr. T. bid off some fifty odd, which amounted to more than forty thousand dollars. Owing to the largeness of the sum, the owner required mortgages on real estate to secure him in the payment of it. Mr. T. accordingly executed a mortgage on his own plantation for the whole amount, and proposed to Mr. C. to give him a mortgage on his plantation for his half of the amount. 'And,' said he, 'no person will know but that the purchase was made by me, and for my exclusive benefit, and you will be entirely private in the transaction.' This the young man agreed to, thinking that by this means how nicely he would deceive his father, and, at the same time, how greatly he would be benefited by it.

Mr. T. had the mortgages drawn up, and bound the whole of Mr. C.'s possession, for twenty-odd thousand dollars: this included the two thousand dollars he had lost in the fall at the races, On reading the mortgage, young Mr. C. said that he did not wish the farm upon which his parents resided, amounting to some three hundred acres, to be included in the mortgage, as he intended that it should belong to them the balance of their days. But Mr. T. told him that it should all be so understood between them, and that what he then required was only a matter of form. 'But,' said Mr. C. "it is my way always to have every thing straight, and then there can be no hard feelings afterwards."

The mortgage was very binding, calling for twenty-odd thousand dollars, (loaned money, and the cost of some twenty negroes) all payable within the space of six months; otherwise the whole amount of property, and reservation, was to fall into the hands of the holder of the mortgage. When the young man looked at the last items, he remarked that they appeared very binding. To this the attorney replied, as Mr. T. had previously done, that it was a mere form, in which Mr. T. joined him. In short, as it appeared to Mr. C., they both talked with so much candor and fairness, that he concluded that surely every thing was just right, and he waived all objection, and proceeded to confirm the mortgage by putting his name to it.

Upon his return home, he kept the whole transaction a profound secret from the old people. Every thing being arranged, and the time having arrived for his departure on his southern trip, he took an affectionate farewell of his parents, and, as he supposed, but for a short time. The negroes all having been shipped, he, in company with Mr. T. and Miss Amelia embarked on a steamer for New Orleans. Mr. C. was highly delighted at meeting with so many fine ladies and gentlemen, some of whom he soon found were very expert at his favorite game of whist, and having been instructed by Miss Amelia in the games of poker, brag, and boston, he promised himself that he would figure to much advantage among his newly-acquired acquaintance. In the course of the voyage, Mr. T. frequently played, and would sometimes bet; this he said was only for amusement. Miss Amelia and other ladies and gentlemen would also frequently play for money, but, professedly for amusement only. Mr. C. often had invitations to join them, but Mr. T. would not let him, telling him that he could not play well enough to play for money. Mr. C., however, was almost constantly engaged in some game, and began to think himself sufficiently skilled in several to venture to bet. He noticed that Mr. T. came off winner almost every day, and he considered himself as good a player as he was; indeed Miss A. told him that he was a better player than her uncle.

On their passage down the Ohio, the boat landed at a small place near the mouth of the Kanhawa river for a passenger.—This passenger was quite a starchy, gentlemanly-looking man, wearing a large diamond pin, diamond ring, and his apparel in all other respects corresponding. As soon as Mr. T. met him, he gave him a hearty shake of the hand, and said, 'Doctor, I am very happy to see you; which way are you travelling?' 'I have just started for the south,' said the Doctor, 'to spend the winter.' Mr. T. expressed himself as being very happy that they had chanced to get on the same boat. This all happened in the hearing of Mr. C., but they did not seem as if they noticed him. At length Mr. T. turned his head and gave him an introduction to the gentlemen by the name of Doctor S.; observing that he was just starting on a visit to the south also, and that he and his father were intimate acquaintances and friends of his. On the Doctor's turning away to look after his servant and baggage, Mr. C. asked Mr. T. if he understood him to say that the Doctor visited the south to practice his profession. 'Oh no,' said Mr. T., 'he is a gentleman of great wealth, being worth some five hundred thousand dollars, and all in cash, sir, and is one of those gentlemen who do not stand on their money the least; the very jewelry he has on is probably worth not less than two thousand dollars; and why need he care? for his income is perhaps as much as that in a single month, and he tells me that he is determined to live out the interest of his capital; and, sir, he thinks nothing of sitting down at a card party and losing five hundred dollars at once, and besides, he never allows any person to be at any expense when he is about.' 'I suppose he is a very good player,' said Mr. C. 'Oh, he is about such a player as you or I; he plays brag, poker, twenty-one, and whist, very much as we do; the game, however, that he is most partial to, is the game of faro.'—'That,' said the young man, 'is a strange game to me.' 'Yes,' said Mr. T., 'it is only played by rich men, and, therefore, it is not common. The man that plays this game, has to go to great expense; he has to purchase, sir, a fine silver box, worth, perhaps, one hundred dollars; and then he has to supply himself with a number of ivory pieces, turned round like a dollar; some of them colored red, with various figures on them, and some of them white, without any coloring, except, perhaps, around the edge: and these checks, as they are called, will cost probably, two hundred dollars. And then the case that holds them is usually worth some fifty dollars; and there are very few, sir, who will pay such a sum merely for amusement, and when you come to understand it, I think you will like it so much better than any other game, I should not wonder if you should purchase a set of faro implements for your own amusement.'—'Indeed,' said Mr. C., 'from your account I have a great curiosity to learn to play this game.' Mr. T. replied that the Doctor would no doubt take pleasure in giving him a knowledge of it.

Profane Swearing.

MESSRS. EDITORS: I suppose very few, if any, profane swearers read your paper; but for the encouragement of others that do, and to bear testimony to the efficacy of the word of God, is the object in giving publicity to the following incident:

About a year ago, I stopped for the night at a hotel, in the village of————, and making some inquiries of the landlord, who seemed a pleasant, accommodating man of about fifty years I was astonished to hear mingled with every answer, some impious profanity; and often with a smile upon his countenance, would qualify his assertion with an oath, not unfrequently calling upon his Maker to damn his soul if it was not so! Regardless of the presence of his wife or children, like an active volcano, he continually vomited forth from the unfashioned caverns of a depraved heart, a fiery storm of curses and imprecations upon himself and others. It shocked me to see a man whose gray hairs should have commanded reverence, and whose physical appearence gave indications not to be mistaken, that the Destroyer had marked him for an early victim, polluting by impious profanity, the very atmosphere around him.

When I settled my bill the next morning, I informed him that I should never stop with him again. He seemed much surprised, and requested me to give him the reason. I did. He said, with a smile,—'I know that I swear, but I do not mean any harm. I have tried to break myself of it, but I cannot. I have got in such a habit, that I do not even think of it when I do swear.' I remarked to him that when a man becomes so steeped in wickedness, that he can blaspheme the name of the great God, without having one compunction of conscience, it is time that man became alarmed; for he has every reason to fear that God has said to the conscience of that man, "LET HIM ALONE." There was a Bible upon the desk; I opened it, and requested him to read the solemn injunctions of that blessed volume, and left him with the Bible in his hand.

The next time I visited————, I stopped at another hotel, the proprietor of which was a God-fearing man. He informed me that the man with whom I stopped the last time I was there, was now a praying man. I went to see him, and as I entered the house, he reached out his hand and said, 'I do not swear now.'—I cannot describe my feelings at that interview.

I did not stop with him the next time I visited————, which was shortly after, for I found the Master had need of him, and had called him home. He was dead!

VIATOR.

Too True.

Some people's religion consists in applying a very correct standard to other people's practice. Does the pastor call on them for a few moment's conversation, reproof, exhortation or advice?—They scarcely allow him the opportunity of a word, so valuable are they in lamenting the state of the church and in giving their views of the causes and remedy of the declension, all tending to the point that deacon A. or Brother B. or Esq. C. are deficient in some christian duty.—Do they attend the prayer meeting? Even in their prayers they cannot refrain from accusing some of their brethren before God as grossly delinquent, and as mainly responsible for the withholding of the Holy Spirit from them. Do they undertake to give a word of exhortation? No body can mistake the bearing of their remarks as pointed, with labored appropriateness; to designate one and another of their neighbors who have not been so fortunate as to please them in some of the intercourse of life.

Some christians are peculiarly positive that the church cannot be revived until it is purified of the imperfections on which they dilate. The fact usually proves that they are themselves the greatest hindrances in the way of the blessing & that it sometimes comes in return of prayers and labors in which they have borne little or no part. —N. Y. Recorder.

True Independence.

Soon after his establishment in Philadelphia, Franklin was offered a piece for publication in his newspaper. Being very busy, he begged the gentlemen would leave it for consideration. The next day the author called and asked his opinion of it. "Why, sir," replied Franklin, "I am sorry to say that I think it highly scurrilous and defamatory. But being at a loss on account of my poverty whether to reject it or not, I thought I would put it to this issue—at night, when my work was done, I bought a two-penny loaf, on which with a mug of water, I supped heartily, and then wrapping myself in my great coat, slept very soundly on the floor till morning; when another loaf and mug of water afforded me a pleasant breakfast. Now, sir, since I can live very comfortably in this manner, why should I prostitute my press to personal hatred or party passion, for a more luxurious living?" One cannot read this anecdote of this American sage without thinking of Socrates' reply to King Archelaus, who had pressed him to give up preaching in the dirty streets of Athens, & come and live with him in his splendid courts—"Meal, please your majesty, is a half-penny a peck at Athens, and water I can get for nothing."

A Sailor's Escape from an Alligator.

A sailor named Campbell, on board a Guineaman on the Congo, bathed in that river while in a state of intoxication. When he had swimmed some distance from the ship, some of the sailors on board discovered an alligator making towards him. His escape appeared impossible: but two shots were fired at the frightful monster, which however did not take effect. The report of the piece, and the noise on board the vessel, intimated to Campbell his perilous condition; and turning, he saw his enemy advancing with open jaws, which impelled him with his utmost strength and skill towards the shore. On approaching some canes and shrubs which covered the bank, closely pursued by the alligator, a ferocious tiger sprang towards him, at the instant the jaws of his first enemy were extended to receive him.—At this awful moment Campbell was preserved; for the too eager tiger, by overleaping him, encountered the gripe of the amphibious monster. A conflict ensued between them, and the water was colored with the blood of the tiger, whose efforts to tear the scaly covering of the alligator were unavailing: while the latter had also the advantage of keeping his adversary under water, by which the victory was soon obtained, and the tiger fell the victim. They both sank to the bottom, and the alligator was no more seen. Campbell was recovered, and instantly conveyed on board. His danger had made him sober, and the moment he leaped on deck, he fell on his knees, and returned thanks to Providence for his remarkable preservation; and what is most worthy of observation, "from that moment to the time I am writing," says the narrator, "he has never been seen the least intoxicated, nor has he been heard to utter a single oath. If there ever was a reformed being in the universe, Campbell is the man."

A CHALLENGE.—When Judge Thatcher was member of Congress from Massachusetts, he was challenged to fight a duel by Mr. Blount, member from North Carolina, for words spoken in debate. The Judge, on reading the message from Blount, after adjusting his wig and revolutionary hat, said to the bearer—"Give my respectful compliments to your master, and tell him he cannot have a definite answer to-day. Let him be patient a short time, till I can write to Portland and receive an answer. I always consult my wife on matters of importance. well knowing that she is a better judge of family affairs than myself. If she consents to take the choice of becoming a widow, or having her husband hanged for murder, I certainly will fight Blount. Tell him not to be in a hurry; it will not take more than three weeks to receive her selection."

CLERGYMEN.—One of exchanges—a semi-infidel print—asks, Did you ever know a clergyman in a city that did not ask in the way of salary all he could possibly get for his services?

To this, I reply—I do. I know twenty or thirty clergymen in this city alone, who receive from five hundred to two thousand dollars each as salaries. There is not one of these whose congregation would not raise his salary rather than part with him. Nor is there one of the number who could not make four times the amount of his salary by abandoning the pulpit for the bar, and pleading the law in place of pleading the gospel.

There is hardly a clegyman in this city who does not richly earn every dollar he receives, or whose congregation grudges him any part of his support.—Cist's Adv.

HINT TO BIBLE THUMPERS.—The devout Methodist Preacher, Rev. Daniel Isaac, who was celebrated in England for his mental vigor, his eloquence and his eccentricity, on finding that his Chapel Bible was getting dilapidated, and sinking beneath the vigorous blows often inflicted upon it by his brethren in the ministry when desirous of making a strong point, wrote on one of the blank leaves, the following brief address, which may not be without use, even on this side of the Atlantic:

"To all Bible Thumpers.—Gentlemen:—You are certainly required 'rightly to divide the word of truth;' but I must beg leave to remind you, that, to thump me to pieces, is not to divide me 'rightly.' How can you persuade others to regard me with reverence, when they see you treat me with such shocking abuse?"

John Flavel preached a sermon on the text, "If any man love not the Lord Jesus Christ, let him be anathema maranatha." When he was about to pronounce the apostolic benediction, he paused, and asked how he could do it over an assembly where were possibly many persons under the curse denounced in the text. The effect was very powerful. One conversion took place on the spot. A lad was present, fifteen years old, who lived to the advanced age of one hundred and sixteen. He was converted when one hundred years old, by means of his vivid recollection of Flavel's sermon, and the incident above named.

☞It is stated upon good authority, that the man who cut the first tree in the wilds of Ohio, is still alive. His name is Daniel Cushwell. He resides on a small farm in Oneida county, New York, and is 86 years of age.

"NEWS."—The word news is not, as many imagine, derived from the adjective new. In former times, between the years 1595 and 1730, it was a prevalent practice to put over the periodical publications of the day, the initial letters of the cardinal points of the compass, thus:

N

importing that these papers contained intelligence from the four quarters of the globe, and from this practice is derived the term of newspapers.

THE AMERICAN PULPIT,

PUBLISHED MONTHLY AT WORCESTER, MASS.,

BY SAMUEL CHISM.

This publication is sent forth, with the specific object of disseminating evangelical truth. Its design is eminently 'practical,' not speculative. It will present those vital truths of christianity which are calculated to stimulate the church to her appropriate work in the evangelization of the world; and will urge the unconverted to an immediate surrender of their hearts to God, and the entire consecration of themselves to his service. It is not devoted to the interests of any particlar denomination, but aims at the present and eternal happiness of the whole human family.

Each monthly issue will contain 32 pages of matter, octavo, in new, bold, and clear type, cast expressly for this use. Two sermons will appear in each number; and the remaining pages will be filled with Skeletons of Sermons, Ministerial and Religious Miscellany, Criticisms, Biographical Sketches, etc.

The list of Contributors to the American Pulpit will embrace several of the ablest clergymen of the evangelical denominations in the United States.

☞ If the sick wish a diseased stomach restored and impure blood cleansed without endangering the constitution, go to J. Deen, Grocer and Shoemaker, Putnam, and obtain a box of Dr. Le Roy's Sarsaparilla and Wild Cherry Pills which is the best family medicine now in use. So says Mr. O'Neil the Agent.

DR. LE ROY'S

Wild Cherry, and Sarsaparilla PILLS.

DR. LE ROY has most happily succeeded in combining Wild Cherry and Sarsaparilla with other vegetable ingredients, so as to produce a medicine at once tonic, and purgative, the only perfect discovery of the kind ever made. Their great peculiar excellence, and that which distinguishes them from all other purgatives is, that their operation is followed by no re-action. Their unrivalled purifying and purgative properties, for which they are intended to the essence of Sarsaparilla, and other ingredients, being controlled by their highly tonic virtues, derived from the extract of Wild Cherry, they do not strain the digestive organs into action, as is the mode of operation with other cathartics, but on the contrary strengthen them into action. Thus all other purgative medicines produce more or less subsequent costiveness, and sluggishness of the gastric juice, while Dr. Le Roy's Pills leave all the machinery of the system full of life and activity, and the bowels open and natural. "Hence," writes Dr. Cheeseman, "they are the only active purgative which I can recommend with confidence, and without alarm; for they remove nothing but what ought to be removed—neither rack, nor strain—occasion no apathy or debilitation—and leave the bowels free, open, and vigorous." But the great virtue of Dr. Le Roy's Pills—the virtue which has spread their fame over the two hemispheres with a rapidity almost miraculous—lies in their purification of the blood. Here they not only stand altogether unrivalled, but fill up the measure of desire. They at once arrest the formation of bad blood, by removing all impurities from the chyle, of which the blood is formed; and moreover keep it clean, by toning and strengthning the digestive organs, so as to be able to exclude from it all matter of an innutricious nature; and then they purify the blood already in circulation; and never cease operation until it is entirely free from every noxious particle, & full of health, life, and vigor. For sale at J. Deen's.

THE OHIO CULTIVATOR FOR 1848

Published at Columbus, Ohio, on the 1st and 15th of each month, M. B. Bateham, Editor and Proprietor. Terms, $1 per year—four copies for $3—payment invariably in advance.

THE fourth volume of the Ohio Cultivator will commence Jan. 1st, 1848. This paper has now become so well known that it is scarcely necessary to speak of its character, or to allude to the commendations it has received from the Public Press and other sources. The editor is determined to spare no pains on his part to sustain the reputation of the work, and make each succeeding volume more useful than the preceding one. Our motto is "upward and onward;" and the object of the "Cultivator" is not only to collect and disseminate valuable facts and information relating to practical agriculture, but to inspire 'Farmers' with more just conceptions of the dignity of their profession; to induce them to cultivate the 'Mind' as well as the 'soil,' and thus elevate themselves to that position which it is their duty and privilege to occupy as 'American Agriculturists," in this age of Progress and Improvement.

With its very large list of contributors, numbering over "two hundred," most of them practical farmers in the West, the pages of the "Cultivator" will contain the results of "Experience," as well as the teachings of "Science;" and being written or selected with special reference to the climate, productions and farming of Ohio, this paper will be found more valuable than any other for the farmers of this and the adjoining States. It will contain the latest intelligence of the "Markets" of this country and England; notices of the weather and the crops; descriptions (with engravings,) of improved implements, machines, &c.; instructions in gardening and fruit culture; rearing and management of domestic animals; construction of farm buildings, fences, &c.; and a "Ladies' Department" devoted to household affairs, useful receipts, &c.

The friends of improvement in Ohio and adjoining States are requested to obtain and forward subscribers for the Ohio Cultivator. Remember that the price is only "seventy-five cents" each, when four or more names are sent by one person. All subscriptions must commence with the first number of the volume; a complete index is furnished at the end of the year. Specimen numbers and a prospectus will be forwarded to all who desire them.

☞ "Now is the time to subscribe!" Letters with remittances may be sent by mail at the risk and expense of the publisher. Address,

M. B. BATEHAM.

Established for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge:

A Monthly Miscellany of moral and instructive information, embellished with numerous ENGRAVINGS of the various subjects treated of in the course of the year. Published monthly, in parts of 48 large octavo pages each.

PROSPECTUS FOR THE FIFTH VOLUME.

For four years the Pictorial Family Magazine has been before the American public, and it is pecuniary gratifying to the Publisher to know, that his efforts to do good through its medium, have met with the universal approbation of the public & the public prints, wherever it has found its way. It is now too firmly established upon the broad foundation of public confidence, to require a great flourish of trumpets to proclaim its continued existence, or the tricks of 'puffery' to allure the people to its support.

To those who are acquainted with the Magazine, it is unnecessary to speak of its design & merits; to those who are not, we will make a brief statement of both. The original design of this work was a noble one, and worthy of all praise. It was intended as a vehicle for conveying solid information to that class of citizens whose circumstances denied them the privilege of drinking abundantly

LIFE.

Life is onward: use it
With a forward aim;
Toil is heavenly,—choose it,
And its warfare claim.
Look not to another
To perform your will;
Let not your own brother
Keep your warm hand still.

Life is onward: never
Look upon the past;
It would hold you ever
In its clutches fast.
Now is your dominion,
Weave it as you please;
Bind not the souls's pinion
To a bed of ease.

Life is onward: try it,
Ere the day is lost;
It hath virtue,--buy it
At whatever cost.
If the world should offer
Every precious gem,
Look not at the coffer,
Change it not for them.

Life is onward: heed it
In each varied dress;
Your own act can speed it
On to happiness.
His bright pinion o'er you
Time waves not in vain,
If Hope chant before you
Her prophetic strain.

Life is onward: prize it
In sunshine and in storm;
Oh! do not despise it
In its humblest form.
Hope and Joy together,
Standing at the goal
Thro' Life's darkest weather,
Beckon on the soul.

Materials for Thought.

[Furnished by our Philadelphia Correspondent.]

To every inactive man the query is put, "Why stand you here all the day idle?" and no one honestly can say, "Because no man hath hired us," for the cause of truth is ever urging each man to enlist in its service, and continually proclaims—Go, work in my vineyard. No matter what opinion a man holds, if he sincerely regards them as right and good, it is his imperative duty to bring them out, and to do battle with them, in such a way and manner as his sphere permits. If his ideas are wrong, he may be set right; if they are correct, he may be the means of upsetting others' errors anyhow. Truth will be the gainer by the conflict, and that ought to be sufficient inducement to every right-minded man.

There are no bounds to be set to thy thoughts, Oh my soul, since whatsoever thy God either is, or hath done, comes within thy prospect. There, besides the great work of his administration of this universal world, whereof the preservation and government is no less wonderful than the frame; there thou shalt see the marvellous subordination of creatures, some made to rule, others to obey; the powerful influence of the celestial bodies upon the inferior; the constant transmutation of elements, forsaking their own places and natures, to serve the whole; forms dying, matter perpetual; all things maintained by a friendly discord of humours, out of which they are raised; the circular revolutions of fashions, occurrences, events; the different and opposite dispositions overruled in such a temper, that yet government is continued in the hands of a few, society and commerce with all. In short, all creatures, while they do naturally or voluntarily act their own part, doing unawares the will of their Creator.—Bishop Hall.

Kind Words.—Kind words never blister the tongue or lips. And we have never heard of any mental trouble arising from this quarter. Tho' they do not cost much, yet they accomplish much.

1. They help one's own good-nature and good-will. Soft words soften our own soul. Angry words are fuel to the flame of wrath, and make it blaze more fiercely.

2. Kind words make other people more good natured. Cold words freeze people; and hot words scorch them; and bitter words make them bitter; and wrathful words make them wrathful. There is such a rush of all other kinds in our days, that it seems desirable to give kind words a chance among them. There are vain words, and idle words, and hasty words, and spiteful words, and silly words, and empty words, and profane words, and boisterous words, and warlike words. Kind words also produce their own image on men's souls. And a beautiful image it is! They smooth, and quiet and comfort the hearer. They shame him out of his sour, morose, unkind feelings. We have not yet begun to use kind words in such abundance as they ought to be used.—Pascal.

The Subjects of the Work of the Day of Pentecost.

Extract of a Sermon by Rev. T. Potter, from a volume of Sermons now in press.

A novel and curious picture must have been presented to the wondering gaze of the astonished spectators, on the of Pentecost, when these three thousand converts were grouped around the Christian speakers. What a medley of different and distant nations was collected in that mixed multitude! In the various hues and uncouth shapes of their dress, and in the contrast of the diversified shades and expressions of their countenances, what a motley group must they have appeared! Their different manners too, their several gestures, and the obliquity of their separate movements in giving outward expression to their new-born bliss, must have been truly picturesque, worthy of the pencillings of a painter! —The Christian preachers,—ere they closed their labors and their triumphs that "same day," —as they looked down from their elevated stands, saw clustered around them, the representatives of all the then known divisions of the globe,—the natives of the three great continents of the earth, Asia, Africa, and Europe. "Parthians, Medes, Mesopotamian Syrians, Persians and Arabians," from Central Asia, were there;—and from the Lesser Asia, there were, "the dwellers of Judea, of Cappadocia, of Pontus, of Phrygia, and of Pamphylia."—From Africa, were the Egyptians and Cyrenians. From Europe, came the citizens of Rome, the Islanders of Crete, and the expatriated Jews residing in the Roman Capital.—Who,—at this distance of time, and in these days of modern and modified refinement, —can realize, by any effort of imagination, a sight so singular, so grotesque, so full of curious contrasts, presenting such a miscellany of diverse costumes, colors, and characteristics,—as this company, composed of persons out of every nation under heaven, must have seemed to a looker on?—There was the wild "Parthian" rover, fierce of aspect, of independent carriage, his bosom bare, his mantle of fur hung dangling from off his shoulders, and in his hands grasping his arrows and his battle-axe. By his side was the sturdy "Mede," tall, strong, stern-looking, —accoutred with his antique helm, his rusty side arms, his sash, and his sword. The portly Persian, from the cities of "the Elamites," fair but effeminate in his visage, arrayed in his robes of silk, and tasselled turban, and sandals of embroidered velvet, luxuriously quaffing his hooka, —formed a striking offset to the meagre, downcast S yrian, in his cloak of woolsey, awkwardly leaning, with folded hands, upon his knotty staff of thorn. The bronzed Jew, in his fringed coat,—the sallow Egyptian, in his flouncing garments,—the ruddy Roman, in his flowing toga, —the pale faced Phrygian, in his cumbrous clothing,—contrasted strangely with the dark sweltering Lybian in his snow-white wrapper. The rough and robust Mariner from the Cretian Island, in his small red scull-cap and his strait-braced jacket. standing erect, with open countenance and careless air,—was the very antithesis of him from Arabia's sandy Deserts, who, with his towering spear and unstrung bow in hand, & on his back a well-filled quiver, was restlessly in motion, ever with a lurking suspicion, glancing his small keen eye on every hand.—Considering the contrarieties in garb, in person, and in national peculiarities to be found in this heterogeneous assemblage, it is easy to conceive, what opposite movements would be manifested, when they were all alike brought to experience "the power of God unto salvation!" You may conceive of the subdued "Parthian," carelessly dropping his arrows & his axe, & relaxing the asperity of his harsh features into a half formed smile, sobbing aloud his joy. His next companion, the Mede, hurling his helm to the ground, and, with a hasty hand, unloosing his hostile weapons from his girdle, and flinging them away,—you may suppose,—sunk at once to his knees, and there in silent rapture,—with tears gushing from eyes that never wept before, and complacency beaming in the countenance that till now only wore a savage frown.—luxuriating in "the souls' calm sunshine, and the heart-felt joy" that religion gives. Nor would it have been strange, if the proud Persian,—now brought down to lowliness of spirit, by grace Divine, and convinced of the folly of the pride of dress, and the vanity of the pedantry of pride,---should have been seen,---careless now about his caftan, his draperies and his damasks,—rolling himself, for very excess of joy, in the dust of the street. And the poor peasant, from the plains of Mesopotamia,—forgetting his fathers' house, and the pleasant borders of the deep flowing Euphrates, and the sunny banks of the rapid Tigris,—methinks, burthened and almost bewildered with his suprising, overwhelming delight, might have been beheld, rushing, and leaping, and reeling like a very inebriate. The deep-toned voice of the grace-freed Jew,—I imagine,—rose above all the noise of the bustle and murmuring of the crowd, in shouting his soul-delighted hallelujahs; while the enervated sons of Egypt would chime in, with their softer notes of passionate praise; and the ebon countenances of Africa's children would brighten well nigh to sun-beam lustre, as their lusty lungs roared forth the torrents of their teeming joy; and then clear and distinct,—the rich octave of the holy concert,—the full voice of the happy Roman might be heard, with clapping hands and swinging porte, shout his O triumphe! O triumphe! Glory! Glory!—Glory to God! Would not the open hearted seaman from the Grecian Isle, be seen, grasping every hand he could reach, and greeting every person he met with, in the exuberancy of his buoyant gladness?—and the Tent-dwellers of the Arabian Deserts,—I ween,—couched, at once, their lengthened lances, and casting off their accustomed reserve, caught in their unfolding arms, and embraced, without discrimination, the stranger & their fellows, in one irrepressible burst of new and generous emotion!—Such were the adventitious or intrinsic features of the subjects of this great work:—what was their moral state?

FUNERAL ORATION OF AN INDIAN CHIEF.

In the palmy days of Gov. Edwards, when he was Governor of Illinois, then one extensive district, and in what was called the first grade of government, he found it necessary to hold a treaty with several of the North-western tribes, west of the great Mississippi. This council was held on the west bank of the Mississippi, nearly opposite lower Alton, at a little place called Portage des Seux.

While the treaty was in progress, on the night of July 16th, 1811, a Sioux chief called Black Buffalo, fell sick and died, and the Governor had him buried with the honors of war. Pleased with the attention paid to their departed chief, the bereaved tribe learning that it was a custom among the whites, called upon Ongpatonga or Big Elk, to make a funeral oration. Gathering close around the grave, and seated on the grass, the savages waited the signal for their orator to begin. Ongpatonga sat with his legs across, as tailors are wont to sit, his hands over his forehead in silent and solemn mood. The roaring of the guns was now hushed, the fife and drum were still and the last shovel full of earth was cast upon the mortal remains of the chieftain warrior, when, with the quickness and agility of the deer Ongpatonga rose and began as follows:

"My red brothers you look sad, but I rejoice you are not women and children. You are men —you are warriors. The tears you shed on this occasion, are like the dew drops, though many, are silent and still. But I say weep no more. Do not grieve. Misfortunes will happen to the wisest and best of men. Death will come; and always comes out of season. It is the command of the Great Spirit, and all nations and people must obey.—What is past and cannot be prevented, should not be grieved for. Be not discouraged or displeased then, that in visiting your father here, (the Gov.,) you have lost your chief. A misfortune of this kind may never again befall you.—But this would have attended you perhaps at your own village. Five times have I visited this land, and never returned with sorrow or pain Misfortunes do not flourish particularly in our path. They grow everywhere. What a misfortune to me, that I could not have died this day instead of the chief that now lies before us. The trifling loss my nation would have sustained in my death would have been doubly paid for by the honors of my burial. They would have wiped off every thing like regret. Instead of being covered with a cloud of sorrow, my warriors would have felt the sunshine of joy in their hearts. To me it would have been a most glorious occurrence. Hereafter, when I die at home, instead of a noble grave and a grand procession, with a flag waving at my head, I shall be wrapped in a robe. (an old robe perhaps,) and hoisted on a slendor scaffold, to the whistling winds, soon to be blown down to the earth, my flesh to be devoured by the wolves, and my bones dragged over the plain by wild beasts. But I say, my brothers, do not grieve—wipe off all your tears —go home like men and warriors. A few more moons and we shall sleep with Black Buffalo. [Then turning to Governor Edwards, he said:] Chief of the soldiers! Your labors have not been in vain. Your favors shall not be forgotten. My nation shall know the respect paid over the dead. When I return home, I will echo the sound of your guns."

It is said of Gov. Edwards, that he wept like a child when he saw such grace of person and powers of mind displayed in a savage from the wilderness, born only to be wasted in desert air.

Agricultural.

Agricultural Address.

In ancient times, the sacred plow employ'd
The Kings, and awful fathers of mankind:
And some—with whom compared your insect tribes
Are but the beings of a summer's day—
Have held the scale of empire, ruled the storm
Of mighty war, then, with unwearied hand—
Disdaining little delicacies—seized
The plow, and greatly independent lived.
THOMPSON'S SEASONS.

To the Farmers of Muskingum County;

Fellow Citizens—It is known to some of you that the undersigned was requested, by resolution of a meeting of farmers, held at the Eagle Hotel, on the 21st of January past, to address you on the importance of forming and sustaining an Agricultural Society, for this county, which shall have for its objects the improvement of our "soils, tillage, crops, manures, implements, stock, articles of domestic industry, and such other articles, productions and improvements, as may be deemed proper." It is also known to some of you that an act was passed by the Legislature of Ohio, February 28th, 1846, "for the encouragement of Agriculture," which provides, in substance, that, where thirty or more persons, in any county of this State, shall organize themselves into a society for the improvement of Agriculture, within said county, and shall raise any sum between fifty and two hundred dollars, they shall be entitled to a draft on the county Treasurer for a like sum, &c. The society will, therefore, by the operation of this law, have a right to receive two hundred dollars, as above, if it will raise the amount from its members, which will place four hundred dollars at its disposal, to be awarded in premiums for the purpose of giving stimulus to Agriculture and Manufacturing improvements.

The law then, fellow-citizens, proceeds upon the principle of the fable of Hercules and the wagoner:—if we will "lay our own shoulder to the wheel"—if we will make an effort to help ourselves, he will, in that event, come to our assistance.

I need scarcely remind you, brother farmers, that your occupation is one of the most important, honorable and independent of all the professions in the whole circle of business life.—Agricultural wealth is the basis of all other wealth. In proportion to the prosperity of the farmer, so is the success of every other calling. It seems to be universally admitted that rural pursuits are the most conducive to happiness and virtue. Review the vicinities of all the cities & principal towns of the Union, and you will find them dotted over with the residences of business men, who have retired to the country to seek, in its rural scenes, and in the cultivation of the soil, that happiness and contentment which city life and the accumulation of wealth can never impart.

The statesman, lawyer, merchant, man of trade,
Pants for the refuge of some rural shade,
Where, all his long anxieties forgot
Amid the charms of a sequestered spot,—
Or recollected only to gild o'er,
And add a smile to what was sweet before,—
He may possess the joys he thinks he sees,
Lay his old age upon the lap of ease,
Improve the remnant of his wasted span.
And, having lived a trifler, die a man.
COWPER'S RETIREMENT.

Man, in his primeval state, was exempt from the toils of agriculture. The fertile and blooming scenes of Eden, furnished an abundant and spontaneous supply for all his temporal wants.—But upon his alienation and apostacy from his Creator, the earth was "cursed" for his "sake," (see Gen. ch. III.) and brought forth "thorns and thistles," and man was doomed to "earn his bread" by the "sweat of his brow." This, upon a slight view of the subject, might seem to impeach the Deity with harshness and unnecessary severity towards his unfortunate creature; but more liberal and enlightened reflections satisfy us that this act of the Almighty, in cursing the earth with barrenness, was an act of beneficence to our fallen race. It was simply an adaptation of the natural to the changed condition of the moral world. For man, in his present state, is everywhere far happier to earn his bread by labor, than he would be to live in idleness, and have it gratuitously conferred upon him. Here, then, we have ample and healthful exercise, both physical and mental, to redeem old Terra firma from the "curse" of sterility. Providence, for this purpose, has placed ample means at our command. And, on this subject, if any where, "the hand of the diligent maketh fat."

But the earth is not so barren under this original "curse" as we often make it by violating the laws which govern its fertility. Let any old farmer of this county look back to the "days of other years," when the virgin soil was received fresh from the hand of its Creator, and recollect with what ample returns it rewarded his labor under every variety of circumstance, and every diversity of season. Let him contrast the past with the present state of the crops, and then inquire as to the great failures of late. Wheat is the staple of this county, and perhaps the crop did not average, last year, more than five or six bushels to the acre. Why was it so? I admit that the character of the season may account to some extent for the deficiency, but this is by no means the main reason. The practice of perpetually taking from the soil without making suitable returns, is, no doubt, the principal cause. We had under our eye, last season, a ten acre field of wheat, in the centre of which was about one acre which, three or four years previously, had received an extra coat of stable manure.—The fine appearance of this spot could be seen at any time, the distance of forty or fifty rods, and at harvest yielded as much as some five acres of the rest of the field. Exhaust the soil by constant cropping, and wheat has but a weak and feeble growth, which requires the most favored season to mature it; and is thus rendered an easy victim to the winter frosts or the ravages of the fly. But give the ground, by the proper cultivation, plenty of the vegetable principle, and the growth is strong and vigorous, which enables it to sustain itself against all such casualties.

We have reached an important crisis in the history of our agricultural interests. The soils of our rolling grounds are being rapidly wasted away—our fields are becoming exhausted with over tillage. It is, therefore, very important at this juncture, that we endeavor to wield all the individual and combined skill that we can command, not only to save our lands from further deterioration, but to restore them to that principle of fertility which so amply rewarded the farmer in days gone by. What, I ask,—and I ask it with great confidence,—is so well calculated to secure these objects, as to form and sustain with spirit an Agricultural Association? Organizations are the order of the day. The experience of this age adopts them for almost every public purpose. The history of the practical world around us must satisfy any intelligent observer, that ten men acting in concert will effect more, on any subject whatever, than a hundred, or even a thousand, operating in their individual capacities.—Union is strength. Combined effort is powerful. Come, then, brother farmers, by the hundred—come up to the work in the spirit of enterprise! Your interest, your patriotism, your character as agriculturists all bid you come! I should be proud to see old Muskingum set an example upon this subject worthy of her character. In looking over the Reports of the State Board of Agriculture, the highest amount I see paid in one year, by a county society, is that of Hamilton, which collected from its members $204. Fellow citizens, it would be but a laudable ambition to excel in liberality, for so praiseworthy an object, one of the wealthiest counties in the State. This, I have little doubt, will be done. The Farmers' Club, of Union township, in the eastern part of this Co., raised, last year, fifty dollars, which is nearly a fourth part of the sum necessary to do the deed. Let the remainder of the county but come in the neighborhood of this, and a much larger sum will be raised in Muskingum, to promote the object of the society, than has yet been raised in any county of the State for similar purposes.

Man is a social being. His benevolent affections proclaim that he is formed for society.—The tendency of our nature is to congregate. And if no opportunity offers to assemble for valuable, the multitude will crowd together for vicious purposes. The show, the horse-race, the circus, &c., though of demoralizing tendency, if nothing else offers, will be made the occasion to gratify these instinctive propensities of our nature. How rational, then, those annual exhibitions of Agricultural societies, as contemplated by the law. The masses are invited to meet, not for purposes of questionable morality, but to review the rich productions of a bountiful Creator, which cannot fail to inspire the heart with gratitude towards the gracious Giver.

The husbandman and the mechanic will have an opportunity of extending the circle of their acquaintance, and to cultivate those social feelings in which it is such a luxury to indulge.—The Whig and the Democrat will meen on a subject in which they have a common interest, and, ere they are aware, will find themselves tied together by a ligament of friendship that the frothy and inflammatory declamation of political demagogues may not be able to sunder. The exhibition of stock, fruit, grain, and articles of domestic manufacture, will improve the judgment by comparison, while the whole occasion will furnish such a class of new ideas as will set the mind to work, and will tend to its improvement in all time to come. Beside, the spirit of emulation which must be inspired, cannot fail to lead to such discoveries and improvements as will be of great public utility. Where, then, I ask, in view of these facts, is the farmer who will be so parsimonious and apathetic as to withhold his dollars and his membership?

Horticulture is an important branch of Agriculture. The garden is an indispensable requisite of every farmer. And no part of his cultivated grounds is capable of furnishing so many luxuries. Upon this subject, through this whole district of country, there exists, at present, the most laudable enthusiasm. And there is no question connected with the cultivation of the soil upon which such rapid improvements are being made, for the last five or six years. Men of intelligence, enterprise and taste, are engaged in the matter, and the work must go ahead. I would therefore respectfully suggest to the consideration of the April meeting of our society, the propriety (if it shall be judged in accordance with the law) of appointing a separate committee, who shall be required to meet, during the progress of the summer months, once a week, or oftener, to examine the fruits of the garden, as they ripen, and to make such notes thereon as may be deemed of public utility, and report to the society at its annual meeting.

Articles of domestic manufacture, also, come within the range of the law, and of course under the society's fostering care. Such, we presume, as furniture, "household" cotton and wollen fabrics, wares of every kind, &c. Mechanics and manufacturers are, therefore, invited to co-operate with the society, as being interested in common with the farmer. There is one branch of home industry to which we wish specially to allude on this occasion that we do not remember ever to have seen publicly noticed—the manufacture of stone ware. There are now, principally in the townships of Hopewell, Newton and Springfield, some forty-five kilns, dedicated to the production of this article, few of which are beyond the distance of six miles from our residence: most of them have been quite recently erected, and they are at this time rapidly on the increase. This ware is made of a superior quality of clay, glazed with salt, at the rate of from two to three pecks to the thousand gallons, owing to the size and dimensions of the kiln. The clay abounds in every hill in this part of the county, but the stratum crops out about six or eight miles west of this, with the lower workable vein of coal, which it seems to accompany, lying a few feet above it. When the materials are at hand, the stone ware can be made cheaper than the common red ware, and is so much better for domestic purposes, that it must ultimately drive the latter out of use. These kilns would give regular labor, probably, to over two hundred hands, and at a rough estimate, when they all get into blast, would average annually something like twenty-five thousand gallons of ware, each, which would give the sum of one million one hundred and twenty-five thousand gallons. This, at forty dollars per thousand (the present price,) would make forty-five thousand dollars, as the annual products of the business. It is hauled off into the surrounding counties, but principally boated down the river, and supplies every town and city between this and New Orleans, and is probably now taken to Texas and Mexico.

The owners of these factories are mostly small farmers; men of industry and enterprize who resort to this business as a substitute for more land. They deserve well of the community, and are of especial advantage to the neighborhoods where they are located, as they buy up their rough provender, and take away their old wood, at from twelve to twenty-five cents per cord, which would otherwise rot in the forests, or have to be removed from the fields at considerable labor and expense. As this business is capable of being increased, to an indefinite extent, I would cheerfully recommend it to the favorable consideration of the society.—The greatest objection to this ware, is, its inability to stand the application of hot water. If this could be remedied it would greatly enhance the value of the article. If sufficient means were placed at the command of the society, it might be well to propose a considerable award to the person who could best remedy this difficulty.

In order that our means may be instrumental in diffusing as much light as possible on the subject of husbandry, I would commend the propriety of giving premiums to farmers, in Agricultural papers, or books rather than money. Or if paid in money, that the receiver be required to expend it in some improvement on his lands, or in the purchase of improved stock. To this I presume farmers generally would not object, because they are not the men who have only three ideas above the dollar. Most of them would far more highly appreciate the 'credit' of the premium, than the 'money' which it awards.

In conclusion, permit me to say, that your subscriber is a practical farmer, and an old inhabitant of Muskingum county, having settled in this neighborhood in March of 1806, then a boy of some fourteen years of age. He is acquainted with the former and present condition of our soils, and from the great depreciation at present, has an abiding conviction that a general effort should be made to save them from sterility. May he not be permitted to hope that there will be a numerous turn out of the farmers of Muskingum at the court house, in Zanesville, on the first Friday in April next, at 10 o'clock, so that our society may be fully and efficiently organized. All of which is respectfully submitted, by your brother farmer and fellow citizen.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Anecdote in Natural History.

The Rev. Cæsar Otway, in his recently published paper on "The Intellectuality of Domestic Animals," gives the following anecdote,—which is by far too good not to receive the benefit of a wider circulation:—At the flour-mills of Tubbero keena, near Clonmel, while in the possession of the late Mr. Newbold, there was a goose, which, by some accident, was left solitary, without mate or offspring, gander or goslings. Now it happened, as is common, that the miller's wife had set a number of duck eggs under a hen which in due time were incubated; and of course the ducklings, as soon as they came forth, ran with natural instinct to the water, and the hen was in a sad pucker—her maternity urging her to follow the brood, and her selfishness disposing her to keep on dry land. In the meanwhile, up sailed the goose, and with a noisy gabble, which certainly (being interpreted) meant, "Leave them to my care," she swam up and down with the ducklings; and when they were tired with their aquatic exursion, she consigned them to the care of the hen. The next morning down came again the ducklings to the pond, and there was the goose waiting for them, and there stood the hen in her great flustration. On this occasion, we are not all sure that the goose invited the hen—observing her maternal trouble,—but it is a fact that, she being near the shore, the hen jumped on her back, and there sat, the ducklings swimming and the goose and hen after them, up and down the pond. And this was not a solitary event: day after day the hen was seen on board the goose, attending the ducklings up & down, in perfect contentedness and good humor; numbers of people coming to witness the circumstance, which continued until the ducklings, coming to days of discretion required no longer the joint guardianship of the goose and hen.

Corn and Wheat Crops.

We can scarcely conceive the immense quantities of corn and wheat which are annually produced in the U. States.

The crops of the West for the year 1846 will be more than 700,000,000 bushels of corn, and 140,000,000 of wheat. In the State of Ohio alone, the quantity of corn raised is estimated at 70,000,000 bushels. The Cultivator says, "The Ross County Agricultural Society has taken some pains to ascertain, as near as possible, the amount of the principal productions raised on each farm in several townships of that county.—In the report recently made to the State Board of Agriculture, we find that in the township of Scioto, the aggregate of corn is 356,335 bushels from only sixty-six farms or estates. On one of these (Dr. Massie's,) 50,000 bushels were produced, and on another (Dr. Watt's,) 38,500 bushels! Another township, (Liberty,) in the same county, gives an aggregate of 93,704 bushels from seventy-five farms or estates. In both of these townships, the average per acre is not over about fifty busheis. The population of Scioto township in 1840, was 1,379; of Liberty 1,256. There are seventeen townships in that county, and many counties for the production of corn, in the central and southern vallies of Ohio.

In the thinly settled county of Fayette, where most of the counties are devoted to grazing, and not a river county, the Agricultural Society, after extensive inquiry, report an estimate of the corn crop for the present year at 900,000 bushels!"

Our minds are bewildered and lost in the calculation of the quantity of food that the vast and almost illimitable extent of our yet uncultivated country may produce.

Steamboat Travelling.—From the very able report of the St. Louis Committee to the Chicago Convention officers, we make the following table, showing the length of that part of the principal western rivers navigable by steamboats.

Mississippi from the Gulf to St. Anthony's Fall,	2,200	miles.
Missouri, from its mouth to the foot of the Rapids,	2,000	"
Red River, to head of navigation,	1,000	"
Ohio to Pittsburgh,	1,000	"
Arkansas, to mouth of the Neosho and Verdigris,	630	"
Tennessee to Chattanoogo,	485	"
Wabash to Lafayette,	300	"
Illinois to Ottawa,	250	"
Cumberland to Nashville,	200	"
Osage,	209	"
Total,	8,274	"

The late Yearly Meeting of Friends in New York has put forth a long and able manifesto, entitled "Considerations respecting the Lawfulness of War under the Gospel Dispensation, addressed to the Teachers and Professors of Christianity in the United States of America." It is a strong appeal on the general subject, without reference to the War with Mexico.

Invention for Coupling R. R. Cars.—A. G. Hecrote has patented a mode of connecting cars, by which they are easily coupled by one man, and in case of accident they uncouple themselves. It is said to be impossible for a car running off the track to drag others with it. The "coupling" is so constructed that, on the slightest deviation beyond the regular curve of the track, the connection between the erratic car and the others is instantly severed. This result is inevitable, and must take place without any intervention of the engineer; and, indeed, without his knowledge.

Whitewater Valley Canal, and Cincinnati Branch.—The Indiana papers along the line of this work, we observe, are now pretty well satisfied that the repairs will be again made, and some of them express the opinion that the canal will most probably be navigable the entire extent by or before the first day of August next. We also observe that the Cincinnati Whitewater Canal Company, has petitioned the City Council for an issue of $15,000 city bonds, for the repair of the branch to this city.

Punctuality.—It is said of Melancthon, that when he made an appointment, he expected not only the hour, but the minute to be fixed, that no time might be wasted in idleness or suspense; and of Washington, that when his secretary being repeatedly late in attendance, laid the blame on his watch, saying, "You must get another watch or I another secretary."
